MONTANA SHORT LINE.

When traveling every one should consider well the questions of economy, comfort, safety and speed, these questions being of the same importance in a journey of an hour as in one of several days' ride. An examination of the map will convince anyone that this is the most direct route to and from all the principal points in Central and Northern Minnesota,

ST. PAUL MINNEAPOLIS MANITOBA RAILWAY.

Dakota and Montana. Our equipment and time are excellent. Our rates are the lowest, but this fact is something which speaks for itself. Definite figures and maps can be obtained by applying to any Agent of the Company, or the General Passenger Agent.

The following are a few of the Principal Points reached via this Line:

ST. CLOUD, SAUK CENTRE, FERGUS FALLS, CROOKSTON, ST. VINCENT, HUTCHINSON, PAYNESVILLE, MORRIS, APPLETON AND BRECKENRIDGE, MINN.; WATERTOWN, ABERDEEN, ELLENDALE, WAHPETON, FARGO, GRAND FORKS, GRAFTON, DEVILS LAKE, BOTTINEAU AND BUFORD, DAKOTA; GLASGOW, DAWES (FT. BELKNAP), ASSINNIBOINE, FT. BENTON, GREAT FALLS, HELENA AND BUTTE, MONTANA; WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, AND ALL PACIFIC COAST POINTS.

Parties seeking farms or business locations will find unusual opportunities for both on this line in Northern Dakota and Montana, also in Minnesota where the Company has for sale at low prices and on favorable terms 2,600,000 acres of excellent farming, grazing and timber lands. Tariff Discussion.

At the request of a number of our readers we copy the following communication of Mr. E. D. Childs to the Chronicle:

Dear Sir:—I note with surprise in your issue of the 27th ult., your public invitation to open, through the columns of your paper, a 'discussion' upon the 'tariff question,' and can account for it only upon the supposition that said invitation was suggested by the short debate in the Republican Club a few weeks ago.

I confess to be one of the 'farmers who believe the present tariff works to their disadvantage,' and a few weeks ago when prominent members of the republican party were so enthusiastic over the 'Blaine interview on the tariff, in answer to President Cleveland's Message;' I was fearful lest the higher 'protection' doctrine which 'The American Protective Tariff League,' The National Wool Growers' Association' and 'The Wool Manufaturers Association' are so zealously laboring to force upon the country, should prevail in the councils of our party, and was ready to utter my protest against this threatened evil, when in the company of my friends; but, thanks to the leadership of our own Nelson, backed by the endorsement of such men as C. A. Pillsbury and others, we are no longer in danger that these higher protective dogmas will find lodgment in our state.

The speech of Hon. Knute Nelson in the house of representatives March 29th is worthy the perusal and consideration of every candid voter, and especially would I call attention to his distinction between the theory of free trade and that of tariff reform. It has become very fashionable of late for the advocates of high protection to cry free trade against every voice that is raised in favor of an honest revision of the tariff, and this, in spite of the fact that the national platform of the republican party distinctly pledges the party to such revision. That the very moderate amount of protection offered by our tariff laws at any time previous to the great war measures of July 14th 1862, and of July 16th 1861, were of great value to our infant industries in these early days of the Republic, I do not hesitate to assert.

That it would be wise and prudent to continue the same system of moderate protection to many of our weaker industries, and to the extent of raising sufficient revenue, in connection with our present internal tax upon intoxicants and tobaco, to secure sufficient revenue for the requirements of the government and a maintainance of a moderate surplus in the treasury, I firmly believe. In other words my theory is, a tariff for revenue, based upon moderate protection, the schedule and classification to be greatly modified and simplified.' The two extremes are: On the one hand a paternal government which seeks to enrich all by taxing all, for the benefit of a comparatively small class of manufacturers. On the other, free trade, which fixes its tariff on the basis of revenue only, or raises the money for support of the government by a direct tax upon the whole people. Between these lies the golden mean.

To the unthinking the difference between a protective tariff for the sake of protection, and a tariff for revenue based upon the protective theory may not appear great, but in reality there is as wide a difference as in the public opinion between the North and South in ante-bellum days. To illustrate the workings of these two systems; in 1867 congress, in revising the tariff of '64 placed, in addition to other duties upon the same articles, an advalorem duty of 10 per cent upon woolen goods of a value of eighty cents a pound or less. This particular 10 per cent. being demanded by the manufacturers to compensate them for the internal revenue tax which was then imposed, and was in addition to the 25 per cent. of advalorem duty to compensate them for the competition of the pauper labor of Europe; making the advalorem duty upon this class of goods 35 per cent. (this was in addition to a 50 per cent. specific duty on the same article.) Within two years from the time this tax was imposed the whole system of taxes upon revenues was repealed, and the excuse for this tax swept away; but this duty is still retained, and from 45 to 60 millions of people have been paying this tax during the 20 years which have intervened, and the Wool Manufacturers Association not only demands its retention, but clamors for yet higher duties. The tariff reformers would not only remove this burden, but would have but one tariff—either specific, or advalorem—upon woolen goods, and would greatly simplify the classification upon which the 'woolen' duties are imposed,

Again, we paid last year upon the article of sugar, duties to an amount exceeding fifty millions of dollars (50, 265,538), for the encouragement of home producers, while after more than twenty years of this sort of protection, the entire production of sugars in the whole United States is less than ten million dollars, and yet we see the high protectionists in congress uniting with the members from Louisiana to defeat any revision of the tariff which shall reduce this duty on imported sugar by 30 per cent., or in other words, only cause the American people to pay thirty-five millions of dollars to induce the production of ten millions worth. And at the same time we see the eastern press declaring that our member in the house from this district is about to desert the party which honored him, and go over to the democratic party because he seeks to relieve his constituents of these burdens.

Again, half a century ago or more, when the commerce of the world was carried on in wooden bottoms, it was sought to protect the ship building interests of the New England states by the passage of very stringent protective duties and restrictions upon imported vessels; since then, and within the last quarter of a century, the art of ship building has been completely revolutionized, and now, practically, all the business is done in steel and iron vessel, but these same laws stand upon our statute books and as a direct result, while the commerce of the U. S. has rapidly increased each year, yet the proportion of our imports and exports carried in American bottoms has rapidly decreased, being in 1855 75.2 per cent. and in 1881, 16.2 per cent., which means a direct loss annually of over one hundred millions of dollars to our people; nor is this decadence the result of the war, as the protectionists would make you believe, it having commenced in 1857 and continued year by year from that time until this; but is the direct result of unwise protective laws which have outlived their era of usefulness and should have been long since repealed.

Nor are these facts which I have mentioned as illustrations, isolated cases, but the schedule is filled with such irregularities, the result of a tariff hastily laid upon every item that enters into the wants of a civilized people, which could be made to yield a revenue to replete the treasury in an hour of national peril—a tariff which faulty as it was, as passed, was a loyal and patriotic measure at the time, and one worthy the highest praise of every patriotic citizen; but in the quarter of a century which has elapsed since the close of the war, no congress has convened which was actuated by sufficient patriotism to revise this hastily considered act in the interest of the whole people, but as pressure has been brought to bear upon them for such revision they have allowed themselves to be influenced by this and that manufacturer of the various articles protected, until it has become a patch work of unjust discrimination which bears heavily upon the agricultural and laboring classes, and helps a few privileged ones to rapidly amass colossal fortunes. It is surprising how easily the unthinking majority of the people are hoodwinked by specious arguments which are neither logical in their bearing upon the subject, nor correct in the conclusions drawn from the premises. The following from a paper by Giles B. Stebbins, of Detroit, Mich., in which he seeks to show that high protection increases the price paid for labor:

"Protectionists assume nothing as to farm wages, but they prove by facts which cannot be refuted, that such wages are highest where the protected industries are largest, and lowest where they are least. By statistics from the department of agriculture at Washington, it appears that in 1883 the average farm wages in Ohio were $24.45 per month, and in Kentucky, with fewer manufactures and only the river between, but $18.20 per month. In the manufacturing States of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, amid great protected industries, the average was $25.77. Illinois, divided into three sections, gave an average in the north of $27.52; in the middle, $24.65, and in the south, $19.87. Where manufactures were largest and most protected there the best farm wages were paid and the largest home market and most valuable farms were found. In the eastern states, with many manufactures, the average farm wages were $26.61 a month; in the western states, with fewer manufactures, $15.30."

The evident inference he wishes to be drawn from this is that the farm laborer in Ohio gets $6.25 more per month on an average, or $75 more per year, than his brother just across the Ohio river in Kentucky, engaged in the same occupation, because of the "protection which is given the manufacturers in Ohio," coupled with the fact that there are more of these factories in that state than in Kentucky. If it was a fact that this difference in wages was caused and maintained by high protection then it would be an equally good argument against protection in the mouth of the Kentucky laborer, who is compelled to work for about 25 per cent. less wages than his brother in Ohio, simply because the community in which his lot is cast is not so favorably located for the business of manufacturing.

"Leib in his "The Protective Tariff," says Mr. Arnott, of Philadelphia, who was selected to collect statistics for the U. S. census of 1880, says: "While wages earned in protected industries in 1870 was per head employed $446, in 1880 it was $313.75, or a decrease of about twenty-nine per cent." And again, Mr. Wright in his annual report of 1883, states that in 1875 the per centage of wages paid to the value of production in over two thousand establishments was $24.68, and that in 1880 it was only $20.23, a decrease of one-sixth in five years." In these two statements of Stebbin's and Leib's you have the protection and free trade arguments; each claims their point, the one that protection increases the price of labor, and the other that it diminishes its price; neither can see, or does not admit any other factor as entering into the problem; While in my judgment many elements, of which this question of tariff is only one, enter into the determining of the prices paid.

But the task you have set me is a positive rather than a negative one—to show that the present tariff does work to the injury of the farmer.

An Illinois farmer wrote to the Chicago Tribune a couple of years ago asking the same question. He said: "Give us the cold facts to paste in our hats!" The Tribune replied: "The cold facts may give our granger reader a chill colder than does the frosty weather, unless, perchance, his indignation should warm him up."

I append herewith the classifications of which the Tribune prepared in answer; except that for "Illinois" I have substituted the word "Minnesota."

One writer, in commenting on the above, says: "If, before pasting these cold facts in their hats," as recommended by the Tribune, those of our western farmers who vote for congressmen supporting this double-action system, would take a look at their account books and see how much money they have spent for household goods, for farming interests, lumber, etc., etc., and deduct the per centage of the tax, (the farmer does not usualy buy imported goods), the result would serve as an eye opener. It would also give our Illinois farmer more particularly, an inkling how it happened that during the twenty years of protection, the manufacturing, but naturally poor commonwealth of Massachusetts, accumulated twice as much wealth as did his own state; while during the ten years preceding, when the low tariff prevailed, the wealth of Illinois had trebled, that of Massachusetts only increasing 15 per cent.

As the result of the paternal form of government into which he have been drifting for the past twenty years, we have on the one hand suddenly acquired fortunes in the hands of undeserving and selfish men, with their attendant evils, monopolies and trusts; on the other, abject poverty, with all its attendant evils, anarchism, socialism and strikes.

These are the upper and nether mill stones, between which the wheat producer of this section is ground, who, without a possibility of protection upon his staple, which, from the very nature of things, must take its value from a foreign market where it comes in direct competition with the pauper labor of India, yet he must bear the burden of a tariff upon the woolen robe in which he wraps his new born babe, the toys of his children, the tools with which he tills the soil, the cloth on which the over-burdened housewife spreads her frugal meal, and on the plumes which nod above the hearse which bears him to his humble grave.

He must pay all this vast aggregation of taxation, while the high protectionist lulls him to sleep with his siren song of "Creating a Home Market" and "Protection to Infant Industries."

The Farmers' Elevator Syndicate an Established Fact.

What the New Scandinavian Elevator Company Really Means—A Good Start.

Evening Journal.

It has been for some time no secret that the farmers of Minnesota and Dakota were about to organize an elevator company or syndicate to be controlled by the Farmers' Alliance. That the company has been in existence for about a month, is also more or less well known, but the details of the scheme, which is a far-reaching and important one, have been thus far known only to the prime movers in the enterprise. By the permission of the gentlemen who are at the head of the company The Journal is able to state some facts which will be of great interest to the farmers and grain men of the Northwest.

For many years the farmers have been loud in their complaints over the ills they have suffered at the hands of the elevator companies. Protests and petitions have alike been of no avail and as a last resort they have organized a company of their own, which is known as the Scandinavian Elevator Company. The principal offices are in Minneapolis and Duluth. The incorporation of the company, with the names of the incorporators, has already been briefly mentioned in The Journal.

The object of the company is to get wheat from the farmers to the millers at the lowest cost of handling and in its purity as grown. It is asserted that all of the wheat, except that used in Minneapolis, becomes mixed in course of transit, and that it is impossible for a miller in an Eastern or foreign market to get pure No. 1 hard wheat. This mixing greatly reduces its commercial, as well as its milling value. In consequence of this mixing large and illegitimate profits are secured by intermediate handlers, to the great loss of the farmers and millers. By having an elevator company composed of farmers and millers most interested in the wheat, it is expected that the large margins in buying, the shortage in weights, heavy dockage, under-grading at interior points, depreciation by mixing in transit and the various other evils will be largely done away with. While the company is not composed exclusively of farmers, the Alliance will have control of it. Some Eastern millers will have stock, as they are as interested in getting pure wheat as the farmers are in selling it to them.

The Scandinavian Elevator Company was incorporated about a month ago with $200,000 capital. The president is H. L. Loucks, president of the Dakota Farmers' Alliance, and the vice president is H. E. Boen, secretary of the Minnesota Alliance. The secretary is C. C. Walcott, formerly of Larimore, Dak., who has been in the commission business in Minneapolis for the past two years. The directors include, besides the officers, Eric Olson, W. D. Armstrong, A. K. Lee and H. D. Lilleman.

The company has secured control of an elevator at Duluth, and it will build one in Minneapolis in time to handle the coming crop. It will also have elevators at Buffalo and other terminal points. By the time the new crop begins to arrive it is expected that the company will have 200 to 300 elevators in the country. Wherever an elevator is independent, the company will take it under its control and in return issue stock to the owners. In this way it is expected that all the independent elevators in Minnesota and Dakota will be united. At each warehouse, the company will furnish samples of regularly established Minnesota grades, so that farmers can judge for themselves if they receive proper grade, and listers will also be furnished. The company will handle grain but all sales will be made by sample and not by grade.

There are several London grain and flour men interested in the scheme. Their object is to devise a plan whereby they can get unadulterated wheat, and as the plan of the Scandinavian Elevator Company offers them what they want they have interested themselves in it.

Notice is hereby given that I will offer at public sale at the County Auditor's office in Crookston on Thursday May 10th, at 10 o'clock a. m., on the terms prescribed by law, the school lands, in Polk County, that have been appraised and are unsold, or that have been sold and forfeited by reason of failure to pay interest for two or more years.

Lists of the lands to be offered may be seen at the Auditor's office for ten days prior to the sale.

W. W. BRADEN,
[47-1] Com'r of the State Land Office.

Wanted.

Information in relation to Mrs. Ida Johanson, whose last address that I knew was box 277, Crookston. I have had no word from her since Sept. 1886, though I have written repeatedly. Any one knowing of her whereabouts would confer a great favor by writing me. Address, A. J. JOHANSON No. 88 North 4th St., Portland, Oregon.
[51-2]

CROOKSTON, MINN., APRIL 26.

'Round Home

Mr. N. Gervais is moving his goods into the McKinnon block to accommodate a growing trade.

Christianson Bro's. report the sale of several farms this spring and say that the inquiries are increasing.

Haslett & Co., will occupy a store in the new McKinnon block about May 1st. Look out for a stunning display.

"Plant trees my friend, plant trees today," and if you plant treees every day during the season you cannot overstock the market in this country this year.

Rev. B. F. Bronson and family left for their new home in St. Paul Tuesday evening, accompanied by the best wishes of hosts of friends for their future welfare.

Roadmaster Burdett appeared at the post office on Monday. He is recovering from the effects of his accident and, at present rate of progress will soon be as good as new.

Berg & Jorgenson will soon occupy their new quarters in the McKinnon block when they will expose to view a fine line of gent's furnishings and a large and complete stock of boots and shoes.

Our Beltrami correspondent has waked up again and he is as welcome as the robins in spring. He has promised to get there more frequently and we live in hopes that he wont forget it.

Elsewhere will be found a lively Angus letter. We are promised a continuation of the same for which we wish to express our thanks and the hope that our correspondent will not soon weary in well doing.

Mrs. Ellen Pierce has returned from her winter's visit to her friends below and has re-opened her popular boarding house for the summer. The railroad boys always regard her place as home and it has been ever a good home to them.

We refer to farmers to whom we have made loans as to our promptness in dealing with them. Our old customers always recommend their neighborto us.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

R. A. Wilkinson was in the city this week. He reports that the round house will be built at an early day, the iron laid on the B. & N. W. as far as Fosston this summer but that work will not be commenced upon the shops before next spring probably.

Hundreds of acres will be put in to wheat this week within the county, and next week will see most of it completed. We wish we could report double the number of acres in oats and barley this year and one-half the usual area sowed to wheat. It would be big money in the farmers' pockets.

Barrette & Asselin have purchased Mr. Le Page's interest in the brick grocery house on Broadway and took possession last week. They inform THE JOURNAL that they intend to keep up the reputation of the house for low prices, down weights and square dealing. Give the new firm a trial.

See notice elsewhere of two thoroughbred Shorthorn bulls for sale by D. McMillan, Edna, Minn. These animals are all that he represents them to be, and more, and he is prepared to give some one a great bargain on a deal for them. It would pay any one desiring to purchase a reliable Shorthorn to go and see this stock.

We have only one note and mortgage we make a loan the day applied for, charge no bonus, and make interest payable at our office in Crookston.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

If every man, woman and child in Polk County should plant only one tree each on Arbor Day, what a difference that would make on these treeless prairies, but should they plant all they could on that day it would be a day long to be remembered in the history of Polk County, and none can say there is no necessity. Every quarter section ought to have from ten to twenty acres of healthy young trees upon it. It would add largely to its permanent value.

We have had placed in our hands several grain farms for sale or to rent, and two stock farms. Parties desirous of securing a good bargain will do well to call at this office and get terms. All inquiries by mail promptly answered. Address THE JOURNAL, Crookston, Minn.

The democrats are making a great parade over Mr. Nelson's tariff speech and intend to circulate it freely. This will save the republicans much time and expense as they will only have to supply those that the democrats overlook. Singular, aint it, that the high moral reform party has to go outside its ranks for campaign thunder? But it is only in line with their old-time traditions—everything good that they ever professed was borrowed from the republican party.

Prof. Thompson went down to Ole Bang's farm on Monday and found Ole hard at work at the plow. He says Ole has one of the finest farms in Polk County, with fine large farm buildings and over 100 head of stock. Says he has a large force of men and teams busily engaged in seeding and that he will soon be through that operation. The Prof. is completely mashed on Ole's farm and farming and we should not wonder to see Prof. sell out and go farming himself.

J. R. Clements is expected home from Florida early in May.

Wheat looks up a little below. Still in the 65 notch here.

Potatoes are weaker. You can buy plenty in this market at 50 cents.

Miss Allie Box has gone to St. Paul for a visit with her sister, Mrs. Lindsley.

Best residence lots in the city and on your own terms; mind, ON YOUR OWN TERMS.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

Will Clements says that early strawberries can be raised in Polk County—for 40 cents per box.

Berthiaume Bro.'s expect to occupy their new quarters by May first or as soon thereafter as they can get to housekeeping.

Shepard & Winston write that the iron will be laid to Fosston this spring but no grading will probably be done beyond that point this summer.

Farm loans completed and money paid over the day application is made.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

The agent of "She" while in the city, enroute for Winnipeg promised to secure a date for next week but up till the time we go to press he has failed to do so.

During the high wind of Tuesday the smoke stack of the Walker planing mill blew down. No one was hurt, though one man missed being hit by a scratch.

Tickets for Haverly's minstrels on sale at the usual place at the usual prices. If you miss Harverly's you will miss the best minstrel show ,now on the road.

Loans made on improved farm at 9 per cent. straight, no commission and no bonus charged. Office over Merchants' National Bank.
[50-tf] L. H. STARKEY.

J. T. Knight was down from Red Lake Falls last week as jovial as ever. J. T. prophesies big things for the falls this coming summer. It is a mitey cold day when J. T.,s spirits are low!

Who has not heard of the world renowned Havelry's minstrels? They are booked for May 2d at the opera house. All will be pleased at an opportunity to see this renowned troupe.

Haverley's minstrels have the best stands of paper ever shown by any company. They are highly spoken of by the press everywhere and always draw good houses. Don't fail to see them May 2d.

On all loans we make, interest payable at our office in Crookston.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

The Katie Pearson Comedy Co., is booked for the week commencing May 7th. This company is well spoken of wherever they have been. As yet we have not learned what plays they will present but will doubtless know by next issue.

We have just received a carload of Buggies, Carriages, Phaetons, Jump Seats, Platform Wagons and Road Carts, and can sell you better goods for the money than any one else. We do not sell snide goods at any price. Don't fail to see us.
[1-5] HUGGARD, LARSEN & Co.

M. U. Squire, ye writing master, completes his last term next week. He has met with great success in our city and his skill with the pen is universally recognized. His pupils show great improvement and their work may be seen some day next week at the central school building. We hope he will return again next fall.

We find it our duty to let the public know that we are agents for the best sewing machine, Domestic. We also have in stock two lighted windows and a general stock of sash and doors.
[52-tf] EIKEN BRO'S.

Dave Huggard was up to Angus this week looking after his farming interests. He reports D. McLennan to be improving and his early recovery is confidently expected. Says Will Carlton and several other hustlers are half through seeding and everybody is at it on the jump. No backward season can ever down an Angus granger and they will be through seeding about the usual time if it busts a tug.

See new ad. of Huggard, Larson & Co., in this issue. They have the old man on the lead this year, while they have no fault to find with him as a wheelhorse they think he will look better in the lead. They report double the number of seeders and drags sold this year over last, and the plow trade extremely lively. They have sold a number of brush breakers though it is early in the season for them.

Chris. Thieman arrived from a winter't visit to his old home in Illinois on Friday last. Chris. is a very different looking outfit from the forlorn specimen that a few springs since struck the city and went out to work the season for "mister Bortlitt!" He then resembled a pair of great moon-eyes with two immense ears stuck on to an animated lightning rod. He had been reduced to this condition by too much hand-painting, but one season out on a Minnesota farm made him as fat as a rail. He took a claim that summer, lived upon it during the winter, and next summer was able again to wield the paint brush equal to the best of 'em. Chris. is now as healthy looking a dutchman as you will find in nine counties, and if you ask him thereason he will point to our Minnesota ozone that gave him both the health and a good home. In after years you will find him one of the solid men of Polk County.

The logs are beginning to arrive and soon the big mill will be busy at its season's job. It is expected that work will begin this week.

Who says that summer has not come? If anybody has a doubt he should go and see the evidences at W. M. Clements'—strawberries large and luscious.

Mr. L. H. Starkey reports the sale of a farm near St. Hilaire; consideration in the neighborhood of $1,000. He says inquiries are more numerous as spring advances.

Mr. A. Sture was down from Wylie on Tuesday closing a deal with John Johnson for a farm. We are told that the consideration was $1,000. Real estate deals are becoming more numerous.

Lots in exchange for farming lands.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS

Peter Gothia wishes us to say to all who wish to exchange second-hand furniture for new, or to sell it for cash, that he is prepared for any kind of a deal in that line. He carries a fine line of new furniture.

R. A. Wilkinson: You may say that the road will be completed to Fosston this summer, also to Belmont and probably continued to Crookston; and you may say, also, that the shops will positively be built just as soon as the road is completed to Brainerd and Milacca, that is, "if Crookston keeps her bonnet on!"

We can loan money on better terms than anyone else in the valley. Money paid over the moment securities are executed. STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

While from every section of the country, almost, comes the doleful cry of great freshets, Polk County has had none of it. The Red Lake River has quietly loosed itself from its icy chains and did not go on a high in celebration of the event. Verily we have much to be thankful for that we live where we are not in constant danger of being swept away every spring.

Halladay's Minstrels played to a good house on Friday evening and everybody seemed well pleased with the show. It was something new in the minstrel line, but few, if any old mouldy chestnuts, and there were some very fine singers in the outfit. The band is a good one, and the orchestra hard to beat. The ball was under the charge of the Berthiaume Bros., whose first attempt seems to have been a grand success.

We satisfy all our customers, we ask no bonus, and we pay over money on loans the moment notes are signed.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

Two hundred girls, employed in the Shotwell, Clerihew & Lothman manufactory, Minneapolis, are out on a strike simply because they had to work like slaves for from $3 to $3.50 per week. Is it because of the high protective tariff that they receive such magnificent wages? An amount insufficient to feed and clothe them comfortably. It is hard to discover wherein these girls are greatly benefitted by the present high tariff.

We loan money to pay up railroad ands.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

While everything points to a less quantity of wheat this year, and a consequently higher price, we do not think it wise to bank too heavily upon a fortune in wheat next fall. All those pretty stories we read about of "the almost total destruction of winter wheat," and all that, are only repetitions of the same siren song the wily wheat speculator sings about this time every year to give the honest granger courage to go into wheat more extensively than ever. For the past few years we have noticed these reports sown freely; farmers, acting upon them, have sown larger crops in bright anticipation, only, a few weeks later, to be informed that "it was a mistake about that winter wheat. While it was all killed down fast enough, the brilliant weather of the past few days has REVIVED IT UP FROM THE ROOTS WONDERFULLY!" Thus the speculator is again trying to "come roots" on the farmer, but he will be wise if he does not bank his last dollar on wheat. No matter if wheat should open a trifle higher next fall, the speculator is bound to get the profits of it. Such is not the case with barley and oats, however. Somehow our farmers seem to get all there is in those crops and the prospects for these grains, and for potatoes, are better this year than ever. As to oats in this vicinity, too many cannot be raised, as Mr. Dobson's oat meal mill is bound to make a vast difference in that crop and furnish a good home market for cash. He will use a large amount of white oats each year, and will pay a good fair price, in cash, for all he requires. The scarcity of potatoes all over the country last year has rendered the planting of large crops there impossible, and the prospects are that potatoes will be worth from 25 to 35 cents here to ship. This will pay double what wheat does at present prices. If every farmer in the Red River Valley should raise only one half his usual amount of wheat this year, it would create a sure enough shortage that would be to his advantage the following year. Let him give his attention to butter-making, cheese-making, oats, barley, potatoes, and everything but wheat a year or so and the world would be howling for bread directly, and for a year or two would be decided by his oyster. He could come pretty near naming the market price of wheat instead of, as now, being obliged to accept what speculators are a mind to offer.

There have been several meetings of the directors of the Crookston and Southeastern R. R. Co., recently, but they have kept their proceedings on the dead quiet so far. It transpires, however, that a proposition from the D. & M. to build from Fertile to Crookston has been recieved and has been the subject matter of the meetings. We are told that a conditional proposition for bonds to aid the road may be submitted to the people which will provide for giving aid to the D. & M. in case the B. & N. W. road, (to which road aid is already voted) do not earn the bonds by the time specified. To do this the B. & N. W. will have to have their line from Crookston to Brainerd completed by August 1st and ninety days thereafter it must be completed to some point on the Red River. If this cannot be done, the city will be free to vote the bonds in aid of some other enterprise and the idea of voting aid to the D. & M. is being considered. If the Manitoba road does not go to work pretty soon the project may amount to more than idle talk.

No Physic With Our Food.

A Phosphatic Baking Powder Theory That is Dangerous if not Ridiculous.

That is rather a dangerous proposition, put forth by the manufacturers of some of the patented or proprietary articles of food, that their products possess a superior wholesomeness because they contain a drug of some particular medicinal property. Phosphates, alum, lime, arsenic, calomel, etc., have their places as specifics for different diseases, and are invaluable medical remedies each in its place. But they are not cure-alls. The physician who should prescribe either colomel, or strychnine, or rhubarb three times a day to man, woman and child, sick or well, because either of such drugs is a well known remedy for some certain disease, would receive but little honor from the fraternity and less practice from the community.

No one will controvert this statement; yet we find manufacturers of baking powders claiming superior hygienic virtue for their productions and urging their continuous use because they are alleged to carry the phosphate used in making them (a cheap substitute for cream of tartar, procured from the bones of dead animals) into the food, although well aware, as they must be of the fact that with the constant use of such article this drug must pass into our systems daily, no matter what may be our physical conditions or requirements, or whether or not we may be suffering from some ailment wherein the use of such drug would be positively detrimental. Both alum and phospates are useful medicaments in certain diseases; but they should no more be taken indiscriminately day after day and without the prescription of a physician, than arsenic, aconite or calomel; indeed, there are conditions of the system, particularly with women, when the prudent physician would be loath to permit the use of lime phosphates even as a medicine.

The fallacy of this claim of the manufacturers of phosphatic baking powders will be apparent to all when the fact, well known to physicians, is stated, that in average health and with ordinary food the body gets more phosphates than are required or can be assimilated, as is evidenced by the fact that they are constantly being expelled in the excretions, both solid and liquid; likewise the statement that it is necessary to add phosphates to the baking powder to restore to the flour those which have been lost in the milling, for it is true that fine flour as at present made actually contains a larger percentage of phosphates than the grain of wheat itself.

The object of baking powders is not to provide the body with a medicine, but simply to vesiculate or make light the milture of flour, so as to render it when baked easy of mastication and perfectly digestible. The most celebrated experts in the business have worked for the perfection of an article that should do this mechanically, adding to taking from the four nothing, nor in any way effecting a change in its properties or constituents. When this has been done the perfect leavening agent has been discovered. The manufacturers of the Royal Baking Powder have succeeded in this so far as to make a leavening agent that vesiculates and raises the loaf most perfectly, and without changing the properties of the flour, while the residuum from it has been reduced to a minimum. The acid employed, however, to produce this result is not phosphatic, but the acid of highly refined cream of tartar, which, the health authorities agree, renders that powder perfectly pure and more reliable and healthful than any other. The recent official tests show, on the other hand, that the best the phosphatic baking powder makers can do is to produce an article that is one-third or more residuum or impurity.

We want our food pure; especially do we not wish to take alum, lime and phosphates with it at the dictum of manufacturers who may find it cheaper to claim a virtue for the impurities than to remove them.

Base Ball.

Everybody interested in forming a base ball club is invited to meet at the St. Louis Hotel this evening. We have willow-wielders enough in our city to form a good club if they are a mind to catch on.

THE JOURNAL has received the following communication from the Crookston Fire Department, with the request to publish the same. We are pleased to see that the boys are as quick to appreciate all words of just commendation as they are to leave their business avocations or their beds and fly to the rescue of the property in our city whenever it is in danger. We have a department of which our city may justly be proud, and being a volunteer department, without pay commensurate to the losses of clothing often incurred, and the time and labor spent in the service of others, they are at least entitled to as much as a "thank you sir," for the hard work they have done, if nothing more. Instead of this, it seems to be the especial province of a few carping critics, when a building happens to burn, to roost on the fence, growl and "cuss" the department. If these same "roosters" would quit sucking their fingers long enough to do just what the boys are doing, "get down to business and do a little healthy work for nothing, save the benefit of the city, they would at least be in a better position to criticise, and their criticims would have more point and weight. Has not the department time and again prevented disastrous conflagrations? And do these critics ever notice that? If they do it is simply to grunt something like this: "It is their BUSINESS to put out fires! They have done nothing more than their DUTY!" or words to that effect. By that same token it is the business of every public-spirited man to help on such occasions, but how many do it unless their own property is endangered? Let the city provide proper facilities and the boys will do their part never fear.

ASSEMBLY ROOOMS
CROOKSTON FIRE DEPARTMENT,
Crookston, April 19, 1888.

To the Editor of the JOURNAL:

DEAR SIR: We, the officers and members of the Crookston Fire Department, desire to express our thanks for the article in last week's JOURNAL in which you so ably defended this Department against unjust criticism.

By order of the Department.

WM. HEIDRICH, JR., Sec'y.

Elsewhere will be found a letter of instructions to our Land Office officials, from the Hon. Secretary, by which it will be seen that the indemnity land cases may be settled by one test case. This will save much expense and worry on the part of the claimants.

Judge R. Reynolds and wife returned from a winter's sojourn in California on Tuesday. The Judge looks very much improved in health and says that he is feeling "right smart." He thinks California is a very pleasant place to live in during the winter season, and a good place to make money if one has the capital to do it with, but for one who is obliged to work for a living, the Judge says he knows of no better place than Polk County.

On Tuesday about 1 o'clock, the fire-bell did its best to notify all law-abiding citizens within two blocks of the engine house that a fire had broken out on Sampson's Addition. The department, (without waiting to notify the Times man) started for the scene but ere they reached the ground, the fire ceased operations. The alarm was caused by the burning out of a chimney in A. Shouweiler's residence, the first building on the right as you cross the bridge to Sampson's Woodland Addition.

Boys, (we are talking to the little shavers, yclept the kids, now,) we do not want to see twelve or a dozen of you planted neath the green, green grass in your tender (some spell that 'tender," t-o-u-g-h) youth, hence we raise our voice against the practice commonly called "running the logs" in the river. It may be very smart and "the feller what gets out alive, the best feller," and all that, but as none of you are gifted with wings you are very liable to make a "mis-lick" and go down; as you can't fly you are liable to furnish your friends a job of fishing for your body with grab-hooks, a proceeding in which you would have little if any fun. On Tuesday one of H. Bradshaw's boys undertook to "run the logs" with the result that he was pulled out of the drink, wetter nor a drowned rat—cold water is a good thing—we recommend it to the boys, but advise you to be temperate about it, don't try to take too much at once of it and you will last longer, and be more useful. We trust the boys will heed our gentle racket before we have a more serious matter to consider.

LATER.—The above was hardly in type before we heard of another case, showing that newspaper boys are no smarter than other lads but have to take "pot luck" with the crowd. It seems that on Tuesday evening it occurred to James Gordon Bennett that he could ride the fiery untamed saw-log in due and ancient form, but his imagination got away with him—so did the saw-log, and when we last saw him he was a wiser tho' a wetter lad, crawling along to the Chronicle office to build a fire by which to ruminate and dry up. He got in too late for the item to appear but his joy at being able to get in at all without help was greater than his regret at losing a good healthy, sensational item. If the boys will not let up on "log-rolling" in the river it will pay their parents to exercise the veto power and see that it is enforced. Because the boys have thus far escaped with a slight ducking is no reason that they always will and the practice is a very dangerous one.

CHAPTER I.

No one doubted that the Messingers were fortunate in possessing so charming a house as the Ness. It was built at the head of a narrow valley shut in by two hills, and beyond the sloping lawn stretched a wide expanse of sea.

Mr. and Mrs. Messinger were simple unaffected people, devoted to their children and to Nancy, Mr. Messinger's young step-sister. They treated her with a kind of reverential tenderness, chiefly due to the fact that she was entirely dependent on them. And, in her turn, Nancy filled the place of a loving elder sister to the tribe of little ones, and of friend-in-chief to her gentle sister-in-law.

One sunny afternoon in early summer Mrs. Messinger sat at the open bay window of the drawing-room, reading. She was a placid little lady, seldom ruffled in mind or temper, and her sweet face and soft blue eyes were pleasant to contemplate. The door opened presently and Nancy came in rather slowly. Her expression was as sweet and gentle as her sister's, but her great dark eyes and firmly-cut mouth and chin bore evidence of much greater strength and individuality of character. She came over to the window and seated herself in a low basket-chair with an air of constraint.

"I have had a letter from Jim," she said.

"Yes; I saw it on the hall table," replied Mary, laying down her book. "Does he say when he is coming?"

"Yes; he came by the same steamer as the letter. He will be here tomorrow. I suppose."

"Nancy! really?" asked Mary, looking almost excited: "Are you not delighted?"

"I—I—have a confession to make," said Nancy, nervously, looking over the sea. "I thought I loved Jim when he went out to India five years ago, but I was only seventeen then and did not realize what love meant. We had known each other all our lives and I mistook our friendship for love."

"When did you make this terrible discovery?" asked Mary in distress.

"I have felt it dimly for a year or two, but what made it all clear to me was Jim's last letter, saying that he was coming home. It filled me with dismay and fear. I felt that I simply could not meet him as his betrothed wife, so I wrote last mail and asked him to release me from my engagement."

"And what did he say?" Mary asked, anxiously.

"He is delighted," said Nancy, brightening. "He says that his feelings have changed, too."

"I always think of you in the future as his wife," sighed Mrs. Messinger, whose mind was slow to welcome new ideas. "Are you sure you are wise, dear?"

"Quite sure," Nancy answered, firmly. "And you will break the news gently to Ned, won't you? And please get reconciled to the arrangement soon. I feel so delightfully airy and free!"

"You never hinted at any change before," said Mary, a little reproachfully.

"I only knew it dimly, or I might have done it," replied Nancy, gently. "And since I wrote to him I have been silent to spare you any anxiety. I have felt it for the last three years in writing to him. My letters have never been from the present Nancy, but from the Nancy as I could remember her at seventeen. In fact, I have been 'writing down' all the time to the level of his intelligence as shown in his letters, and that level is painfully low. But happily, you see, he is as pleased to end our engagement as I am."

"He would be much more likely to object if he once saw you," said Mary, frankly, for these five years have done wonders with you in every way."

"O, he is so boyish he will think me strong-minded, and therefore dislike me," said Nancy, laughing. "And I did send him my last photograph, you know."

"Did you send that hideous thing?" asked Mary, in surprise.

"Well," confessed Nancy, rather reluctantly, "I believe I had some secret, unconfessed hope that he would offer to break off the engagement if he once saw that hideous caricature. But here comes Ned; I shall leave you to explain things to him."

A day or two later Nancy started for her usual afternoon walk along the cliffs. Since she had been released from the engagement which for some years past had been weighing on her spirits she had been in a state of exhilaration which surprised her. The world seemed wholly beautiful; life was an unmixed blessing; sin and poverty were rarer than she had thought. Walking quickly along, absorbed in these pleasant reflections, she did not hear footsteps behind her, and was surprised at hearing herself addressed. Looking up with startled eyes, she found a young man gazing at her with a puzzled, intent expression in his handsome face.

"You are Nancy, are you not?" he said doubtfully, holding out his hand.

"Why, Jim, is it really you?" asked Nancy, regarding him with surprise. "How you have grown! When did you come? and how did you find me?"

"I came two days ago," he said, reddening slightly at her first words. "Father was anxious that I should stay with him yesterday, but I called at the Ness this afternoon, and Mrs. Messinger told me where I should find you."

"Let us go home now, and then you can see them all," she said, turning back. "You will hardly know the children; they were such mites when you left."

"I certainly shall not if they have altered as much as you have done. I scarcely knew you," he said, looking down at her with intent black eyes, and inwardly comparing this beautiful, graceful girl with the gauche schoolgirl of five years since.

"I am older," she said, her heart sinking strangely. "He might disguise the fact that he finds me a disappointing failure," she thought, rather bitterly.

"Of course we are no longer boy and girl" he agreed. "But I hope we shall always be friends, Nancy? We have been that all our lives, haven't we?"

"Yes, let us be friends," she said. And thinking that he was eager to impress upon her that they were to be nothing more, she added. "And it was very wise to break off that childish engagement before you came home, wasn't it?"

"Y—yes," he said, doubtfully; "O yes, of course. Your feelings are naturally quite changed, I suppose, Nancy?"

"Naturally," she said, calmly, but thinking to herself that she was not so sure about that, after all.

"Naturally," he echoed, his eyes, however, becoming a little clouded. "Those boy and girl engagements never answer, do they? People develop so differently from what one would expect. Judging from your letters, I should have thought you utterly different from what I find you."

"You are equally different from what I should have expected you to be," she answered. "But let us put up with each other as we are; we need not see much of one another, you know."

They had just reached the gate leading into the garden of the Ness as she said this, and unconsciously she paused outside. Jim took this, coupled with her last words as a hint that he should go, and was more hurt than he cared to own.

"Good-afternoon," he said, stifly, raising his hat. "Your suggestion is a brilliant one and you need not fear that I shall trouble you with my presence more often than is necessary."

"You are coming in?" she said, looking at him with pained, pleading eyes.

"Thank you, no," he said, coldly. "I have seen Mrs. Messinger and your brother, and the children will keep."

"Good-bye," she said, turning in at the open gate in order that he should not see the rising tears.

"Good-bye," he said, freezingly, thinking her absolutely cruel in not shaking hands. She went up the little sloping avenue slowly and sadly, trying to crush back the tears which would rise to her eyes in spite of her efforts. She had succeeded before reaching the hall, and could answer her sister's surprised questions quite calmy.

"My dear Mary," she said, laughing gently, "you forget our changed relations. You must not expect him to come as often as he used. We have both come to the conclusion that we are quite different from what we had thought each other, and we have mutually agreed to see as little as possible of one another."

But when she reached her own room her self-control deserted her, and she cast herself down on the little couch, and wept long and bitterly.

"I hate him!" she said to herself, vindictively. "I do; I hate him! No, I don't; I believe I do the very opposite. Oh, I ought to be ashamed of myself to care for any one so utterly indifferent to me! He didn't even come in, and after all these years! He shall never know that I love him, never! However much I may suffer, I have enough pride to hide it. He shall think me as indifferent as he is himself."

Her mouth took a hard look, very foreign to its sweet lines, as she rose and bathed her face; and through all that evening she bore herself so bravely that no one guessed of the bitterness and wounded pride she thus smilingly hid.

CHAPTER II.

If Mrs. Messinger had been given to abstruse reflections, she might have asked herself how Jim and Nancy could possibly avoid each other, according to their compact when he was always coming to the Ness? For he came every day, and at all hours in the day, as he had been wont to do five years ago. There was one difference between this daily intercourse and that of the old times, and that a rather important one. Nancy lost all her gentle brightness when speaking to Jim, and was coldly, distantly polite to him. He saw this, and no doubt resented it, but Nancy never guessed that from his manner. He did everything he could to please her, but with no outward effect. Inwardly, she knew that her love for him was strengthening day by day, and that no power of hers could prevent it.

Jim was in a most trying position. He knew himself to be deeply in love with Nancy; his feelings for her had never died, as he had imagined; but with the knowledge of her as a sweet, noble woman came the knowledge that he had forfeited the right to tell her of his love. Her letters had been of a kind of which he had wearied when he ceased to be a youth. But, anxious that his own letters should not be uninteresting to her as hers were to him, he had written in a boyish, semi-frivolous strain, which he thought would be pleasing to her, as natural to herself. He could not understand how such a thoughtful, intelligent girl as he knew her to be, could have written such shallow, characterless letters. He supposed that she had not cared for him enough to write about what she felt interested in.

His position with regard to Nancy was much worse than that of any mere acquaintance. Every other man could tell her of his love while it seemed to him that he had lost this right by gladly agreeing to cancel their engagement. What made matters worse was that Nancy never appeared to dream that any other relation than the present constrained friendship was possible between them.

One afternoon he found her alone; a very rare occurrence, indeed; for she was very careful to avoid tete-a-tete with him.

"Shall we go into the garden?" she asked, thinking that anything was preferable to sitting stiffly in the drawing-room.

"I should like it immensely," he answered, rising, and opening the door with alacrity. "Will you take me to our old favorite seat? I have so often thought of those old days when I was feeling homesick, Nancy."

"I thought you were happy in India," she said, unresponsively.

"So I was, but I was homesick sometimes, especially when I first went out."

"This is the seat, is it not?" she asked, as if she might have easily forgotten the place where he had first told her of his love.

"Yes, this is it," he said, dreamily, looking out over the cliffs and sea.

"Mr. Penstone and I always quarrel over this view," said Nancy, anxious to prevent any embarrassing pause.

"Who is Mr. Penstone?" asked Jim, knitting his brows.

"He is our curate," she answered. "I always say that this is the finest view in the town, but Mr. Penstone maintains that the view from—"

"He must be an idiot, then!" burst in Jim, hotly; "the views are not to be compared!"

"You might have waited until I had mentioned the other," said Nancy, raising her eyebrows.

"I—I beg your pardon," he said, in utter confusion. "I thought you must mean—in fact, I understood you to say—that—that the view from the Beacon was finer than this."

"Yes, that is what Mr. Penstone declares," she said.

"What a hideous name the man has!" said Jim, irritably. "Of course you are devoted to him, Nancy?"

"Yes; he is so very good and clever and pleasant," she said, surprised at his vehemence.

"You are going to marry him, I suppose?" he said, with ill concealed anger.

"You forget yourself, I think," she answered, with gentle dignity. "And whom I may marry can be no possible concern of yours."

"O none, of course!" he said, furiously. "Only you might have told me the truth when you broke our engagement. It would have been just as easy to say that you were engaged to some one else at once."

"You are entirely mistaken in thinking that I am engaged to any one," said Nancy, calmly. "Mr. Penstone is married, and old enough to be my father. I may have obsolete ideas about engagements, but I was not aware that, even in these enlightened days, honorable women were in the habit of engaging themselves to two people at the same time. Shall we go in now, or have you any other interesting accusations to make?"

"Forgive me, Nancy; I was a fool!" pleaded Jim, earnestly. "I forget sometimes that I have not still the right to speak to you on such matters. For five years I have thought of you as my promised wife, and now that I am with you I cannot always realize that you are mine no longer. Say that you forgive me, Nancy, for my roughness and presumption."

"There is nothing to forgive," she said, coldly. "Let us go in now. The evenings are getting quite chilly."

After this quarrel Jim found it impossible to be on the same footing of friendship with Nancy. She was colder and more constrained than ever in her manner towards him; and though every day he felt more clearly that his love was hopeless, he found it more difficult to hide it from her. He was too proud and too manly to force his love on her, believing, as he did, that she disliked him; and at last, after a bitter struggle with himself, he determined to return to India at once.

He had never been to the Ness lately without some valid reason, and this new decision was so good an excuse for calling that he was not slow in taking advantage of it. He found Nancy in the garden, arrayed in a large white sun-bonnet, busily gathering strawberries for tea.

"You find it rather hot work, I am afraid," he said, looking down gravely into her flushed face. "Let me pick some now."

"Thank you," she answered, resigning the basket; "stooping so much has tired me a little."

He had soon filled the basket, and then, at his suggestion, they seated themselves under an old apple tree to rest. Nancy took off her sun-bonnet, and leant her bare head against the gnarled tree languidly. Jim watched her as she sat there, thinking that he would soon have only the memory of her sweet, pale face to bear with him.

"I came up this afternoon to say good-bye," he said, breaking the long silence rather abruptly.

Nancy started slightly, and raised her eyes to his in wonderment.

"Good-bye?" she said. "And where are you going?"

"I am going back to India; I have had enough of England."

"To India? At once? O why?" she asked, piteously, growing very white and looking at him with frightened eyes.

An expression of tremulous hope began to dawn on Jim's face as he saw how his words had affected her.

"Do you care, Nancy?" he asked, eagerly. "Would you rather I stayed?"

"My wishes have nothing to do with the matter," she said, rather bitterly.

"Indeed they have," he said, very earnestly—"Nancy, tell me, would you rather I stayed?"

"If I said 'yes,' would you stay?" she asked, quietly.

"Only if you love me," he said. "I cannot stay on and see you day after day, and feel that you will never care for me. May I stay Nancy?"

"If you like," she answered, shyly.

Jim took her in his arms and kissed her very tenderly. "There is one thing I want to know," he said, presently, looking down into her eyes; "when did you begin to love me, dear?"

"When did you begin to love me?" she replied, blushing under his gaze.

"I don't know; I have loved you all my life," he answered.

"I don't know, either," she said; "when I was about four or five I think."

"But, my darling, you broke off our engagement," he said, wonderingly.

"Yes; from your letters I thought I did not love you. They were so stupid —I—I mean—"

"Yes, they were stupid, but yours were silly, too, and I thought that was the kind of thing you liked," he said, a ray of intelligence drawing in his eyes.

"I thought you were terribly boyish, so wrote very 'young' letters, thinking they would interest you," she said, beginning to laugh.

"We both fell into the same mistake, then," he said, laughing, too, though a little regretfully. "O, Nancy! we might have had such a good time! How I wish I had the letters that you might have written!"

"Yes, it is a pity," she said. "But it is all right now, and I will write the sweetest letters to you in the future."

"Indeed you will not," he replied, in a calmly masterful tone. "I never mean to leave you again. We must look upon those letters as a part of the vast 'It-might-have-been.'"

There's Virtue in Onions and Beef.

Kansas City Star.

What is the most strengthening food for a convalescent? Well, you know, the beef-tea theory has been exploded. The most life-giving and digestible food that can be given to one just recovering from an illness is chopped beef. Just take a pound of the finest round of raw beef, cut off all the fat, slice two onions, and add pepper and salt. Then chop the onions and meat together, turning them over until both are reduced almost to a pulp. Then spread on slices of rye bread and eat as sandwiches. People talk about celery being a nervine, but let me tell you that there is nothing which quiets the nerves without bad results like onions. The use of them induces sleep, and much strength is obtained from them. That is my ideal food for those convalescing or for any one who is in a weak state of health.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Seasonable Hints.

The stomach of an average horse containt twelve quarts, while that of a man who weighs about one-eighth as much will hold three quarts.

Do not be in haste to have newly-hatched chicks eat, as they need nothing for twenty-four hours after leaving the shell.

Large quantities of potatoes continue to be shipped from the Canadian Provinces and Prince Edward Island to the United States.

Twenty-five years ago a Vermont farmer was content with 400 pounds of butter in a year from four cows. Now the same farmer has ten cows that average 300 pounds of butter a year each.—Springfield Republican.

You get very few farmers to listen to the oretical speeches, but hundreds will attend farmers' institutes, etc., where practical work, such as butter-making, is shown them.—Dairy World.

A correspondent of the Farmers' Mgaizne states that the application of a mixture of one part coal tar and the same of wood tar to the sides and bottoms of water troughs will greatly assist in preventing any trouble with sheep.

Test the seed corn. Plant a few kernels from several ears in a box of earth, and place on top of cupboard in kitchen or dining room, and note what per cent. of them germinate.—Indiana Farmer.

Colonel P. D. Curtis says in his department of "Our Country Home" that a cow well broken to lead is worth $10 dollars more than a timid and unmanageable one. "She will make more milk, butter and good nature."

A Wisconsin correspondent of "The Western Farmer" says Wilson is yet considered the best variety by those who make money raising strawberries, and "our markets would be scantily supplied with sound fruit without it."

Plenty of whitewash should be used now, not only for the brighter appearance but also as a disenfectant. Hot whitewash on the inside of barns, stables, poultry-houses, and pig quarters will aid in preventing vermin and insects.

The average yield of wheat in the United States in 1887 was about twelve bushels per acre, and the average price about 68 cents per bushel. This is at the rate of only $8.16 per acre. Can farmers afford to raise wheat on such results?

If you and your neighbor can not agree upon a disputed point you can at least agree to submit the case to three disinterested neighbors and abide by their decision. That will save a lawsuit.

Here is a good, warm breakfast for forty fowls: Boil a heaping half-peck of potatoes, mash them, add one quart each of shorts and bran, a tablespoonful each of salt and pepper; add hot water enough to mix into a stiff dough.

Breeding-sows require food rich in the elements of bone and muscle. Corn is not suitable, as it causes an excess of fat, which is always detrimental in breeding-stock. Plenty of scalded clover hay in winter, with roots, and ground oats, shorts, and bran make the best food.

The evening's milk of cows is said to contain more solids than the morning's milk. The average of tests made n England shows that the evening's milk contained 14.3 per cent of solids and the morning's milk 13.4 per cent. Such being the case, it shows that milk should not be mixed with that of a previous milking, and the food may also cause a variation in the solids.

The most porous land will stand the drought best. The increased earliness of fruits and vegetables on well-drained land is well understood. They will be at least four days earlier on soil of the same condition and exposure where it is well drained. This means better prices, a larger yield, a longer season, and a better margin of profit.

Draught Horses to the Fore.

Notwithstanding the attention given to the breeding of trotting, racing and road horses, the demand for draught horses continues. Alluding to this subject a western paper observes that the draught horse interest is increasing all over the country. Importations are increasing beyond precedence notwithstanding the higher prices all over Europe for draught horses good enough for the American trade. The demand here calls for more horses and to supply all our importations are increasing, and many new importers have entered the field this year.

Bird Protection.

State Geologist Thompson of Indiana insists that farmers should protect their birds in every possible way. Everybody knows, he declares, that we have a hundred insects harmful to our fruit treess, vines, vegetables and cereals to where we had one thirty or forty years ago. Why? Largely because the birds are not one-tenth as numerous as they were then. You cannot have a healthy apple orchard without plenty of birds. The same may be said of cherry orchards, and the whole catalogue of fruit trees, vines and vegetables, as well as of the table cereals.

Bee-Keeping for Women.

One who has been very successful in the business says that apiculture is a most healthful, instructive, and pleasing occupation, and highly remunerative if managed judiciously. There are many ladies who are anxiously looking for some opening by which they can gain pecuniary independence. To all such bee-keeping offers special inducements and advantages. The capital required is small. The fear of stings need not deter any woman from trying to handle bees—for by the use of gloves and veil, one can be thoroughly protected.

Care of Newly-Planted Trees.

People who stick trees in a narrow hole in the ground, and then give them no after-attention, are advised to read and heed this truthful excerpt from a floating paragraph on the subject: "The same care given to growing crops should be bestowed on newly-planted trees. The ground must be stirred and kept from baking to a brick-like mass of dry clay. In many instances this can be done by mulching, but good culture of the soil is far preferable if for no other reason than to prevent the harboring of pernicious insects and vermin that are ever on the out-look for the seclusion afforded by the mulch so good-naturedly placed among the trees.

Mantel Lambrequin.

For a mantel two yards long take one yard of velvet and cut in two lengthwise; fold one of these pieces in half and cut, making two strips one-half yard long, and another one yard in length. The short pieces are tacked around the ends of the shelf, then tack the longer strip also. Pleat one end of the long piece and fasten it up to the shelf under a handsome bow of ribbon. This drapes the center strip quite gracefully; place another bow of ribbon at the other end of it and trim all the lower edges with crescents and tassels. On one of the smaller pieces paint in Kensington painting a spray of pansies, and on the other carnations; the long strip has a large, graceful spray of Virginia creeper.

The Lard Fraud.

If the American people are willing to be cheated and swindled into buying for lard that which is not lard, simply because made by rich millionaires, who are able to employ skilled advocates in Congress and through the press, it is their own business; but no other people would allow themselves to be so fooled. It has come to this, that every article of food we use that can by any possibility be manipulated, is adulterated and made the means by which one man deliberately, and in broad daylight, robs his fellow man. Thus plainly talks Colman's Rural World, founded by and which still represents the views of Agricultural Commissioner Colman.

A Fickle Conductor.

A young lady of Hingham recently told a bit of experience that she had enjoyed in traveling. The lady in question is handsome and well educated, but fortune had not smiled upon her, and she has been engaged in a lawyer's office in the city for several years, which necessitated her traveling over the Old Colony Railroad. She had not been a regular patron of the road long before she formed the acquaintance of the conductor, or rather he became acquainted with her, and he was in the habit of passing her seat while collecting fares without taking her ticket. After he had been through the train he would return and sit down beside her and chat for a few minutes, but he forgot to ask her for her ticket. This she rather enjoyed, inasmuch as it saved her several dollars every month. Not long since she was married, and recently she happened to board the train upon which was the conductor in question. As he came to the seat in which she sat he stopped and remarked: "I hear that you have been married. Allow me to congratulate you. Ticket please." Then he passed on to meet and form the acquaintance of some other young lady who was not married. Such is life, and the conductor is still proud of the fact that he is a single man.—Boston Gazette.

Exercise Promotes Health.

Some persons seem to think that if a certain quantity of feed will keep a bird or animal in good condition, twice as much should give a corresponding gain. This is a grave mistake, for when fowls are induced to eat too much, and become excessively fat, they suffer correspondingly. Nearly all the diseases to which fowls are subject may be traced to over-feeding. A fowl that is constantly stuffed soon becomes disordered and deficient in digestion, thus wasting the excess of food. Exercise is the best antidote for overfed birds. Reduce the allowance, and compel them to work. Industry means a production of eggs and the fowls will also keep healthy by having something to do.—American Agriculturist.

To Husbands.

Husbands, look to the flour-barrel; see that it is well filled, that your wife will not have to tell you half a dozen times, any then go herself, or send one of the girls, to the nearest neighbors, to get flour enough to finish the next meal with, and then take a scolding because the dinner is late. See to the meat, too, that there is meat to cook, plenty of it, and the kind your wife can eat. I know of men who never look into the flour-barrel, who never see to the meat tub or the potatoes, or anything of the kind, and who will say, when told of it, that they think it so strange how soon a barrel of flour, or a side of bacon, or a few bushels of potatoes disappear. For my part I think that men ought to think of this before they marry a woman. I do not see how they can expect a good meal cooked with nothing to cook, and in all probability the wife has nothing to cook it in, if she had anything to cook. So look to this, husbands, and you will always find a good, wholesome and palatable meal set before you.—Farm and Fireside.

Girls Don't be in Haste to Wed.

Build up healthy bodies by good food, plenty of exercise and sleep. Learn all the useful household arts before you attempt to make a home. Cultivate your minds with the best books, that you may be able to teach your children much that school-training alone will never give you. Choose your amusements wisely, for youth must have pleasure, but need not waste itself in harmful frivolity. Above all, select your friends with care. Avoid girls who live only for fashion, flirtation and enjoyment, and use the privilege all women may claim to decline the acquaintance of men whose lives will not bear inspection by the innocent eyes of women. Let no delusion of wealth, rank, comeliness, or love, tempt you to trust your happiness to such a one. Watch and wait till the true lover comes, even if it be all your life, for single blessedness is far better than double misery and wrong. Spinsters are a very useful, happy, independent race, never more so than now, when all professions are open to them, and honor, fame and fortune are bravely won by many gifted members of the sisterhood. Set your standard right, and live up to it, sure that the reward will come, here or hereafter, and in the form best suited to your real needs.—Louisa M. Alcott.

Rat-Proof Cribs.

The best plan for making a rat-proof crib is to get cut-stone pillars four feet long, plant them two and a half feet deep in the ground, and over them invert tin pans, then build the crib on this foundation. Some years ago, in describing the uses of corrugated iron, we said that a crib might be made rat-proof by covering the floor with sheet-iron and lathing the sides with narrow strips of corrugated iron, but we are not aware that the manufacturers of corrugated iron furnish it in suitable shape. Coarse wire netting is now used as a substitute for plastering lath, and cribs lined with this, the floor being covered with sheet-iron, would be somewhat discouraging to rats. We have made a small granary rat-proof by simply nailing a piece of sheet-iron a foot wide around the lower edge of the wall next the floor. The floor is not covered with iron, but there is no place below upon which rats can stand to gnaw upward.

The Russian Prisoner.

Prince Krapotkin in the Ninteenth Century.

The man is not beaten; he is not knocked down. No, we are civilized people, and the punished man is merely brought to the cellular quarter, and locked up in a cell. The cell is quite empty; it has neither bed nor bench. For the night a mattress is given, and the prisoner must lay his dress outside the cell, at the door. Bread and water are his food. As soon as the bell rings in the morning he is taken to a small covered yard, and there he must—walk. Nothing more; but our refined civilization has learned how to make a torture even of this natural exercise. At a formal slow pace, under the cries of un, deux, the patients must walk all the day long around the building. They walk for twenty minutes; then a rest follows. For ten minutes they must sit down immovable, each of them on his numbered stone, and walk again for twenty minutes; and so on through all the day, as long as the engines of the workshops are running. And the punishment does not last one day or two; it lasts for whole months. It is so cruel that the prisoner implores but one thing: "Let me return to the workshops." "Well, we shall see that in a fortnight or two," is the usual answer.

But the fortnight goes over, and the next one too, and the patient still continues to walk twelve hours every day. Then he [illegible] He begins to cry in his cell, [illegible] the warders. Then he becom[illegible] 'a rebel'—a dreadful qualification for any one who is in the hands of the brotherhood of warders—and as such he will rot in the cells, and walk throughout his life. If he assaults a warder, he will not be sent to New-Caledonia; he will still remain in his cell, and ever walk in the small building. One man a peasant, seeing no issue from this horrible situation, preferred to poison himself rather than live such a life—a terrible story which I shall some day tell in full.

A Just Rebuke.

Chicago News.

A party of western men went east together to attend ex-president Arthur's funeral. In this party were Frank Hatton, Judge Gresham and Robert T. Lincoln, previously members of Arthur's cabinet. While journeying eastward the conversation turned upon legislative matters in the state of Illinois, and some one expressed surprise that certain reputable Chicago lawyers had gone to Springfield to advocate a certain measure which was commonly believed to be corrupt. Mr. Lincoln defended these lawyers, claiming that in their capacity of attorneys they had a perfect right to advocate any measure. At this point Judge Gresham interrupted Lincoln in a most peremptory tone and manner.

"Stop right there, young man," he said, sternly: Stop right there! Your father never would have given utterance to such words, and I am shocked to hear his son utter so degrading a sentiment. Believe me it is this false estimate of the necessity for integrity which is largely responsible for the low grade of our public morals in this country at the present time."

This rebuke, uttered sternly, but in a friendly way, was appreciated by all who heard it and the incident is being recalled now that Judge Gresham is talked of for a presidential nomination.

Christianizing Arabs.

Christianity is always imperfect in its beginnings. The majority of Christians in Constantine's time would have seemed to modern missionaries mere worldlings; the converted Saxons were for centuries violent brutes, and the mass of Christians throughout the world are even now no better than indifferents. None the less it is true that the race which embraces Christianity, even nominally, rises with a bound out of its former position, and contains, in itself thenceforward the seed of a nobler and more lasting life. Christianity in a new people must develop civilization for itself not be smothered by it, still less be exhausted in the impossible effort to accrete to itself a civilization from the outside. Natives of India when they are Christians will be and ought to be Asiatics still—that is, as unlike English Rectors or English dissenting ministers as it is possible for men of the same creed to be, and the effort to squeeze them into those molds, not only wastes power but destroys the vitality of the original material. Mahommedan proselytism succeeds in India because it leaves its converts Asiatics still; Christian proselytism fails in India because it strives to make of its converts English middle-class men. That is the truth in a nutshell, whether we choose to accept it or not.—The Contemporary Review.

The senate amendment to the bill granting right of way through reservations to Duluth, Rainy Lake River & Southwestern railway was concurred in by the house.

Suiting the Crowd.

Atlanta Constitution.

When a man travels abroad and mixes with strangers and would be treated with civility, he should not do anything or say anything that runs against their opinions, their interests, or their prejudices. Zeb Vance said that one time away back when he was running for Congress against Holden he had to go over a mountain range and down into a valley where he had never been before. The humble people in that valley were almost cut off and hid out from the rest of the world, and especially from that side of the world in which Mr. Vance lived. He knew nothing about their politics or their religion.

"North Carolina is a curious State," said he. "Her religion is speckled and spotted like it had the measles. In one valley you will find the people all Episcopalians, however poor or primitive. The ancestors or first settlers came from England and brought that religion with them, and, as nobody moved in or moved out, their descendants kept the faith of their fathers. In another valley you will find them all Presbyterians, because the ancestors came from Scotland. In another they will be all Methodists or all Baptists, and every one of these separate communities will have an old patriarch working in the lead, and he is looked upon as the bell-wether of the flock. Now, it is necessary that a politician should know the religious faith of those with whom he is 'lectioneering' for votes. If he can't chime in with it exactly, he musn't say anything 'agin' it. "Now," said Vance, "when I got over into the valley to meet my appointment, I found about seventy-five of the humble sovereigns gathered at the cross roads where there was a little store and a wagon shop and a meeting house. They had on their home-made clothes and were standing around chawing tobacco and talking about 'craps' and waiting for me to come. I soon got familiar with them and got them in first rate humor, but as Holden was to come over in a day or two I wanted to fix things in some way so that he couldn't unfix them. Holden was a Methodist and I was afraid that those people were. I noticed an old man sitting off on a chunk and marking in the sand with his long walking-stick. He had on big brass spectacles, and his heavy shaggy eyebrows and big long nose indicated character, and so I set him down as the bell-wether of the flock. After a while I got up close to him and was about to address him when he gave a prayerful grunt and got up and braced himself on his stick and looking at me in a solemen voice, 'This is Mr. Vance I believe.' 'Yes, sir,' said I, giving him my hand. 'And I am Emanual Stenor,' said he, 'and I suppose you have come over the mounting to talk to my boys about their votes.' 'Yes, sir,' said I 'that is my principal business and I——.' 'Well Mr. Vance,' said he, interrupting me; 'before you proceed any further with that business, I would like to ax you a question or two.'

'Certainly, sir,' said I; 'certainly.' 'Well, Mr. Vance, allow me to ax you what church do you belong to?'

"Well, that was a sockdologer, and it come right straight at me, and for a moment I was demoralized, and as the boys had all gathered around to hear the old man put me through, I cleared my throat and said: 'That is a fair question, my friend; a fair question, and I will tell you about that. My grandfather came from England, and as over there the Established Church was Episcopalian, of course he was an Episcopalian.'

"I paused a moment to see the effect of this, but there was none that was favorable. The old man marked a little more in the sand and spit his tobacco away off on one side. So I continued: 'But my grandmother came from Scotland, and you know that John Knox left his mark upon that whole nation, and so, of course, she grew up a Presbyterian.' I paused again, but there was no sign, no awakening, no chord struck, and the old man marked some more on the sand. 'But, my friend, my father was born and grew up in a Methodist community, who were in this country, and converted by John Wesley, and, of course, he became Methodist.' I thought that now I had him sure, but I didn't. There was no sign of sympathy from him or the boys, and so I took my last shot. 'But my good old mother, sir, was born and raised a Baptist, and it's always been my opinion that a man has got to go under water before he can get to heaven.' A gleam of satisfaction spread all over the old man's face as he said: 'Give me your hand, Brother Vance. Boys, I told you so. I told you that he was a Baptist afore he come. He is the man. You can all vote for him, but Holden won't do nary time, for they do say he is one of those shoutin' cavortin' Methodists.'"

How Mr. and Mrs. Originated.

Oldham Chronicle.

In earlier times the ordinary man was simply William or John; that is to say, he had merely a Christian name without any kind of "handle" before it or surname after it. Some means of distinguishing one John or one William from another John or another William became necessary. Nicknames derived from a man's trade or from his dwelling place, or from some personal peculiarity, were tacked on to their Christian names and plain John became John Smith. As yet there were no "misters" in the land. Some John Smith accumulated more wealth than the bulk of his fellows—became, perhaps a landed proprietor or an employer of hired labor. Then he began to be called in the Norman French of the day the "maistre" of this place or that, of these work men or of those. In time the "maistre" or "maister" as it soon became, got tacked on before his name, and he became Maister Smith and his wife was Mistress Smith. But gradually the sense of possession was lost sight of, and the title was conferred upon any man who had attained social distinction of any kind, whether by mere possession of wealth or by holding some position of more or less consideration and importance. It is only within comparatively modern times that the term came to be considered an almost indispensable adjunct to every one's name when mentioned in ordinary conversation or writing. Maistress Smith soon became Mistress Smith. Exactly how and when the term got corrupted cannot be said. Maister Smith, [illegible]

CHAPTER I.

No one doubted that the Messingers were fortunate in possessing so charming a house as the Ness. It was built at the head of a narrow valley shut in by two hills, and beyond the sloping lawn stretched a wide expanse of sea. Mr. and Mrs. Messinger were simple unaffected people, devoted to their children and to Nancy, Mr. Messinger's young step-sister. They treated her with a kind of reverential tenderness, chiefly due to the fact that she was entirely dependent on them. And, in her turn, Nancy filled the place of a loving elder sister to the tribe of little ones, and of friend-in-chief to her gentle sister-in-law.

One sunny afternoon in early summer Mrs. Messinger sat at the open bay window of the drawing-room, reading. She was a placid little lady, seldom ruffled in mind or temper, and her sweet face and soft blue eyes were pleasant to contemplate. The door opened presently and Nancy came in rather slowly. Her expression was as sweet and gentle as her sister's, but her great dark eyes and firmly-cut mouth and chin bore evidence of much greater strength and individuality of character. She came over to the window and seated herself in a low basket-chair with an air of constraint.

"I have had a letter from Jim," she said.

"Yes; I saw it on the hall table," replied Mary, laying down her book. "Does he say when he is coming?"

"Yes; he came by the same steamer as the letter. He will be here tomorrow, I suppose."

"Nancy! really?" asked Mary, looking almost excited. "Are you not delighted?"

"I—I—have a confession to make," said Nancy, nervously, looking over the sea. "I thought I loved Jim when he went out to India five years ago, but I was only seventeen then and did not realize what love meant. We had known each other all our lives and I mistook our friendship for love."

"When did you make this terrible discovery?" asked Mary in distress.

"I have felt it dimly for a year, or two, but what made it all clear to me was Jim's last letter, saying that he was coming home. It filled me with dismay and fear. I felt that I simply could not meet him as his betrothed wife, so I wrote last mail and asked him to release me from my engagement."

"And what did he say?" Mary asked, anxiously.

"He is delighted," said Nancy, brightening. "He says that his feelings have changed, too."

"I always think of you in the future as his wife," sighed Mrs. Messinger, whose mind was slow to welcome new ideas. "Are you sure you are wise, dear?"

"Quite sure," Nancy answered, firmly. "And you will break the news gently to Ned, won't you? And please get reconciled to the arrangement soon. I feel so delightfully airy and free!"

"You never hinted at any change before," said Mary, a little reproachfully.

"I only knew it dimly, or I might have done it," replied Nancy, gently. "And since I wrote to him I have been silent to spare you any anxiety. I have felt it for the last three years in writing to him. My letters have never been from the present Nancy, but from the Nancy as I could remember her at seventeen. In fact, I have been 'writing down' all the time to the level of his intelligence as shown in his letters, and that level is painfully low. But happily, you see, he is as pleased to end our engagement as I am."

"He would be much more likely to object if he once saw you," said Mary, frankly, for these five years have done wonders with you in every way."

"O, he is so boyish he will think me strong-minded, and therefore dislike me," said Nancy, laughing. "And I did send him my last photograph, you know."

"Did you send that hideous thing?" asked Mary, in surprise.

"Well," confessed Nancy, rather reluctantly, "I believe I had some secret, unconfessed hope that he would offer to break off the engagement if he once saw that hideous caricature. But here comes Ned; I shall leave you to explain things to him."

A day or two later Nancy started for her usual afternoon walk along the cliffs. Since she had been released from the engagement which for some years past had been weighing on her spirits she had been in a state of exhilaration which surprised her. The world seemed wholly beautiful; life was an unmixed blessing; sin and poverty were rarer than she had thought. Walking quickly along, absorbed in these pleasant reflections, she did not hear footsteps behind her, and was surprised at hearing herself addressed. Looking up with startled eyes, she found a young man gazing at her with a puzzled, intent expression in his handsome face.

"You are Nancy, are you not?" he said doubtfully, holding out his hand.

"Why, Jim, is it really you?" asked Nancy, regarding him with surprise. "How you have grown! When did you come? and how did you find me?"

"I came two days ago," he said, reddening slightly at her first words. "Father was anxious that I should stay with him yesterday, but I called at the Ness this afternoon, and Mrs. Messinger told me where I should find you."

"Let us go home now, and then you can see them all," she said, turning back. "You will hardly know the children; they were such mites when you left."

"I certainly shall not if they have altered as much as you have done. I scarcely knew you," he said, looking down at her with intent black eyes, and inwardly comparing this beautiful, graceful girl with the gauche schoolgirl of five years since.

"I am older," she said, her heart sinking strangely. "He might disguise the fact that he finds me a disappointing failure," she thought, rather bitterly.

"Of course we are no longer boy and girl" he agreed. "But I hope we shall always be friends, Nancy? We have been that all our lives, haven't we?"

"Yes, let us be friends," she said. And thinking that he was eager to impress upon her that they were to be nothing more, she added. "And it was very wise to break off that childish engagement before you came home, wasn't it?"

"Y—yes," he said, doubtfully; "O yes, of course. Your feelings are naturally quite changed, I suppose, Nancy?"

"Naturally," she said, calmly, but thinking to herself that she was not so sure about that, after all.

"Naturally," he echoed, his eyes, however, becoming a little clouded. "Those boy and girl engagements never answer, do they? People develop so differently from what one would expect. Judging from your letters, I should have thought you utterly different from what I find you."

"You are equally different from what I should have expected you to be," she answered. "But let us put up with each other as we are; we need not see much of one another, you know."

They had just reached the gate leading into the garden of the Ness as she said this, and unconsciously she paused outside. Jim took this, coupled with her last words as a hint that he should go, and was more hurt than he cared to own.

"Good-afternoon," he said, stifly, raising his hat. "Your suggestion is a brilliant one and you need not fear that I shall trouble you with my presence more often than is necessary."

"You are coming in?" she said, looking at him with pained, pleading eyes.

"Thank you, no," he said, coldly. "I have seen Mrs. Messinger and your brother, and the children will keep."

"Good-bye," she said, turning in at the open gate in order that he should not see the rising tears.

"Good-bye," he said, freezingly, thinking her absolutely cruel in not shaking hands. She went up the little sloping avenue slowly and sadly, trying to crush back the tears which would rise to her eyes in spite of her efforts. She had succeeded before reaching the hall, and could answer her sister's surprised questions quite calmy.

"My dear Mary," she said, laughing gently, "you forget our changed relations. You must not expect him to come as often as he used. We have both come to the conclusion that we are quite different from what we had thought each other, and we have mutually agreed to see as little as possible of one another."

But when she reached her own room her self-control deserted her, and she cast herself down on the little couch, and wept long and bitterly.

"I hate him!" she said to herself, vindictively. "I do; I hate him! No, I don't; I believe I do the very opposite. Oh, I ought to be ashamed of myself to care for any one so utterly indifferent to me! He didn't even come in, and after all these years! He shall never know that I love him, never! However much I may suffer, I have enough pride to hide it. He shall think me as indifferent as he is himself."

Her mouth took a hard look, very foreign to its sweet lines, as she rose and bathed her face; and through all that evening she bore herself so bravely that no one guessed of the bitterness and wounded pride she thus smilingly hid.

CHAPTER II.

If Mrs. Messinger had been given to abstruse reflections, she might have asked herself how Jim and Nancy could possibly avoid each other, according to their compact when he was always coming to the Ness? For he came every day, and at all hours in the day, as he had been wont to do five years ago. There was one difference between this daily intercourse and that of the old times, and that a rather important one. Nancy lost all her gentle brightness when speaking to Jim, and was coldly, distantly polite to him. He saw this, and no doubt resented it, but Nancy never guessed that from his manner. He did everything he could to please her, but with no outward effect. Inwardly, she knew that her love for him was strengthening day by day, and that no power of hers could prevent it.

Jim was in a most trying position. He knew himself to be deeply in love with Nancy; his feelings for her had never died, as he had imagined; but with the knowledge of her as a sweet, noble woman came the knowledge that he had forfeited the right to tell her of his love. Her letters had been of a kind of which he had wearied when he ceased to be a youth. But, anxious that his own letters should not be uninteresting to her as hers were to him, he had written in a boyish, semi-frivolous strain, which he thought would be pleasing to her, as natural to herself. He could not understand how such a thoughtful, intelligent girl as he knew her to be, could have written such shallow, characterless letters. He supposed that she had not cared for him enough to write about what she felt interested in.

His position with regard to Nancy was much worse than that of any mere acquaintance. Every other man could tell her of his love while it seemed to him that he had lost this right by gladly agreeing to cancel their engagement. What made matters worse was that Nancy never appeared to dream that any other relation than the present constrained friendship was possible between them.

One afternoon he found her alone; a very rare occurrence, indeed; for she was very careful to avoid tete-a-tete with him.

"Shall we go into the garden?" she asked, thinking that anything was preferable to sitting stiffly in the drawing-room.

"I should like it immensely," he answered, rising, and opening the door with alacrity. "Will you take me to our old favorite seat? I have so often thought of those old days when I was feeling homesick, Nancy."

"I thought you were happy in India," she said, unresponsively.

"So I was, but I was homesick sometimes, especially when I first went out."

"This is the seat, is it not?" she asked, as if she might have easily forgotten the place where he had first told her of his love.

"Yes, this is it," he said, dreamily, looking out over the cliffs and sea.

"Mr. Penstone and I always quarrel over this view," said Nancy, anxious to prevent any embarrassing pause.

"Who is Mr. Penstone?" asked Jim, knitting his brows.

"He is our curate," she answered. "I always say that this is the finest view in the town, but Mr. Penstone maintains that the view from—"

"He must be an idiot, then!" burst in Jim, hotly; "the views are not to be compared!"

"You might have waited until I had mentioned the other," said Nancy, raising her eyebrows.

"I—I beg your pardon," he said, in utter confusion. "I thought you must mean—in fact, I understood you to say—that—that the view from the Beacon was finer than this."

"Yes, that is what Mr. Penstone declares," she said.

"What a hideous name the man has!" said Jim, irritably. "Of course you are devoted to him, Nancy?"

"Yes; he is so very good and clever and pleasant," she said, surprised at his vehemence.

"You are going to marry him, I suppose?" he said, with ill concealed anger.

"You forget yourself, I think," she answered, with gentle dignity. "And whom I may marry can be no possible concern of yours."

"O none, of course!" he said, furiously. "Only you might have told me the truth when you broke our engagement. It would have been just as easy to say that you were engaged to some one else at once."

"You are entirely mistaken in thinking that I am engaged to any one," said Nancy, calmly. "Mr. Penstone is married, and old enough to be my father. I may have obsolete ideas about engagements, but I was not aware that, even in these enlightened days, honorable women were in the habit of engaging themselves to two people at the same time. Shall we go in now, or have you any other interesting accusations to make?"

"Forgive me, Nancy; I was a fool!" pleaded Jim, earnestly. "I forget sometimes that I have not still the right to speak to you on such matters. For five years I have thought of you as my promised wife, and now that I am with you I cannot always realize that you are mine no longer. Say that you forgive me, Nancy, for my roughness and presumption."

"There is nothing to forgive," she said, coldly. "Let us go in now. The evenings are getting quite chilly."

After this quarrel Jim found it impossible to be on the same footing of friendship with Nancy. She was colder and more constrained than ever in her manner towards him; and though every day he felt more clearly that his love was hopeless, he found it more difficult to hide it from her. He was too proud and too manly to force his love on her, believing, as he did, that she disliked him; and at last, after a bitter struggle with himself, he determined to return to India at once.

He had never been to the Ness lately without some valid reason, and this new decision was so good an excuse for calling that he was not slow in taking advantage of it. He found Nancy in the garden, arrayed in a large white sun-bonnet, busily gathering strawberries for tea.

"You find it rather hot work, I am afraid," he said, looking down gravely into her flushed face. "Let me pick some now."

"Thank you," she answered, resigning the basket; "stooping so much has tired me a little."

He had soon filled the basket, and then, at his suggestion, they seated themselves under an old apple tree to rest. Nancy took off her sun-bonnet, and leant her bare head against the gnarled tree languidly. Jim watched her as she sat there, thinking that he would soon have only the memory of her sweet, pale face to bear with him.

"I came up this afternoon to say good-bye," he said, breaking the long silence rather abruptly.

Nancy started slightly, and raised her eyes to his in wonderment.

"Good-bye?" she said. "And where are you going?"

"I am going back to India; I have had enough of England."

"To India? At once? O why?" she asked, piteously, growing very white and looking at him with frightened eyes.

An expression of tremulous hope began to dawn on Jim's face as he saw how his words had affected her.

"Do you care, Nancy?" he asked, eagerly. "Would you rather I stayed?"

"My wishes have nothing to do with the matter," she said, rather bitterly.

"Indeed they have," he said, very earnestly—"Nancy, tell me, would you rather I stayed?"

"If I said 'yes,' would you stay?" she asked, quietly.

"Only if you love me," he said. "I cannot stay on and see you day after day, and feel that you will never care for me. May I stay Nancy?"

"If you like," she answered, shyly.

Jim took her in his arms and kissed her very tenderly. "There is one thing I want to know," he said, presently, looking down into her eyes; "when did you begin to love me, dear?"

"When did you begin to love me?" she replied, blushing under his gaze.

"I don't know; I have loved you all my life," he answered.

"I don't know, either," she said; "when I was about four or five I think."

"But, my darling, you broke off our engagement," he said, wonderingly.

"Yes; from your letters I thought I did not love you. They were so stupid —I—I mean—"

"Yes, they were stupid, but yours were silly, too, and I thought that was the kind of thing you liked," he said, a ray of intelligence drawing in his eyes.

"I thought you were terribly boyish, so wrote very 'young' letters, thinking they would interest you," she said, beginning to laugh.

"We both fell into the same mistake, then," he said, laughing, too, though a little regretfully. "O, Nancy! we might have had such a good time! How I wish I had the letters that you might have written!"

"Yes, it is a pity," she said. "But it is all right now, and I will write the sweetest letters to you in the future."

"Indeed you will not," he replied, in a calmly masterful tone. "I never mean to leave you again. We must look upon those letters as a part of the vast 'It-might-have-been.'"

There's Virtue in Onions and Beef.

Kansas City Star.

What is the most strengthening food for a convalescent? Well, you know, the beef-tea theory has been exploded. The most life-giving and digestible food that can be given to one just recovering from an illness is chopped beef. Just take a pound of the finest round of raw beef, cut off all the fat, slice two onions, and add pepper and salt. Then chop the onions and meat together, turning them over until both are reduced almost to a pulp. Then spread on slices of rye bread and eat as sandwiches. People talk about celery being a nervine, but let me tell you that there is nothing which quiets the nerves without bad results like onions. The use of them induces sleep, and much strength is obtained from them. That is my ideal food for those convalescing or for any one who is in a weak state of health.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Seasonable Hints.

The stomach of an average horse containt twelve quarts, while that of a man who weighs about one-eighth as much will hold three quarts.

Do not be in haste to have newly-hatched chicks eat, as they need nothing for twenty-four hours after leaving the shell.

Large quantities of potatoes continue to be shipped from the Canadian Provinces and Prince Edward Island to the United States.

Twenty-five years ago a Vermont farmer was content with 400 pounds of butter in a year from four cows. Now the same farmer has ten cows that average 300 pounds of butter a year each.—Springfield Republican.

You get very few farmers to listen to theoretical speeches, but hundreds will attend farmers' institutes, etc., where practical work, such as butter-making, is shown them.—Dairy World.

A correspondent of the Farmers' Magaizne states that the application of a mixture of one part coal tar and the same of wood tar to the sides and bottoms of water troughs will greatly assist in preventing any trouble with sheep.

Test the seed corn. Plant a few kernels from several ears in a box of earth, and place on top of cupboard in kitchen or dining room, and note what per cent. of them germinate.—Indiana Farmer.

Colonel P. D. Curtis says in his department of "Our Country Home" that a cow well broken to lead is worth $10 dollars more than a timid and unmanageable one. "She will make more milk, butter and good nature."

A Wisconsin correspondent of "The Western Farmer" says Wilson is yet considered the best variety by those who make money raising strawberries, and "our markets would be scantily supplied with sound fruit without it."

Plenty of whitewash should be used now, not only for the brighter appearance but also as a disenfectant. Hot whitewash on the inside of barns, stables, poultry-houses, and pig quarters will aid in preventing vermin and insects.

The average yield of wheat in the United States in 1887 was about twelve bushels per acre, and the average price about 68 cents per bushel. This is at the rate of only $8.16 per acre. Can farmers afford to raise wheat on such results?

If you and your neighbor can not agree upon a disputed point you can at least agree to submit the case to three disinterested neighbors and abide by their decision. That will save a lawsuit.

Here is a good, warm breakfast for forty fowls: Boil a heaping half-peck of potatoes, mash them, add one quart each of shorts and bran, a tablespoonful each of salt and pepper; add hot water enough to mix into a stiff dough.

Breeding-sows require food rich in the elements of bone and muscle. Corn is not suitable, as it causes an excess of fat, which is always detrimental in breeding-stock. Plenty of scalded clover hay in winter, with roots, and ground oats, shorts, and bran make the best food.

The evening's milk of cows is said to contain more solids than the morning's milk. The average of tests made in England shows that the evening's milk contained 14.3 per cent of solids and the morning's milk 13.4 per cent. Such being the case, it shows that milk should not be mixed with that of a previous milking, and the food may also cause a variation in the solids.

The most porous land will stand the drought best. The increased earliness of fruits and vegetables on well-drained land is well understood. They will be at least four days earlier on soil of the same condition and exposure where it is well drained. This means better prices, a larger yield, a longer season, and a better margin of profit.

Draught Horses to the Fore.

Notwithstanding the attention given to the breeding of trotting, racing and road horses, the demand for draught horses continues. Alluding to this subject a western paper observes that the draught horse interest is increasing all over the country. Importations are increasing beyond precedence notwithstanding the higher prices all over Europe for draught horses good enough for the American trade. The demand here calls for more horses and to supply all our importations are increasing, and many new importers have entered the field this year.

Bird Protection.

State Geologist Thompson of Indiana insists that farmers should protect their birds in every possible way. Everybody knows, he declares, that we have a hundred insects harmful to our fruit treess, vines, vegetables and cereals to where we had one thirty or forty years ago. Why? Largely because the birds are not one-tenth as numerous as they were then. You cannot have a healthy apple orchard without plenty of birds. The same may be said of cherry orchards, and the whole catalogue of fruit trees, vines and vegetables, as well as of the table cereals.

Bee-Keeping for Women.

One who has been very successful in the business says that apiculture is a most healthful, instructive, and pleasing occupation, and highly remunerative if managed judiciously. There are many ladies who are anxiously looking for some opening by which they can gain pecuniary independence. To all such bee-keeping offers special inducements and advantages. The capital required is small. The fear of stings need not deter any woman from trying to handle bees—for, by the use of gloves and veil, one can be thoroughly protected.

Care of Newly-Planted Trees.

People who stick trees in a narrow hole in the ground, and then give them no after-attention, are advised to read and heed this truthful excerpt from a floating paragraph on the subject: "The same care given to growing crops should be bestowed on newly-planted trees. The ground must be stirred and kept from baking to a brick-like mass of dry clay. In many instances this can be done by mulching, but good culture of the soil is far preferable if for no other reason than to prevent the harboring of pernicious insects and vermin that are ever on the out-look for the seclusion afforded by the mulch so good-naturedly placed among the trees.

Mantel Lambrequin.

For a mantel two yards long take one yard of velvet and cut in two lengthwise; fold one of these pieces in half and cut, making two strips one-half yard long, and another one yard in length. The short pieces are tacked around the ends of the shelf, then tack the longer strip also. Pleat one end of the long piece and fasten it up to the shelf under a handsome bow of ribbon. This drapes the center strip quite gracefully; place another bow of ribbon at the other end of it and trim all the lower edges with crescents and tassels. On one of the smaller pieces paint in Kensington painting a spray of pansies, and on the other carnations; the long strip has a large, graceful spray of Virginia creeper.

The Lard Fraud.

If the American people are willing to be cheated and swindled into buying for lard that which is not lard, simply because made by rich millionaires, who are able to employ skilled advocates in Congress and through the press, it is their own business; but no other people would allow themselves to be so fooled. It has come to this, that every article of food we use that can by any possibility be manipulated, is adulterated and made the means by which one man deliberately, and in broad daylight, robs his fellow man. Thus plainly talks Colman's Rural World, founded by and which still represents the views of Agricultural Commissioner Colman.

A Fickle Conductor.

A young lady of Hingham recently told a bit of experience that she had enjoyed in traveling. The lady in question is handsome and well educated, but fortune had not smiled upon her, and she has been engaged in a lawyer's office in the city for several years, which necessitated her traveling over the Old Colony Railroad. She had not been a regular patron of the road long before she formed the acquaintance of the conductor, or rather he became acquainted with her, and he was in the habit of passing her seat while collecting fares without taking her ticket. After he had been through the train he would return and sit down beside her and chat for a few minutes, but he forgot to ask her for her ticket. This she rather enjoyed, inasmuch as it saved her several dollars every month. Not long since she was married, and recently she happened to board the train upon which was the conductor in question. As he came to the seat in which she sat he stopped and remarked: "I hear that you have been married. Allow me to congratulate you. Ticket please." Then he passed on to meet and form the acquaintance of some other young lady who was not married. Such is life, and the conductor is still proud of the fact that he is a single man.—Boston Gazette.

Exercise Promotes Health.

Some persons seem to think that if a certain quantity of feed will keep a bird or animal in good condition, twice as much should give a corresponding gain. This is a grave mistake, for when fowls are induced to eat too much, and become excessively fat, they suffer correspondingly. Nearly all the diseases to which fowls are subject may be traced to overfeeding. A fowl that is constantly stuffed soon becomes disordered and deficient in digestion, thus wasting the excess of food. Exercise is the best antidote for overfed birds. Reduce the allowance, and compel them to work. Industry means a production of eggs and the fowls will also keep healthy by having something to do.—American Agriculturist.

To Husbands.

Husbands, look to the flour-barrel; see that it is well filled, that your wife will not have to tell you half a dozen times, any then go herself, or send one of the girls, to the nearest neighbors, to get flour enough to finish the next meal with, and then take a scolding because the dinner is late. See to the meat, too, that there is meat to cook, plenty of it, and the kind your wife can eat. I know of men who never look into the flour-barrel, who never see to the meat tub or the potatoes, or anything of the kind, and who will say, when told of it, that they think it so strange how soon a barrel of flour, or a side of bacon, or a few bushels of potatoes disappear. For my part I think that men ought to think of this before they marry a woman. I do not see how they can expect a good meal cooked with nothing to cook; and in all probability the wife has nothing to cook it in, if she had anything to cook. So look to this, husbands, and you will always find a good, wholesome and palatable meal set before you.—Farm and Fireside.

Girls Don't be in Haste to Wed.

Build up healthy bodies by good food, plenty of exercise and sleep. Learn all the useful household arts before you attempt to make a home. Cultivate your minds with the best books, that you may be able to teach your children much that school-training alone will never give you. Choose your amusements wisely, for youth must have pleasure, but need not waste itself in harmful frivolity. Above all, select your friends with care. Avoid girls who live only for fashion, flirtation and enjoyment, and use the privilege all women may claim to decline the acquaintance of men whose lives will not bear inspection by the innocent eyes of women. Let no delusion of wealth, rank, comeliness, or love, tempt you to trust your happiness to such a one. Watch and wait till the true lover comes, even if it be all your life, for single blessedness is far better than double misery and wrong. Spinsters are a very useful, happy, independent race, never more so than now, when all professions are open to them, and honor, fame and fortune are bravely won by many gifted members of the sisterhood. Set your standard right, and live up to it, sure that the reward will come, here or hereafter, and in the form best suited to your real needs.—Louisa M. Alcott.

Rat-Proof Cribs.

The best plan for making a rat-proof crib is to get cut-stone pillars four feet long, plant them two and a half feet deep in the ground, and over them invert tin pans, then build the crib on this foundation. Some years ago, in describing the uses of corrugated iron, we said that a crib might be made rat-proof by covering the floor with sheet-iron and lathing the sides with narrow strips of corrugated iron, but we are not aware that the manufacturers of corrugated iron furnish it in suitable shape. Coarse wire netting is now used as a substitute for plastering lath, and cribs lined with this, the floor being covered with sheet-iron, would be somewhat discouraging to rats. We have made a small granary rat-proof by simply nailing a piece of sheet-iron a foot wide around the lower edge of the wall next the floor. The floor is not covered with iron, but there is no place below upon which rats can stand to gnaw upward.

The Russian Prisoner.

Prince Krapotkin in the Nineteenth Century.

The man is not beaten; he is not knocked down. No, we are civilized people, and the punished man is merely brought to the cellular quarter, and locked up in a cell. The cell is quite empty; it has neither bed nor bench. For the night a mattress is given, and the prisoner must lay his dress outside the cell, at the door. Bread and water are his food. As soon as the bell rings in the morning he is taken to a small covered yard, and there he must—walk. Nothing more; but our refined civilization has learned how to make a torture even of this natural exercise. At a formal slow pace, under the cries of un, deux, the patients must walk all the day long around the building. They walk for twenty minutes; then a rest follows. For ten minutes they must sit down immovable, each of them on his numbered stone, and walk again for twenty minutes; and so on through all the day, as long as the engines of the workshops are running. And the punishment does not last one day or two; it lasts for whole months. It is so cruel that the prisoner implores but one thing: "Let me return to the workshops." "Well, we shall see that in a fortnight or two," is the usual answer.

But the fortnight goes over, and the next one too, and the patient still continues to walk twelve hours every day. Then he [illegible]. He begins to cry in his cell, [illegible] the warders. Then he becom[illegible] "a revel"—a dreadful qualification for any one who is in the hands of the brotherhood of warders—and as such he will rot in the cells, and walk throughout his life. If he assaults a warder, he will not be sent to New-Caledonia; he will still remain in his cell, and ever walk in the small building. One man a peasant, seeing no issue from this horrible situation, preferred to poison himself rather than live such a life—a terrible story which I shall some day tell in full.

A Just Rebuke.

Chicago News.

A party of western men went east together to attend ex-president Arthur's funeral. In this party were Frank Hatton, Judge Gresham and Robert T. Lincoln, previously members of Arthur's cabinet. While journeying eastward the conversation turned upon legislative matters in the state of Illinois, and some one expressed surprise that certain reputable Chicago lawyers had gone to Springfield to advocate a certain measure which was commonly believed to be corrupt. Mr. Lincoln defended these lawyers, claiming that in their capacity of attorneys they had a perfect right to advocate any measure. At this point Judge Gresham interrupted Lincoln in a most peremptory tone and manner.

"Stop right there, young man," he said, sternly: Stop right there! Your father never would have given utterance to such words, and I am shocked to hear his son utter so degrading a sentiment. Believe me it is this false estimate of the necessity for integrity which is largely responsible for the low grade of our public morals in this country at the present time."

This rebuke, uttered sternly, but in a friendly way, was appreciated by all who heard it and the incident is being recalled now that Judge Gresham is talked of for a presidential nomination.

Christianizing Arabs.

Christianity is always imperfect in its beginnings. The majority of Christians in Constantine's time would have seemed to modern missionaries mere worldlings; the converted Saxons were for centuries violent brutes, and the mass of Christians throughout the world are even now no better than indifferents. None the less it is true that the race which embraces Christianity, even nominally, rises with a bound out of its former position, and contains, in itself thenceforward the seed of a nobler and more lasting life. Christianity in a new people must develop civilization for itself not be smothered by it, still less be exhausted in the impossible effort to accrete to itself a civilization from the outside. Natives of India when they are Christians will be and ought to be Asiatics still—that is, as unlike English Rectors or English dissenting ministers as it is possible for men of the same creed to be, and the effort to squeeze them into those molds, not only wastes power but destroys the vitality of the original material. Mahommedan proselytism succeeds in India because it leaves its converts Asiatics still; Christian proselytism fails in India because it strives to make of its converts English middle-class men. That is the truth in a nutshell, whether we choose to accept it or not.—The Contemporary Review.

Suiting the Crowd.

Atlanta Constitution.

When a man travels abroad and mixes with strangers and would be treated with civility, he should not do anything or say anything that runs against their opinions, their interests, or their prejudices. Zeb Vance said that one time away back when he was running for Congress against Holden he had to go over a mountain range and down into a valley where he had never been before. The humble people in that valley were almost cut off and hid out from the rest of the world, and especially from that side of the world in which Mr. Vance lived. He knew nothing about their politics or their religion.

"North Carolina is a curious State," said he. "Her religion is speckled and spotted like it had the measles. In one valley you will find the people all Episcopalians, however poor or primitive. The ancestors or first settlers came from England and brought that religion with them, and, as nobody moved in or moved out, their descendants kept the faith of their fathers. In another valley you will find them all Presbyterians, because the ancestors came from Scotland. In another they will be all Methodists or all Baptists, and every one of these separate communities will have an old patriarch working in the lead, and he is looked upon as the bell-wether of the flock. Now, it is necessary that a politician should know the religious faith of those with whom he is 'lectioneering' for votes. If he can't chime in with it exactly, he musn't say anything 'agin' it. "Now," said Vance, "when I got over into the valley to meet my appointment, I found about seventy-five of the humble sovereigns gathered at the cross roads where there was a little store and a wagon shop and a meeting house. They had on their home-made clothes and were standing around chawing tobacco and talking about 'craps' and waiting for me to come. I soon got familiar with them and got them in first rate humor, but as Holden was to come over in a day or two I wanted to fix things in some way so that he couldn't unfix them. Holden was a Methodist and I was afraid that those people were. I noticed an old man sitting off on a chunk and marking in the sand with his long walking-stick. He had on big brass spectacles, and his heavy shaggy eyebrows and big long nose indicated character, and so I set him down as the bell-wether of the flock. After a while I got up close to him and was about to address him when he gave a prayerful grunt and got up and braced himself on his stick and looking at me in a solemn voice, 'This is Mr. Vance I believe.' 'Yes, sir,' said I, giving him my hand. 'And I am Emanual Stenor,' said he, 'and I suppose you have come over the mounting to talk to my boys about their votes.' 'Yes, sir,' said I 'that is my principal business and I——.' 'Well Mr. Vance,' said he, interrupting me; 'before you proceed any further with that business, I would like to ax you a question or two.'

'Certainly, sir,' said I; 'certainly.' 'Well, Mr. Vance, allow me to ax you what church do you belong to?'

"Well, that was a sockdologer, and it come right straight at me, and for a moment I was demoralized, and as the boys had all gathered around to hear the old man put me through, I cleared my throat and said: 'That is a fair question, my friend; a fair question, and I will tell you about that. My grandfather came from England, and as over there the Established Church was Episcopalian, of course he was an Episcopalian.'

"I paused a moment to see the effect of this, but there was none that was favorable. The old man marked a little more in the sand and spit his tobacco away off on one side. So I continued: 'But my grandmother came from Scotland, and you know that John Knox left his mark upon that whole nation, and so, of course, she grew up a Presbyterian.' I paused again, but there was no sign, no awakening, no chord struck, and the old man marked some more on the sand. 'But, my friend, my father was born and grew up in a Methodist community, who were in this country, and converted by John Wesley, and, of course, he became Methodist.' I thought that now I had him sure, but I didn't. There was no sign of sympathy from him or the boys, and so I took my last shot. 'But my good old mother, sir, was born and raised a Baptist, and it's always been my opinion that a man has got to go under water before he can get to heaven.' A gleam of satisfaction spread all over the old man's face as he said: 'Give me your hand, Brother Vance. Boys, I told you so. I told you that he was a Baptist afore he come. He is the man. You can all vote for him, but Holden won't do nary time, for they do say he is one of those shoutin' cavortin' Methodists.'"

How Mr. and Mrs. Originated.

Oldham Chronicle.

In earlier times the ordinary man was simply William or John; that is to say, he had merely a Christian name without any kind of "handle" before it or surname after it. Some means of distinguishing one John or one William from another John or another William became necessary. Nicknames derived from a man's trade or from his dwelling place, or from some personal peculiarity, were tacked on to their Christian names and plain John became John Smith. As yet there were no "misters" in the land. Some John Smith accumulated more wealth than the bulk of his fellows—became, perhaps a landed proprietor or an employer of hired labor. Then he began to be called in the Norman French of the day the "maistre" of this place or that, of these workmen or of those. In time the "maistre" or "maister" as it soon became, got tacked on before his name, and he became Maister Smith and his wife was Mistress Smith. But gradually the sense of possession was lost sight of, and the title was conferred upon any man who had attained social distinction of any kind, whether by mere possession of wealth or by holding some position of more or less consideration and importance. It is only within comparatively modern times that the term came to be considered an almost indispensable adjunct to every one's name when mentioned in ordinary conversation or writing. Maistress Smith soon became Mistress Smith. Exactly how and when the term got corrupted cannot be said. Maister Smith, [illegible]

BY MUTUAL CONSENT.

CHAPTER I.

No one doubted that the Messingers were fortunate in possessing so charming a house as the Ness. It was built at the head of a narrow valley shut in by two hills, and beyond the sloping lawn stretched a wide expanse of sea.

Mr. and Mrs. Messinger were simple unaffected people, devoted to their children and to Nancy, Mr. Messinger's young step-sister. They treated her with a kind of reverential tenderness, chiefly due to the fact that she was entirely dependent on them. And, in her turn, Nancy filled the place of a loving elder sister to the tribe of little ones, and of friend-in-chief to her gentle sister-in-law.

One sunny afternoon in early summer Mrs. Messinger sat at the open bay window of the drawing-room, reading. She was a placid little lady, seldom ruffled in mind or temper, and her sweet face and soft blue eyes were pleasant to contemplate. The door opened presently and Nancy came in rather slowly. Her expression was as sweet and gentle as her sister's, but her great dark eyes and firmly-cut mouth and chin bore evidence of much greater strength and individuality of character. She came over to the window and seated herself in a low basket-chair with an air of constraint.

"I have had a letter from Jim," she said.

"Yes; I saw it on the hall table," replied Mary, laying down her book. "Does he say when he is coming?"

"Yes; he came by the same steamer as the letter. He will be here tomorrow, I suppose."

"Nancy! really?" asked Mary, looking almost excited. "Are you not delighted?"

"I—I—have a confession to make," said Nancy, nervously, looking over the sea. "I thought I loved Jim when he went out to India five years ago, but I was only seventeen then and did not realize what love meant. We had known each other all our lives and I mistook our friendship for love."

"When did you make this terrible discovery?" asked Mary in distress.

"I have felt it dimly for a year or two, but what made it all clear to me was Jim's last letter, saying that he was coming home. It filled me with dismay and fear. I felt that I simply could not meet him as his betrothed wife, so I wrote last mail and asked him to release me from my engagement."

"And what did he say?" Mary asked, anxiously.

"He is delighted," said Nancy, brightening. "He says that his feelings have changed, too."

"I always think of you in the future as his wife," sighed Mrs. Messinger, whose mind was slow to welcome new ideas. "Are you sure you are wise, dear?"

"Quite sure," Nancy answered, firmly. "And you will break the news gently to Ned, won't you? And please get reconciled to the arrangement soon. I feel so delightfully airy and free!"

"You never hinted at any change before," said Mary, a little reproachfully.

"I only knew it dimly, or I might have done it," replied Nancy, gently. "And since I wrote to him I have been silent to spare you any anxiety. I have felt it for the last three years in writing to him. My letters have never been from the present Nancy, but from the Nancy as I could remember her at seventeen. In fact, I have been 'writing down' all the time to the level of his intelligence as shown in his letters, and that level is painfully low. But happily, you see, he is as pleased to end our engagement as I am."

"He would be much more likely to object if he once saw you," said Mary, frankly, for these five years have done wonders with you in every way."

"O, he is so boyish he will think me strong-minded, and therefore dislike me," said Nancy, laughing. "And I did send him my last photograph, you know."

"Did you send that hideous thing?" asked Mary, in surprise.

"Well," confessed Nancy, rather reluctantly, "I believe I had some secret, unconfessed hope that he would offer to break off the engagement if he once saw that hideous caricature. But here comes Ned; I shall leave you to explain things to him."

A day or two later Nancy started for her usual afternoon walk along the cliffs. Since she had been released from the engagement which for some years past had been weighing on her spirits she had been in a state of exhilaration which surprised her. The world seemed wholly beautiful; life was an unmixed blessing; sin and poverty were rarer than she had thought. Walking quickly along, absorbed in these pleasant reflections, she did not hear footsteps behind her, and was surprised at hearing herself addressed. Looking up with startled eyes, she found a young man gazing at her with a puzzled, intent expression in his handsome face.

"You are Nancy, are you not?" he said doubtfully, holding out his hand.

"Why, Jim, is it really you?" asked Nancy, regarding him with surprise. "How you have grown! When did you come? and how did you find me?"

"I came two days ago," he said, reddening slightly at her first words. "Father was anxious that I should stay with him yesterday, but I called at the Ness this afternoon, and Mrs. Messinger told me where I should find you."

"Let us go home now, and then you can see them all," she said, turning back. "You will hardly know the children; they were such mites when you left."

"I certainly shall not if they have altered as much as you have done. I scarcely knew you," he said, looking down at her with intent black eyes, and inwardly comparing this beautiful, graceful girl with the gauche school-girl of five years since.

"I am older," she said, her heart sinking strangely. "He might disguise the fact that he finds me a disappointing failure," she thought, rather bitterly.

"Of course we are no longer boy and girl," he agreed. "But I hope we shall always be friends, Nancy? We have been that all our lives, haven't we?"

"Yes, let us be friends," she said. And thinking that he was eager to impress upon her that they were to be nothing more, she added. "And it was very wise to break off that childish engagement before you came home, wasn't it?"

"Y—yes," he said, doubtfully; "O yes, of course. Your feelings are naturally quite changed, I suppose, Nancy?"

"Naturally," she said, calmly, but thinking to herself that she was not so sure about that, after all.

"Naturally," he echoed, his eyes, however, becoming a little clouded. "Those boy and girl engagements never answer, do they? People develop so differently from what one would expect. Judging from your letters, I should have thought you utterly different from what I find you."

"You are equally different from what I should have expected you to be," she answered. "But let us put up with each other as we are; we need not see much of one another, you know."

They had just reached the gate leading into the garden of the Ness as she said this, and unconsciously she paused outside. Jim took this, coupled with her last words as a hint that he should go, and was more hurt than he cared to own.

"Good-afternoon," he said, stifly, raising his hat. "Your suggestion is a brilliant one and you need not fear that I shall trouble you with my presence more often than is necessary."

"You are coming in?" she said, looking at him with pained, pleading eyes.

"Thank you, no," he said, coldly. "I have seen Mrs. Messinger and your brother, and the children will keep."

"Good-bye," she said, turning in at the open gate in order that he should not see the rising tears.

"Good-bye," he said, freezingly, thinking her absolutely cruel in not shaking hands. She went up the little sloping avenue slowly and sadly, trying to crush back the tears which would rise to her eyes in spite of her efforts. She had succeeded before reaching the hall, and could answer her sister's surprised questions quite calmy.

"My dear Mary," she said, laughing gently, "you forget our changed relations. You must not expect him to come as often as he used. We have both come to the conclusion that we are quite different from what we had thought each other, and we have mutually agreed to see as little as possible of one another."

But when she reached her own room her self-control deserted her, and she cast herself down on the little couch, and wept long and bitterly.

"I hate him!" she said to herself, vindictively. "I do; I hate him! No; I don't; I believe I do the very opposite. Oh, I ought to be ashamed of myself to care for any one so utterly indifferent to me! He didn't even come in, and after all these years! He shall never know that I love him, never! However much I may suffer, I have enough pride to hide it. He shall think me as indifferent as he is himself."

Her mouth took a hard look, very foreign to its sweet lines, as she rose and bathed her face; and through all that evening she bore herself so bravely that no one guessed of the bitterness and wounded pride she thus smilingly hid.

CHAPTER II.

If Mrs. Messinger had been given to abstruse reflections, she might have asked herself how Jim and Nancy could possibly avoid each other, according to their compact when he was always coming to the Ness? For he came every day, and at all hours in the day, as he had been wont to do five years ago. There was one difference between this daily intercourse and that of the old times, and that a rather important one. Nancy lost all her gentle brightness when speaking to Jim, and was coldly, distantly polite to him. He saw this, and no doubt resented it, but Nancy never guessed that from his manner. He did everything he could to please her, but with no outward effect. Inwardly, she knew that her love for him was strengthening day by day, and that no power of hers could prevent it.

Jim was in a most trying position. He knew himself to be deeply in love with Nancy; his feelings for her had never died, as he had imagined; but with the knowledge of her as a sweet, noble woman came the knowledge that he had forfeited the right to tell her of his love. Her letters had been of a kind of which he had wearied when he ceased to be a youth. But, anxious that his own letters should not be uninteresting to her as hers were to him, he had written in a boyish, semi-frivolous strain, which he thought would be pleasing to her, as natural to herself. He could not understand how such a thoughtful, intelligent girl as he knew her to be, could have written such shallow, characterless letters. He supposed that she had not cared for him enough to write about what she felt interested in.

His position with regard to Nancy was much worse than that of any mere acquaintance. Every other man could tell her of his love while it seemed to him that he had lost this right by gladly agreeing to cancel their engagement. What made matters worse was that Nancy never appeared to dream that any other relation than the present constrained friendship was possible between them.

One afternoon he found her alone; a very rare occurrence, indeed; for she was very careful to avoid tete-a-tete with him.

"Shall we go into the garden?" she asked, thinking that anything was preferable to sitting stiffly in the drawing-room.

"I should like it immensely," he answered, rising, and opening the door with alacrity. "Will you take me to our old favorite seat? I have so often thought of those old days when I was feeling homesick, Nancy."

"I thought you were happy in India;" she said, unresponsively.

"So I was, but I was homesick sometimes, especially when I first went out."

"This is the seat, is it not?" she asked, as if she might have easily forgotten the place where he had first told her of his love.

"Yes, this is it," he said, dreamily, looking out over the cliffs and sea.

"Mr. Penstone and I always quarrel over this view," said Nancy, anxious to prevent any embarrassing pause.

"Who is Mr. Penstone?" asked Jim, knitting his brows.

"He is our curate," she answered. "I always say that this is the finest view in the town, but Mr. Penstone maintains that the view from—"

"He must be an idiot, then!" burst in Jim, hotly; "the views are not to be compared!"

"You might have waited until I had mentioned the other," said Nancy, raising her eyebrows.

"I—I beg your pardon," he said, in utter confusion. "I thought you must mean—In fact, I understood you to say—that—that the view from the Beacon was finer than this."

"Yes, that is what Mr. Penstone declares," she said.

"What a hideous name the man has!" said Jim, irritably. "Of course you are devoted to him, Nancy?"

"Yes; he is so very good and clever and pleasant," she said, surprised at his vehemence.

"You are going to marry him, I suppose?" he said, with ill concealed anger.

"You forget yourself, I think," she answered, with gentle dignity. "And whom I may marry can be no possible concern of yours."

"O none, of course!" he said, furiously. "Only you might have told me the truth when you broke our engagement. It would have been just as easy to say that you were engaged to some one else at once."

"You are entirely mistaken in thinking that I am engaged to any one," said Nancy, calmly. "Mr. Penstone is married, and old enough to be my father. I may have obsolete ideas about engagements, but I was not aware that, even in these enlightened days, honorable women were in the habit of engaging themselves to two people at the same time. Shall we go in now, or have you any other interesting accusations to make?"

"Forgive me, Nancy; I was a fool!" pleaded Jim, earnestly. "I forget sometimes that I have not still the right to speak to you on such matters. For five years I have thought of you as my promised wife, and now that I am with you I cannot always realize that you are mine no longer. Say that you forgive me, Nancy, for my roughness and presumption."

"There is nothing to forgive," she said, coldly. "Let us go in now. The evenings are getting quite chilly."

After this quarrel Jim found it impossible to be on the same footing of friendship with Nancy. She was colder and more constrained than ever in her manner towards him; and though every day he felt more clearly that his love was hopeless, he found it more difficult to hide it from her. He was too proud and too manly to force his love on her, believing, as he did, that she disliked him; and at last, after a bitter struggle with himself, he determined to return to India at once.

He had never been to the Ness lately without some valid reason, and this new decision was so good an excuse for calling that he was not slow in taking advantage of it. He found Nancy in the garden, arrayed in a large white sun-bonnet, busily gathering strawberries for tea.

"You find it rather hot work, I am afraid," he said, looking down gravely into her flushed face. "Let me pick some now."

"Thank you," she answered, resigning the basket; "stooping so much has tired me a little."

He had soon filled the basket, and then, at his suggestion, they seated themselves under an old apple tree to rest. Nancy took off her sun-bonnet, and leant her bare head against the gnarled tree languidly. Jim watched her as she sat there, thinking that he would soon have only the memory of her sweet, pale face to bear with him.

"I came up this afternoon to say good-bye," he said, breaking the long silence rather abruptly.

Nancy started slightly, and raised her eyes to his in wonderment.

"Good-bye?" she said. "And where are you going?"

"I am going back to India; I have had enough of England."

"To India? At once? O why?" she asked, piteously, growing very white and looking at him with frightened eyes.

An expression of tremulous hope began to dawn on Jim's face as he saw how his words had affected her.

"Do you care, Nancy?" he asked, eagerly. "Would you rather I stayed?"

"My wishes have nothing to do with the matter," she said, rather bitterly.

"Indeed they have," he said, very earnestly—"Nancy, tell me, would you rather I stayed?"

"If I said 'yes,' would you stay?" she asked, quietly.

"Only if you love me," he said. "I cannot stay on and see you day after day, and feel that you will never care for me. May I stay Nancy?"

"If you like," she answered, shyly.

Jim took her in his arms and kissed her very tenderly. "There is one thing I want to know," he said, presently, looking down into her eyes; "when did you begin to love me, dear?"

"When did you begin to love me?" she replied, blushing under his gaze.

"I don't know; I have loved you all my life," he answered.

"I don't know, either," she said; "when I was about four or five I think."

"But, my darling, you broke off our engagement," he said, wonderingly.

"Yes; from your letters I thought I did not love you. They were so stupid —I—I mean—"

"Yes, they were stupid, but yours were silly, too, and I thought that was the kind of thing you liked," he said, a ray of intelligence drawing in his eyes.

"I thought you were terribly boyish, so wrote very 'young' letters, thinking they would interest you," she said, beginning to laugh.

"We both fell into the same mistake, then," he said, laughing, too, though a little regretfully. "O, Nancy! we might have had such a good time! How I wish I had the letters that you might have written!"

"Yes, it is a pity," she said. "But it is all right now, and I will write the sweetest letters to you in the future."

"Indeed you will not," he replied, in a calmly masterful tone. "I never mean to leave you again. We must look upon those letters as a part of the vast 'It-might-have-been.'"

There's Virtue in Onions and Beef.

Kansas City Star.

What is the most strengthening food for a convalescent? Well, you know, the beef-tea theory has been exploded. The most life-giving and digestible food that can be given to one just recovering from an illness is chopped beef. Just take a pound of the finest round of raw beef, cut off all the fat, slice two onions, and add pepper and salt. Then chop the onions and meat together, turning them over until both are reduced almost to a pulp. Then spread on slices of rye bread and eat as sandwiches. People talk about celery being a nervine, but let me tell you that there is nothing which quiets the nerves without bad results like onions. The use of them induces sleep, and much strength is obtained from them. That is my ideal food for those convalescing or for any one who is in a weak state of health.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Seasonable Hints.

The stomach of an average horse containt twelve quarts, while that of a man who weighs about one-eighth as much will hold three quarts.

Do not be in haste to have newly-hatched chicks eat, as they need nothing for twenty-four hours after leaving the shell.

Large quantities of potatoes continue to be shipped from the Canadian Provinces and Prince Edward Island to the United States.

Twenty-five years ago a Vermont farmer was content with 400 pounds of butter in a year from four cows. Now the same farmer has ten cows that average 300 pounds of butter a year each.—Springfield Republican.

You get very few farmers to listen to theoretical speeches, but hundreds will attend farmers' institutes, etc., where practical work, such as butter-making, is shown them.—Dairy World.

A correspondent of the Farmers' Magaizne states that the application of a mixture of one part coal tar and the same of wood tar to the sides and bottoms of water troughs will greatly assist in preventing any trouble with sheep.

Test the seed corn. Plant a few kernels from several ears in a box of earth, and place on top of cupboard in kitchen or dining room, and note what per cent. of them germinate.—Indiana Farmer.

Colonel P. D. Curtis says in his department of "Our Country Home" that a cow well broken to lead is worth $10 dollars more than a timid and unmanageable one. "She will make more milk, butter and good nature."

A Wisconsin correspondent of "The Western Farmer" says Wilson is yet considered the best variety by those who make money raising strawberries, and "our markets would be scantily supplied with sound fruit without it."

Plenty of whitewash should be used now, not only for the brighter appearance but also as a disenfectant. Hot whitewash on the inside of barns, stables, poultry-houses, and pig quarters will aid in preventing vermin and insects.

The average yield of wheat in the United States in 1887 was about twelve bushels per acre, and the average price about 68 cents per bushel. This is at the rate of only $8.16 per acre. Can farmers afford to raise wheat on such results?

If you and your neighbor can not agree upon a disputed point you can at least agree to submit the case to three disinterested neighbors and abide by their decision. That will save a lawsuit.

Here is a good, warm breakfast for forty fowls: Boil a heaping half-peck of potatoes, mash them, add one quart each of shorts and bran, a tablespoonful each of salt and pepper; add hot water enough to mix into a stiff dough.

Breeding-sows require food rich in the elements of bone and muscle. Corn is not suitable, as it causes an excess of fat, which is always detrimental in breeding-stock. Plenty of scalded clover-hay in winter, with roots, and ground oats, shorts, and bran make the best food.

The evening's milk of cows is said to contain more solids than the morning's milk. The average of tests made in England shows that the evening's milk contained 14.3 per cent of solids and the morning's milk 13.4 per cent. Such being the case, it shows that milk should not be mixed with that of a previous milking, and the food may also cause a variation in the solids.

The most porous land will stand the drought best. The increased earliness of fruits and vegetables on well-drained land is well understood. They will be at least four days earlier on soil of the same condition and exposure where it is well drained. This means better prices, a larger yield, a longer season, and a better margin of profit.

Draught Horses to the Fore.

Notwithstanding the attention given to the breeding of trotting, racing and road horses, the demand for draught horses continues. Alluding to this subject a western paper observes that the draught horse interest is increasing all over the country. Importations are increasing beyond precedence notwithstanding the higher prices all over Europe for draught horses good enough for the American trade. The demand here calls for more horses and to supply all our importations are increasing, and many new importers have entered the field this year.

Bird Protection.

State Geologist Thompson of Indiana insists that farmers should protect their birds in every possible way. Everybody knows, he declares, that we have a hundred insects harmful to our fruit treess, vines, vegetables and cereals to where we had one thirty or forty years ago. Why? Largely because the birds are not one-tenth as numerous as they were then. You cannot have a healthy apple orchard without plenty of birds. The same may be said of cherry orchards, and the whole catalogue of fruit trees, vines and vegetables, as well as of the table cereals.

Bee-Keeping for Women.

One who has been very successful in the business says that apiculture is a most healthful, instructive, and pleasing occupation, and highly remunerative if managed judiciously. There are many ladies who are anxiously looking for some opening by which they can gain pecuniary independence. To all such bee-keeping offers special inducements and advantages. The capital required is small. The fear of stings need not deter any woman from trying to handle bees—for by the use of gloves and veil, one can be thoroughly protected.

Care of Newly-Planted Trees.

People who stick trees in a narrow hole in the ground, and then give them no after-attention, are advised to read and heed this truthful excerpt from a floating paragraph on the subject: "The same care given to growing crops should be bestowed on newly-planted trees. The ground must be stirred and kept from baking to a brick-like mass of dry clay. In many instances this can be done by mulching, but good culture of the soil is far preferable if for no other reason than to prevent the harboring of pernicious insects and vermin that are ever on the out-look for the seclusion afforded by the mulch so good-naturedly placed among the trees.

Mantel Lambrequin.

For a mantel two yards long take one yard of velvet and cut in two lengthwise; fold one of these pieces in half and cut, making two strips one-half yard long, and another one yard in length. The short pieces are tacked around the ends of the shelf, then tack the longer strip also. Pleat one end of the long piece and fasten it up to the shelf under a handsome bow of ribbon. This drapes the center strip quite gracefully; place another bow of ribbon at the other end of it and trim all the lower edges with crescents and tassels. On one of the smaller pieces paint in Kensington painting a spray of pansies, and on the other carnations; the long strip has a large, graceful spray of Virginia creeper.

The Lard Fraud.

If the American people are willing to be cheated and swindled into buying for lard that which is not lard, simply because made by rich millionaires, who are able to employ skilled advocates in Congress and through the press, it is their own, business; but no other people would allow themselves to be so fooled. It has come to this, that every article of food we use that can by any possibility be manipulated, is adulterated and made the means by which one man deliberately, and in broad daylight, robs his fellow man. Thus plainly talks Colman's Rural World, founded by and which still represents the views of Agricultural Commissioner Colman.

A Fickle Conductor.

A young lady of Hingham recently told a bit of experience that she had enjoyed in traveling. The lady in question is handsome and well educated, but fortune had not smiled upon her, and she has been engaged in a lawyer's office in the city for several years, which necessitated her traveling over the Old Colony Railroad. She had not been a regular patron of the road long before she formed the acquaintance of the conductor, or rather he became acquainted with her, and he was in the habit of passing her seat while collecting fares without taking her ticket. After he had been through the train he would return and sit down beside her and chat for a few minutes, but he forgot to ask her for her ticket. This she rather enjoyed, inasmuch as it saved her several dollars every month. Not long since she was married, and recently she happened to board the train upon which was the conductor in question. As he came to the seat in which she sat he stopped and remarked: "I hear that you have been married. Allow me to congratulate you. Ticket please." Then he passed on to meet and form the acquaintance of some other young lady who was not married. Such is life, and the conductor is still proud of the fact that he is a single man.—Boston Gazette.

Exercise Promotes Health.

Some persons seem to think that if a certain quantity of feed will keep a bird or animal in good condition, twice as much should give a corresponding gain. This is a grave mistake, for when fowls are induced to eat too much, and become excessively fat, they suffer correspondingly. Nearly all the diseases to which fowls are subject may be traced to over-feeding. A fowl that is constantly stuffed soon becomes disordered and deficient in digestion, thus wasting the excess of food. Exercise is the best antidote for overfed birds. Reduce the allowance, and compel them to work. Industry means a production of eggs and the fowls will also keep healthy by having something to do.—American Agriculturist.

To Husbands.

Husbands, look to the flour-barrel; see that it is well filled, that your wife will not have to tell you half a dozen times, any then go herself, or send one of the girls, to the nearest neighbors, to get flour enough to finish the next meal with, and then take a scolding because the dinner is late. See to the meat, too, that there is meat to cook, plenty of it, and the kind your wife can eat. I know of men who never look into the flour-barrel, who never see to the meat tub or the potatoes, or anything of the kind, and who will say, when told of it, that they think it so strange how soon a barrel of flour, or a side of bacon, or a few bushels of potatoes disappear. For my part I think that men ought to think of this before they marry a woman. I do not see how they can expect a good meal cooked with nothing to cook, and in all probability the wife has nothing to cook it in, if she had anything to cook. So look to this, husbands, and you will always find a good, wholesome and palatable meal set before you.—Farm and Fireside.

Girls Don't be in Haste to Wed.

Build up healthy bodies by good food, plenty of exercise and sleep. Learn all the useful household arts before you attempt to make a home. Cultivate your minds with the best books, that you may be able to teach your children much that school-training alone will never give you. Choose your amusements wisely, for youth must have pleasure, but need not waste itself in harmful frivolity. Above all, select your friends with care. Avoid girls who live only for fashion, flirtation and enjoyment, and use the privilege all women may claim to decline the acquaintance of men whose lives will not bear inspection by the innocent eyes of women. Let no delusion of wealth, rank, comeliness, or love, tempt you to trust your happiness to such a one. Watch and wait till the true lover comes, even if it be all your life; for single blessedness is far better than double misery and wrong. Spinsters are a very useful, happy, independent race, never more so than now, when all professions are open to them, and honor, fame and fortune are bravely won by many gifted members of the sisterhood. Set your standard right, and live up to it, sure that the reward will come, here or hereafter, and in the form best suited to your real needs.—Louisa M. Alcott.

Rat-Proof Cribs.

The best plan for making a rat-proof crib is to get cut-stone pillars four feet long, plant them two and a half feet deep in the ground, and over them invert tin pans, then build the crib on this foundation. Some years ago, in describing the uses of corrugated iron, we said that a crib might be made rat-proof by covering the floor with sheet-iron and lathing the sides with narrow strips of corrugated iron, but we are not aware that the manufacturers of corrugated iron furnish it in suitable shape. Coarse wire netting is now used as a substitute for plastering lath, and cribs lined with this, the floor being covered with sheet-iron, would be somewhat discouraging to rats. We have made a small granary rat-proof by simply nailing a piece of sheet-iron a foot wide around the lower edge of the wall next the floor. The floor is not covered with iron, but there is no place below upon which rats can stand to gnaw upward.

The Russian Prisoner.

Prince Krapotkin in the Ninteenth Century.

The man is not beaten; he is not knocked down. No, we are civilized people, and the punished man is merely brought to the cellular quarter, and locked up in a cell. The cell is quite empty; it has neither bed nor bench. For the night a mattress is given, and the prisoner must lay his dress outside the cell, at the door. Bread and water are his food. As soon as the bell rings in the morning he is taken to a small covered yard, and there he must—walk. Nothing more; but our refined civilization has learned how to make a torture even of this natural exercise. At a formal slow pace, under the cries of un, deux, the patients must walk all the day long around the building. They walk for twenty minutes; then a rest follows. For ten minutes they must sit down immovable, each of them on his numbered stone, and walk again for twenty minutes; and so on through all the day, as long as the engines of the workshops are running. And the punishment does not last one day or two; it lasts for whole months. It is so cruel that the prisoner implores but one thing: "Let me return to the workshops." "Well, we shall see that in a fortnight or two," is the usual answer.

But the fortnight goes over, and the next one too, and the patient still continues to walk twelve hours every day. Then he revolts. He begins to cry in his cell, to insult the warders. Then he becomes "a rebel"—a dreadful qualification for any one who is in the hands of the brotherhood of warders—and as such he will rot in the cells, and walk throughout his life. If he assaults a warder, he will not be sent to New-Caledonia; he will still remain in his cell, and ever walk in the small building. One man a peasant, seeing no issue from this horrible situation, preferred to poison himself rather than live such a life—a terrible story which I shall some day tell in full.

A Just Rebuke.

Chicago News.

A party of western men went east together to attend ex-president Arthur's funeral. In this party were Frank Hatton, Judge Gresham and Robert T. Lincoln, previously members of Arthur's cabinet. While journeying eastward the conversation turned upon legislative matters in the state of Illinois, and some one expressed surprise that certain reputable Chicago lawyers had gone to Springfield to advocate a certain measure which was commonly believed to be corrupt. Mr. Lincoln defended these lawyers, claiming that in their capacity of attorneys they had a perfect right to advocate any measure. At this point Judge Gresham interrupted Lincoln in a most peremptory tone and manner.

"Stop right there, young man," he said, sternly: Stop right there! Your father never would have given utterance to such words, and I am shocked to hear his son utter so degrading a sentiment. Believe me it is this false estimate of the necessity for integrity which is largely responsible for the low grade of our public morals in this country at the present time."

This rebuke, uttered sternly, but in a friendly way, was appreciated by all who heard it and the incident is being recalled now that Judge Gresham is talked of for a presidential nomination.

Christianizing Arabs.

Christianity is always imperfect in its beginnings. The majority of Christians in Constantine's time would have seemed to modern missionaries mere worldlings; the converted Saxons were for centuries violent brutes, and the mass of Christians throughout the world are even now no better than indifferents. None the less it is true that the race which embraces Christianity, even nominally, rises with a bound out of its former position, and contains, in itself thenceforward the seed of a nobler and more lasting life. Christianity in a new people must develop civilization for itself not be smothered by it, still less be exhausted in the impossible effort to accrete to itself a civilization from the outside. Natives of India when they are Christians will be and ought to be Asiatics still—that is, as unlike English Rectors or English dissenting ministers as it is possible for men of the same creed to be, and the effort to squeeze them into those molds, not only wastes power but destroys the vitality of the original material. Mahommedan proselytism succeeds in India because it leaves its converts Asiatics still; Christian proselytism fails in India because it strives to make of its converts English middle-class men. That is the truth in a nutshell, whether we choose to accept it or not.—The Contemporary Review.

Suiting the Crowd.

Atlanta Constitution.

When a man travels abroad and mixes with strangers and would be treated with civility, he should not do anything or say anything that runs against their opinions, their interests, or their prejudices. Zeb Vance said that one time away back when he was running for Congress against Holden he had to go over a mountain range and down into a valley where he had never been before. The humble people in that valley were almost cut off and hid out from the rest of the world, and especially from that side of the world in which Mr. Vance lived. He knew nothing about their politics or their religion.

"North Carolina is a curious State," said he. "Her religion is speckled and spotted like it had the measles. In one valley you will find the people all Episcopalians, however poor or primitive. The ancestors or first settlers came from England and brought that religion with them, and, as nobody moved in or moved out, their descendants kept the faith of their fathers. In another valley you will find them all Presbyterians, because the ancestors came from Scotland. In another they will be all Methodists or all Baptists, and every one of these separate communities will have an old patriarch working in the lead, and he is looked upon as the bell-wether of the flock. Now, it is necessary that a politician should know the religious faith of those with whom he is 'lectioneering' for votes. If he can't chime in with it exactly, he musn't say anything 'agin' it. "Now," said Vance, "when I got over into the valley to meet my appointment, I found about seventy-five of the humble sovereigns gathered at the cross roads where there was a little store and a wagon shop and a meeting house. They had on their home-made clothes and were standing around chawing tobacco and talking about 'craps' and waiting for me to come. I soon got familiar with them and got them in first rate humor, but as Holden was to come over in a day or two I wanted to fix things in some way so that he couldn't unfix them. Holden was a Methodist and I was afraid that those people were. I noticed an old man sitting off on a chunk and marking in the sand with his long walking-stick. He had on big brass spectacles, and his heavy shaggy eyebrows and big long nose indicated character, and so I set him down as the bell-wether of the flock. After a while I got up close to him and was about to address him when he gave a prayerful grunt and got up and braced himself on his stick and looking at me in a solemen voice, 'This is Mr. Vance I believe.' 'Yes, sir,' said I, giving him my hand. 'And I am Emanual Stenor,' said he, 'and I suppose you have come over the mounting to talk to my boys about their votes.' 'Yes, sir,' said I 'that is my principal business and I——.' 'Well Mr. Vance,' said he, interrupting me; 'before you proceed any further with that business, I would like to ax you a question or two.'

'Certainly, sir,' said I; 'certainly.' 'Well, Mr. Vance, allow me to ax you what church do you belong to?'

"Well, that was a sockdologer, and it come right straight at me, and for a moment I was demoralized, and as the boys had all gathered around to hear the old man put me through, I cleared my throat and said: 'That is a fair question, my friend; a fair question, and I will tell you about that. My grandfather came from England, and as over there the Established Church was Episcopalian, of course he was an Episcopalian.'

"I paused a moment to see the effect of this, but there was none that was favorable. The old man marked a little more in the sand and spit his tobacco away off on one side. So I continued: 'But my grandmother came from Scotland, and you know that John Knox left his mark upon that whole nation, and so, of course, she grew up a Presbyterian.' I paused again, but there was no sign, no awakening, no chord struck, and the old man marked some more on the sand. 'But, my friend, my father was born and grew up in a Methodist community, who were in this country, and converted by John Wesley, and, of course, he became Methodist.' I thought that now I had him sure, but I didn't. There was no sign of sympathy from him or the boys, and so I took my last shot. 'But my good old mother, sir, was born and raised a Baptist, and it's always been my opinion that a man has got to go under water before he can get to heaven.' A gleam of satisfaction spread all over the old man's face as he said: 'Give me your hand, Brother Vance. Boys, I told you so. I told you that he was a Baptist afore he come. He is the man. You can all vote for him, but Holden won't do nary time, for they do say he is one of those shoutin' cavortin' Methodists.'"

How Mr. and Mrs. Originated.

Oldham Chronicle.

In earlier times the ordinary man was simply William or John; that is to say, he had merely a Christian name without any kind of "handle" before it or surname after it. Some means of distinguishing one John or one William from another John or another William became necessary. Nicknames derived from a man's trade or from his dwelling place, or from some personal peculiarity, were tacked on to their Christian names and plain John became John Smith. As yet there were no "misters" in the land. Some John Smith accumulated more wealth than the bulk of his fellows—became, perhaps a landed proprietor or an employer of hired labor. Then he began to be called in the Norman French of the day the "maistre" of this place or that, of these workmen or of those. In time the "maistre" or "maister" as it soon became, got tacked on before his name, and he became Maister Smith and his wife was Mistress Smith. But gradually the sense of possession was lost sight of, and the title was conferred upon any man who had attained social distinction of any kind, whether by mere possession of wealth or by holding some position of more or less consideration and importance. It is only within comparatively modern times that the term came to be considered an almost indispensable adjunct to every one's name when mentioned in ordinary conversation or writing. Maistress Smith soon became Mistress Smith. Exactly how and when the term got corrupted cannot be said. Maister Smith, [illegible]

CROOKSTON, - - MINNESOTA.

The County Clerk of Shewano, Wis., has issued warants to pay the bounty on 100 wildcats killed during the winter.

Now that several murderers have expressed a preference for death by electricity it is high time to decide to stick to the hangman's rope.

New York furnished 467,047 soldeirs to the Union armies during the war. Pennsylvania was next with 366,107. Ohio next with 319,659, and Illinois next with 259,147.

Subscription libraries all over the country are decaying; on account of the competition of free libraries, cheap literature, the great, modern Sunday papers and the magazine's influence.

Pope Leo has ordered that the wall around the Vatican palace be heightened. High buildings have been erected in the neighborhood which overlook the garden in which the Pope takes his daily walk.

Caroline Herschel, the discoverer of eight comets, and the accomplished partner of her brother's astronomical labors, never could remember the multiplication table and always had to carry a copy of it about with her.

Judge Gresham has the right to prefix the title of General to his name, but he never does so. He was colonel of the Fifty-third Indiana Regiment during the Vicksburg campaign, and was made a brigadier general by General Grant.

The sandwich is the invention of Lord Sandwich, an English aristocrat, who was such an inveterate gambler that he would not leave the gambling-table, and had slices of meat placed between slices of bread, which he devoured during the progress of the game.

O. P. McMains, a crank from New Mexico, stood on the front portico of Capitol at Washington recently and fired five shots from a revolver at statue of George Washington. If the New Mexico wants to become a State she must see to it that her sons show more respect for the Father of His Country.

A colored man in Carrollton, Mo., stole a ham, was arrested, convicted, and sentenced to eleven days in the county jail, all within two hours' time. This leads the New Orleans Picayune to remark that if he had been holding a high office and had stolen the funds of the state it would have taken about eleven years to reprimand him.

The great Hungarian patriot, Louis Kossuth, believes that his life is nearly ended. He has been residing for the last twenty-five years at Turin, Italy, engaged in completing his biography. He is nearing the eighty-sixth year of his age. Those who had the privilege of listening to his wonderful eloquence in this country will experience a feeling of personal bereavement when word is received that the ex-Governor of Hungary is no more.

Early in his reign as king of Prussia, the late Emperor William got at loggerheads with parliament and brought Prince Bismarck to Berlin to tame the recalcitrant deputies. Soon after this he gained much in physical health and appearance, and to a Russian princess who remarked upon the fact he said, pointing to the grim "parliament tamer" "Behold my physician."

A Concord lady who recently sent fifty cents for a box of ribbons "warranted all silk," in answer to a Maine firm's glowing advertisment, received a small lot of worthless cotton ribbons and a printed card, which "added insult to injury" by the inscription: —"Some folks expect the earth for ten cents."—Concord, N. H., Monitor. That advertisement appears in quite a number of pretentious publications, and should receive the attention such a swindle deserves.

To Republican eyes it seems strange that the German Emperor's daughter is not allowed to marry the man of her choice because that man is hated by the Russian Czar. How is it any of the Czar's business? will naturally be asked. Germany has an enormous army and boasts of being the strongest Power in Europe, and yet in a little matter of this kind it is afraid to have its own way. Truly the peace of Europe is a wonderful thing when it has to be maintained by such means.

A butcher named Stubbs in Gawsworth, England, in climbing a fence recently, stumbled and fell. He remained suspended by his feet from a wire over the top rail, his head and shoulders in a ditch in which four feet of snow had accumulated. He managed to clear the snow from about his face, but he could not right himself, and remained in that position for eighteen hours of the storm. The desperate nature of his struggles was shown by the fact that he had torn away the ditch bank and rooted out the brushwood and turf to the distance of four or five feet around him. He was dreadfully frostbitten when discovered, and died shortly afterward from the effects of the exposure.

RESUME OF THE NEWS.

Washington News Items.

The president has approved the act regulating the terms of the United States courts in the northern district of Iowa.

The senate committee on public buildings and grounds has had under consideration for some time and will soon be prepared to report a bill to provide for the erection of substantial postoffice buildings in every town containing a presidential postoffice. A sum of $10,000,000 is to be appropriated by the bill, and the money will be distributed as evenly and equitably among the states and territories each year as possible.

Mr. Lind has filed an application in the interior department asking for the institution of a suit against the St. Paul & Sioux City railroad to vacate the patents issued to the road for 18,000 acres of land in the Washington district. These lands are in even sections, and were selected in place of other lands which the company claimed to have relinquished to settlers under the provisions of an act of congress, but Mr. Lind claims that the company had no right to the land relinquished, and that they have consequently not acquired a valid title to the even sections. He also reports that the commissioner will call on the Southern Minnesota railway in a few days to show cause why its patents to some 6,000 acres of land in the southeast part of the state should not be cancelled.

Personal News.

United States Minister Pendleton is rapidly recovering. He is attended by his daughter, who hurried to his bedside from Italy, where she was on a tour for her health. Mr. Pendleton's physician advises him to abstain from work for a long time.

Senator John C. Spooner has accepted an invitation to deliver an oration at the unveiling of the monument to Wisconsin soldiers who fell at Gettysburg. The exercises will be on that historic field June 30, and it is expected that 500 Wisconsin ex soldiers will participate in them.

Criminal Calendar.

N. B. Lester, the murderer of Lieut. J. T. Lane, was hanged at Lebanon, Tenn. He made a speech, saying that Lane had destroyed the happiness of his family and made a prostitute of his wife. He declared he was ready to die, and was going straight to heaven.

Joseph M. Brown, engineer on the switch engine, at Nebraska City, was beaten nearly to death by three men whose identity is not fully established. Brown was waylaid and assaulted with clubs as he was returning from the depot. His skull was broken, his jaw fractured in three places and all his teeth were knocked out. He took the place of a striker.

William Spurgeon, the cashier for Hurst, Purnell & Co., of Baltimore, who fled in December, 1886, after having stolen thousands of dollars from his employers has at last been captured at Springfield, Mo. The fugitive was tracked by Police Marshal Frey to that place, where he was living under the assumed name of Samuel Whitney, and arrested. A detective left for Springfield to bring the prisoner to Baltimore.

A drunken fracas between several soldiers at Fort Maginnis, Montana, resulted in Private Fremont Johnson, Company D, Twentieth infantry, getting a fractured skull with a club by Private August Makler. Johnson's injuries will result fatally. Makler has fled. Several soldiers concerned in the affair will be held to await trial. This is the ninth desertion in a month.

Philip Held, a young farmer living four miles west of Lemars, Iowa, shot and instantly killed his mother, and shortly after committed suicide. Trouble which had existed for some time in the family culminated in a squabble over selling a horse. The only witness to the murder was Mattie Thomas. She says the man fired two shots at his mother, and then went upstairs and shortly after the neighbors heard another shot, and on going up found that he had sent a third bullet into his head. The dead woman was fifty-seven years old. She had a brother serving a term at Anamosa for manslaughter. The sanity of the family is doubted.

Nuggets of Foreign News.

The London Chronicle's Rome correspondent says: The Pope is about to issue a document condemning the "Plan of Campaign" and boycotting and forbidding Catholics to resort to such practices.

The greatest excitement now reigns in Cuba owing to General Marin's proclamation declaring the provinces of Havana, Montzas, Santa Clara and Pinar del Rio in a state of siege. Gen. Marin says his action is due to the enormous increase of bandits, kidnapping, arson, etc.

There are signs that all good republicans in France are determined to do all in their power to avert the danger of a dictatorship. The changed attitude of Clemenceau, who was disposed to support Boulanger until his language left no further room to doubt his ambitious projects, is no less significant than the recent vote of the chamber in favor of Floquet's ministry.

It is reported that as a result of many conferences between President Sutherland and members of the Ottawa government the latter have decided to grant a handsome money subsidy of some thousands of dollars per mile to the Winnipeg & Hudson Bay railway. It is expected that the company will be in a position to let contracts for the prosecution of the work on a large and vigorous scale during the coming summer.

About fifteen hundred students assembled in the Latin quarter marched to the Hotel Du Luvre; shouting "Down with Boulanger," "Down with the Dictator," etc. They came into collision with a crowd of Boulangerists and were driven into the boulevards in disorder. Reassembling, they attacked the Boulangerist newspaper offices. The Boulangerist party, following, attacked the students with loaded sticks and many were wounded. Finally the police separated the combatants and arrested a large number of them.

The Record of Casualties.

A sad case of drowning occurred four miles above Delano, Minn., in the south fork of Crow river. Mary Henn, her brother, sister and her lover, Andrew Biebel, of New Ulm, were crossing the river in a boat, which, by accident, was upset. Andrew Biebel and Mary Henn were drowned, but the others were saved by clinging to the boat.

At St. Louis a fire started in the Bethel home, a five-story building used as a Bethel church and a cheap lodging and boarding house. It is said to have contained from forty to seventy people. James Smith and James Fox, sleeping in the top story, were badly burned. They report that about fifteen men were on that floor and it is feared that several of them are still in the building. The firemen entered the building and a few moments later brought out the body of a man burned beyond recognition, but supposed to be a negro named Grant.

The new contract of the government with the St. Paul railway, whereby that road is to carry the fast mail from Chicago to St. Paul, and the Northwest for four years more, goes into effect May 1, at the expiration of the first contract.

The news from Louisiana shows that a heavy vote was polled and that only a few votes were cast for the Republicans. Nicholls' majority is probably more than 50,000. The Republican convention of Georgia elected Sherman delegate to Chicago.

The St. Paul Distillery Company will begin work at once, erecting a 6,000 bushel plant in South St. Paul. It was originally intended to build a 4,000 bushel structure, but the encouragement the company has received has led it to erecting the largest distillery in the United States, at the present time.

The feature of the annual conference of the Mormon church, which has just ended at Salt Lake, after a four days' session, was an epistle signed by Wilford Woodruff in behalf of the twelve apostles, which differs materially in tone from similar papers issued by his predecessors, in that it makes no reference to polygamy. The late President John Taylor used to make use of these epistles to advocate polygamy and argue its rightfulness by references to the Old Testament.

Farmers in the counties of Texas and Kansas adjoining Indian Territory, who have been sorely annoyed by horse thieves, organized a force of vigilantes and ran down and fought a gang of outlaws, who were under command of Bill Higgins, alias "Scar Face." The result was that one vigilante and five robbers were shot dead and three outlaws were killed after being captured, including Scar Face, who, although nearly dead from the loss of blood, was dragged to death, suspended by a lariat from the pommel of a saddle. The three remaining members of the gang escaped.

Tom Kaigler, a negro preacher living on a Georgia plantation, has created considerable excitement among the negroes on account of a revelation he claims to have had. He says that the Lord has revealed to him that on a certain day he will carry all the negroes to Egypt, and that he (Tom) is to be the leader. The day and hour of departure is set. What causes the prophecy to be beleived is that the older negroes say that before the war the same prophet prophesied that the negroes were to be set free, and that the prophecy was literally fulfilled. They are getting their clothing and other things in readiness for the departure.

An Important Decision.

A very important decision has been rendered by the supreme court of Minnesota. It defines the power of the railroad and warehouse commission, under the act of the last legislature, as to the constitutionality and construction of that act. The railroad commission applied to the supreme court for a writ of mandamus against the Milwaukee Railroad Company to compel it to reduce rates on milk to what the commission believed just and reasonable. The writ is granted. Following is the syllabus:

State of Minnesota, ex. rel. Railway and Warehouse commissioners, of Minnesota, relators vs. the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, respondent. Syllabus: Under Section 8, chapter 10, laws of 1887, the determination of the railway and warehouse commission as to what are equal and reasonable fares and rates for the transportation of persons and property by a railway company is conclusive and in proceedings of mandamus to compel compliance with the tariff of rates recommended and published by them, no issue can be raised or inquiry had on that question. The authority thus given to the commission to determine the exercise of their discretionary judgment what are equal and reasonable rates is not a delegation of legislative power. Section 8, referred to, passed the supreme court concurrently with a district court, with original jurisdiction of all proceedings by mandamus therein provided for to compel compliance with the provisions of the act. Writ granted. Let the writ issue as prayed for. The decision was proposed by Judge Mitchell.

President Dinsmore, of the Adams Express Company, died in New York. He was 78 years old, and known throughout the United States as a veteran in the express business. The remarkable developement of the American Express system, which is superior to anything of the kind elsewhere in the world, is due in great part to his efforts during the last half century. Mr. Dinsmore suffered from affection of the liver, which confined him to the house about three months ago. He was a strong nerved man, and has acknowledged since stricken with the ailment that he has been suffering from it for a much longer time though he never complained. Last November he was operated on for catarract, and though this fact had no direct influence upon his present illness, it proved a great drain upon his vital energies. During the winter he has been down only twice the last time being two days before the blizzard.

Mr. Conkling's Funeral.

Funeral services were held in Trinity chapel, New York, over the remains of Roscoe Conkling. From early morning drooping, rain-sodden flags hanging at half-mast on the city hall and numerous public buildings as well as private reminded the citizens of their loss. Long before the hour for the funeral people began to gather in West Twenty-fourth street and silently gazed at the windows of the rooms in which Mr. Conkling died. A detail of police formed a line on either side of the stoop leading to the house and through the line there were permitted to pass only the relatives and friends of Mr. Conkling. The lid which closed the face of the dead statesman from view had been fastened in its place soon after the body was received in the casket, and was not removed. At 9:45 o'clock the coffin was lifted from the stands on which it rested, and was borne from the room to the waiting hearse. The pall bearers were Judge Shipman, Mayor Abram S. Hewitt, S. L. M. Barlow, Clarence A. Seward, Manton Marble, Senator John P. Jones, Senator J. Don Cameron, Judge William A. Wallace, Walter S. Church and Isaac H. Bailey. They were followed by Mrs. Conkling, supported by the arm of Col. Frederick A. Conkling, brother of the deceased statesman, his daughter Mrs. Oakman, and her husband, Walter G. Oakman, his niece and nephew, Miss Laura Conkling and Ald. Conkling, his nephews, Judge Alfred Conkling Coxe and Mr. Howard Conkling; Col. Fred D. Grant and his mother Mrs. U. S. Grant, Mrs. Jessie Grant and Mrs. U. S. Grant and their husbands, and a few other immediate friends. Immediately after the last carriage door had closed on its occupants the funeral procession, simple and unostentatious as that of the humblest citizen, began its short progress to Trinity chapel, in the adjoining block. When the sad procession entered the chapel the huge organ pealed out its soft notes, and the choir chanted "O Paradise! O Paradise!" Every seat in the chapel was filled, and the aisles were crowded. On the steps leading up to the altar magnificent floral offerings were laid. The casket, with its simple black covering, was placed on the bier in front of the altar. Upon it were placed wreaths of immortelles and lillies, together with bunches of white and purple lilies. Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix was the officiating clergyman. The remains were taken to Utica for interment.

A Plague of Rats.

A recent number of the Pekin Gazette contains a memorial to the Emperor from the Governor of Uliassutai stating that owing to the appearance of swarms of rats it has been found necessary to alter the routes of the Government courier service in three of the postal stations in the Khalkha region in Outer Mongolia. For two years past the pasturage of the districts in question has suffered severely from the ravages of these vermin, and last year nearly every blade of grass was eaten up. The whole country has been honey-combed with their burrows, the horses and camels are in a famishing state and there is no means of keeping them alive. The burrows are a source of great danger to the mounted courier, and the want of forage renders it impossible to maintain a supply of animals for the service.

ROSCOE CONKLING DEAD.

After Weeks of Suffering the Great Statesman Closes his Earthly Career.

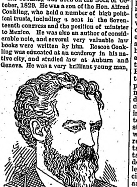
The daily papers have for weeks furnished a bulletin regarding the condition of Hon. Roscoe Conkling, whose life during that time hung by the merest thread, which finally snapped at about two o'clock on the 18th of April.

REVIEW OF HIS ILLNESS.

Mr. Conkling's illness is supposed to have been due originally to the exposure which the ex-senator suffered during the blizzard of March 12. On that day he attempted to walk from his office, 2 Wall street, to the New York club on Madison square. He found himself unable to proceed when he was in the middle of Union square, and had he not been rescued by an officer, he would undoubtedly have died that day. Several days after he complained to friends in the Hoffman house and elsewhere that he was feeling unwell. He continued ailing until on Friday, April 6, after he had been exposed to a severe draft in Judge Horace Russell's office at a reference the day before his illness came to a point. Dr. Cornelius R. Agnew, who is now himself lying at the point of death, was called in to attend the sick man, and, recognizing at once the seriousness of the case, called in consultation Dr. Fordyce Barker and Dr. Henry B. Sands. Upon examination, those physicians concluded that an abscess had formed between the patient's brain and skull immediately behind the left ear and had involved the auditory canals on that side of the head. The necessity of an operation was indicated by the symptoms, and on April 9, at 4 p. m., Dr. Henry B. Sands performed the operation of trepanning by the modern method, which has already been described. The relief of the pressure on the brain caused an immediate improvement in the patient's condition. This continued for several days, during which the ex-senator gradually developed a delirious condition and was reduced to a state of weakness from a lack of nourishment, for he refused almost all food. Toward the end of last week, his condition was fluctuating from day to day, but seemed to promise ultimate recovery. Last Saturday night, Dr. Barker noticed with alarm, the appearance of an involuntary twitching of the muscles known as subsaltus. On Sunday night an attack of bronchitis began to show itself, and from that time the ex-senator has gradually declined, although his condition improved slightly at intervals. During the whole period of illness, Mrs. Conkling, who came to the Hoffman Annex from Utica, on Sunday, April 8, remained at the bedside taking but a few hours' rest. Mrs. Oakman, Mr. Conkling's daughter, was equally faithful. Dr. Anderton, who is Dr. Barker's assistant, and Dr. Hartley, of Dr. Sand's office, have alternated in carefully watching the patient.

HIS LIFE.

Mr. Conkling was born on the 30th of October, 1829. He was a son of the Hon. Alfred Conkling, who held a number of high political trusts, including a seat in the Seventeenth congress and the position of minister to Mexico. He was also an author of considerable note, and several very valuable law books were written by him. Roscoe Conkling was educated at an academy in his native city, and studied law at Auburn and Geneva. He was a very brilliant young man, who knew more about law than many an old practitioner, when, at seventeen years of age he entered the office of Spencer & Kernan at Utica. The latter gentleman, whose name is familiar to all who read the papers, was to become the future colleague of the young law student in the senate of the United States. Before he had reached his majority, before he had been admitted to the bar even, he received the appointment of district attorney of Oneida county. He was admitted to the bar at twenty-one, and immediately commenced a most brilliant career as a lawyer. He also began to figure prominently in the politics of his state. He was a leader by instinct, and soon became one in fact. Before he was thirty years of age he had won great triumphs as an advocate, become a recognized leader of his party in New York, and been elected to the United States congress. Having married a sister of Ex-Gov. Seymour, he made his home in the city of Utica, of which he became mayor in 1858. He was defeated in a second contest for the mayoralty, but was elected to the Thirty-sixth congress, taking his seat in December, 1859. The fame which had gone before him, and the brilliant powers which he possessed, enabled him at once to assume a position of influence in the national legislature. He was re-elected the following year, and entered the special session called by President Lincoln, July 4, 1861, with his brother Frederick, who was elected from New York city. In his candidacy for the Thirty-eighth congress he was defeated by Mr. Kernan, in whose office he had formerly been a student, but was again successful in 1864, and resumed his seat in the Thirty-ninth congress.



CONKLING IN HIS PRIME.

HIS FORENSIC TRIUMPHS.

It was then that he began that grand series of forensic triumphs which have forced a passage into history, and entitled him to a position in the forefront of contemporary orators. The arraignment of McClellan's generalship, his memorable speeches on the questions of the war, his opposition to the legal tender act, and his influence in directing the policy of the government toward the South, have all served to elevate him in glory above his peers, and to establish his reputation beyond the reach of partisan bitterness. In the autumn of 1866 he was chosen United States senator, assuming his duties on the 4th of March, 1867. He was re-elected in 1873, and again in 1879. Mr. Conkling was the candidate of the Republicans of New York at the Cincinnati convention of 1876, and on the first ballot received all but one of the seventy votes from his state and thirty votes besides. After the sixth ballot the New York delegation retired for consultation, and as the contest then appeared to be one between Blaine and Hayes the New York vote was thrown almost solidly for the Ohioan, insuring his nomination. In 1880 Mr. Conkling appeared in the national convention at Chicago as the champion of Gen. Grant, and his speech of nomination, in which occurred the passage: "You ask where our candidate hails from, and the answer is, from Appomattox," has become celebrated. It was Mr. Conkling, too, who offered the resolution pledging every member of the convention to support the nominee, "whoever that nominee may be," and when three delegates voted "no" it was Mr. Conkling who offered a resolution expelling the three delegates. In the warm discussion which followed Gen. Garfield played the part of peacemaker, and the incident gave him an opportunity to make that favorable impression upon the convention which largely promoted his nomination four days later. In the difficulties following the presidential election of 1876, Mr. Conkling took a conspicuous part, notably in the framing and passage of the electoral commission act.

Perhaps the greatest mistake in life was his resignation from the United States senate in 1880. It was occasioned by what he deemed the arbitrary and unjust conduct of President Garfield in insisting on the confirmation of Gen. Robertson as collector of the port of New York. The public were not in sympathy with his movement, and the fair fame of Mr. Conkling suffered at the hands of popular resentment. After retiring to private life he devoted himself to the practice of law in New York city, and managed several important cases with great success.

CONKLING AND BLAINE.

Mr. Conkling's quarrel with Mr. Blaine, arising from personalities used in debate in the house in 1865, has exercised remarkable influence upon the fortunes of the two men and upon the political history of their country. It was a strong element in the defeat of Mr. Blaine in the Cincinnati convention of 1876 and again at Chicago in 1880, and elected Mr. Cleveland president. It also led indirectly to the quarrel of Conkling with Garfield, the resignation of Conkling and Platt, the assassination of Garfield, and the fatal embitterment of the Republican factions in New York state. Mr. Blaine did not enter congress until 1863, or four years after Mr. Conkling, but in his book he thus speaks of him: "The ablest and most brilliant man of the New York delegation was Roscoe Conkling. He had been elected to the preceding congress when only twenty-nine years of age, and had exhibited an eloquence and readiness in debate that at once placed him in the front rank. His command of language was remarkable. In affluent and exuberant diction Mr. Conkling was never surpassed in either branch of congress, unless perhaps by Rufus Choate." Mr. Conkling did not often speak in those days, but on a few occasions he gave such evidence of the possession of those powers of eloquence to which Mr. Blaine refers that he quickly took rank as one of the orators of congress. The day that congress convened in December, 1861, he created a sensation by introducing a resolution requesting the secretary of war "to report to the house whether any, and if any, what measures have been taken to ascertain who is responsible for the disastrous movement of our troops at Ball's Bluff." The secretary of war, in answer to Mr. Conkling's resolution, stated that Maj. Gen. McClellan, commanding the army, "is of opinion that an inquiry on the subject on the resolution would at this time be injurious to the public service." Mr. Conkling was not satisfied, and immediately offered another resolution looking to the same end. The debate which followed brought him out in his first forensic effort. His speech on this occasion gave him national fame in a day.

Cities in the Moon.

A letter from Berlin to a prominent gentleman of this city, says the New York Sun, contains a very interesting communication concerning the alleged discoveries by Dr. Blendmann, a professor in the Royal Academy in Berlin, of evidences that the moon is inhabited. Dr. Blendmann professes to to have discovered that the telescopic observations made up to the present time have given a negative result on account of the excessive light that irradiates from the lunar disk, which prevents an exact examination of the surface. Dr. Blendmann softened the light by using the condensed smoke of camphor. He had to make hundreds of trials before finding the exact measure of softening required to obtain a perfect image of the moon. He then took with a reflecting telescope a very detailed and correct photographic view of the disk of the moon, which he afterward exposed under a powerful solar microscope. The circle obtained in the photograph had in the microscope an apparent diameter of over 33 feet. In this way, the story is, he was able to perceive that what have been believed to be seas are really regions covered with rich vegetation, and what have always been taken for mountainous regions are deserts and seas. One can see, the letter says, with striking distinctness cities, towns, and villages, and there are strong indications of commerce. With a full moon Dr. Blendmann has obtained photographic views, so distinct that they indicate that if larger telescopes could be used the discovery would be still more completely confirmed.

He Wanted to Lithp.

Success is pretty certain to show a preference for those who are willing to make personal sacrifices to gain it. The sacrifice, should, however, be in proportion to importance of the desired success.

"Mr. Smith," said a young man as he entered a dentist's shop hurriedly, "I want you to draw a tooth."

"Show me the tooth," said the dentist, with a happy expression of face, as he picked up a dental crowbar and a handsaw.

"Take any in this row," answered the youth, as he slid into the operating chair.

"But which is the aching tooth?"

"Neither of them. Will you pull one of these or not?"

"I suppose you know your own business," said the dentist, as he lifted the young man out of the chair with the friendly grip he took, and the tooth came with him.

When he had paid the fee and was walking out, the dentist asked, "Would you kindly inform me why you wanted a sound tooth pulled?"

"Thertainly," answered the youth. "I am an elocutionist, and there ith a plethe I want to rethite where the thpeaker lithpth, and I couldd't lithp. Now you see it will be a perfect thucthess."

And he went off, leaving the dentist in awe-struck silence.

New York Truly Cosmopolitan

What a truly wonderful place this big city is in its miscellaneous make up! An American city, certainly, yet representing the whole world. Its population to-day certainly is not under 1,500,000, and 40 per cent. of this number are of foreign birth and another 40 per cent. of foreign parentage. This gives a distinctively foreign element of 600,000, of which about 450,000 are Irish and German, the others taking in English, Scotch, French, Italians, Russians, Chinese and other nationalities up to a total of thirty-five. The native born, one or both of whose parents were foreigners, number not less than 490,000 and 260,000 of these are Irish-American and 230,000 German-American. Putting all those of foreign birth and all those of foreign parentage together, they make up a total of 1,200,000, leaving only 300,000 that can be called distinctively American, and even among these a great deal of foreign blood will be found if you go back two generations. Then the tongues that are spoken. Think of eighty different dialects in a single city. Babel indeed—aye, a dozen babels in one.

Frank Ryan, a laborer walked into the New York city hospital and asked for medical treatment. He was found to be suffering from small-pox in an advanced stage, and presented a frightful appearance. He came from a densely settled tenement district of the city.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Seeding is now under general headway all over Kittson county, while other parts of the state are considerably behind.

Red Lake Falls has a daily paper—the Red Lake Falls News—published by P. P. Bodeen. Snow is about gone, and the farmers will begin seeding at once.

G. C. Sohnson, proprietor and manager of the Oskaloosa Broom Company of Oskloosa, Iowa, has been in Faribault preparing to start a broom factory there similar to the factory at Oskaloosa.

As the roads get partially settled reports come in from the country of the terrible work of the late storms. A strip of country extending to the southwest of Mankato suffered from high winds. Numerous dwellings, barns and one or two school houses were demolished. A Mr. Ried, living near St. Clair, was buried in the falling of his house, but was rescued, fortunately unhurt. Some of the timbers of a school house in McPherson township were carried eighty rods by the gale.

The Republican congressional committee of the fifth district met at Fergus Falls recently to call conventions. It was decided to hold the convention of delegates at Crookston May 15, and the call was issued based on the same representation as the state call. It was decided to hold the nominating convention at St. Cloud June 12, but the call was not issued.

Gov. Hubbard, president of the newly organized Duluth & Red Wing Construction company, spent a short time in Duluth in the interest of that company and the Duluth, Red Wing & Southern road. He speaks very hopefully of the building of the road. Arrangements are now being made by Chief Engineer Powell of the road to complete the survey between Duluth and Red Wing, the lower portion of which was made last fall and early in the winter, before deep snow compelled a cessation of the work.

Lewis Olson was arrested at Hancock charged with forging Peter Erickson's name to an order on which he obtained $20 worth of clothes from M. Hoban, a storekeeper. He wrote a letter to the clerk who sold him the goods bragging of the deception and stating the facts, and thanking him for his greenness and stating that he had left the country, otherwise the crime would not have been discovered for some time at least. Olson is twenty-one years old.

The Stevens county bank of Morris attached by replevin the wheat in the elevator operated by Albert Dekay on a claim of $900. This precipitated a regular deluge of claims and, the results are astonishing to the community. Mr. Dekay has been supposed to have done a successful and lucrative business, and the fear now is that many farmers will meet with loss. It is said there is little or no wheat outside that attached, and as almost all of the claims were secured by wheat checks the losses will be serious.

J. J. Hill is actively surveying, getting the right of way and collecting material—ties and rails—to build a cut-off on the Montana branch, which it is claimed will save him twenty-five or thirty miles between St. Paul and Helena. This new road leaves the main line near Larimore, goes through Hillsboro, Ada, and passes south of the White Earth reservation, joining the Fosston branch of the Manitoba south of Leech Lake, and thence straight through Brainerd, to St. Paul. The Manitoba is also collecting material to rail and tie the branch north from Pelican Rapids, which was graded last year.

J. H. Lorden, a brakeman on the Omaha road, was arrested at Mankato charged with obtaining money under false pretenses. Last October it is alleged he went to the express office at Waseca, forged the name of another party to the books and obtained a valise valued at $25. J. B. Hayden, who was agent at Waseca at the time, has been looking for Lorden since Jan. 1, having hunted over Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin.

A Swede giving the name of Gus Linden came to Redwood Falls and showed such symptoms of insanity that the sheriff took him in charge. He says he came from Minneapolis to escape being killed by parties in pursuit of him. He also states that he has a brother by the name of Carl Gustavesen living in St. Paul. He is about twenty-eight years of age, height five feet ten inches, complexion light, eyes blue, hair light and curly.

At a meeting of the Lake City Improvement and Reality company a committee was appointed to attend to the improvement of the encampment grounds of the Minnesota National Guards, and work thereon will be commenced immediately. The grounds will be seeded to grass, and it is presumed they will be in excellent condition in time for the encampment.

New developments prove that Adolph Flinzer, of Freeborn county, who burned up all his property, was insane over the refusal of his late wife's sister to wed him. The lady was betrothed to a young man who has been absent for several years. While he was away, her brother-in-law transferred his affections to her, and they were soon engaged. A short time since the former lover returned, and the maiden renewed her vows to him, when the discarded brother-in-law became a maniac. He has been removed to the Rochester asylum.

"No license" carried the day at a recent village election at Zumbrota. A high license council, however, was elected. One of the saloons continued operations after the time for selling liquor expired, which was April 1. A lawyer claims that a village ordinance for the granting of license is contrary to the present state high license law. Several years ago the village council passed an ordinance fixing the maximum fee at $1,000 and the minimum at $25, and since that time, excepting one year, when no license was voted, $500 has been charged.

Wealthy Negroes.

John W. Cromwell, a negro journalist in Philadelphia, has compiled an interesting exhibit of the business conditions of his race in America.

The Carolinas take the lead in the number of well-to-do negroes. North Carolina has twenty who are worth from $10,000 to $30,000 each. In South Carolina the negroes own $10,000,000 worth of property. In Charleston fourteen men represent $200,000. Thomas R. Smalls is worth $18,000, and Charles C. Leslie is worth $12,000. The family of Noisettes, truck farmers, are worth $150,000. In the city savings banks the negroes have $124,936.35 on deposit. One man has over $5,000. He recently bought a $10,000 plantation and paid $7,000 in cash.

In Philadelphia John McKee is worth half a million. He owns 400 houses. Several are worth $100,000 each.

The negroes of New York own from five to six million dollars' worth of real estate. P. A. White, a wholesale druggist, is worth a quarter of a million and has an annual business of $200,000. Catherine Black is worth $150,000.

In New Jersey the negroes own $2,000,000 worth of real estate. Baltimore has more negro home owners than any other large city. Nineteen men are worth a total of $800,000. John Thomas, the wealthiest, is worth about $150,000. Less than a hundred negroes in Washington are worth a total of $1,000,000.

In Louisiana the negroes pay taxes on $15,000,000 in New Orleans and $30,000,000 in the state. Ionie Lafon, a French quadroon, is worth $1,100,000. The Mercer Brothers, clothiers, carry a stock of $300,000. Missouri has twenty-seven citizens worth $1,000,000, in amounts ranging from $20,000 to $250,000.

The richest colored woman of the south, Amanda Eubanks, made so by the will of her white father, is worth $100,000, and lives near Augusta, Ga. Chicago, the home of 18,000 colored people, has three colored firms in business whose proprietors represent $20,000 each, one $15,000 and nine $10,000. The Eastlake furniture company is worth $20,000. A. J. Scott has $35,000 invested in the livery business, and is worth $100,000, including a well stocked farm in Michigan. Mrs. John Jones and Richard Grant are worth $70,000 each. A. G. White of St. Louis, formerly purveyor to the Anchor line of steamers, after financial reverses, has since the age of 45 retrieved his fortunes and accumulated $30,000. Mrs. M. Carpenter, a San Francisco colored woman has a bank account of $50,000, and Mrs. Mary Pleasants has an income from eight houses in San Francisco, a ranch near San Mateo, and $100,000 in government bonds. In Marysville, Cal., twelve individuals are the owners of ranches valued in the aggregate at from $150,000 to $180,000. One of them, Mrs. Peggy Bredan, has besides a bank account of $40,000. These statistics show that the brother in black is making some headway in the world. He is learning to "tote his own skillet."—Exchange.

Young Disciples of Zola.

A trial which has just taken place in the Pas de Calais discloses in a striking manner the pernicious effect of certain kinds of literature on the weak minds of the young. Two cousins of 16, sons of comfortable farmers in the department, had been in the habit of reading sensational romances. One of them named Clement Muchembled fell in love with a girl of 15 named Marie Ledent, and their amours became the subject of some verses written at the carnival time by a local poetaster. These verses were rather uncomplimentary to Clement who consulted his cousin Henry, a notary's clerk, about them. He had received his copy of them from Marie Ledent, with whom he was accordingly furious. The two cousins armed themselves with long knives to be like Fennimore Cooper's heroes, and called themselves by two Indian names used by that novelist. They had at first intended to hang or shoot the girl Ledent as she passed through a forest, but resolved to dispatch her with the knives instead. They seized her one evening, and, having cut her throat, gashed her body in seventeen places. The young rascals had written a long account of the murder and the circumstances leading up to it, which they had entitled "A Horrible Drama". The production showed touches of naturalism worthy of Zola. The miscreants have been condemned to fifteen yerrs' penal servitude each, and their parents have to pay £320 to the father of the murdered girl.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

Feathers Are Unhealthy.

"Don't like your bed, Mr. Withers?"

"No, ma'am, I do not."

"You're the first boarder I ever had that kicked on the beds. It's an insinuation against my establishment, sir."

"Can't help it."

"Feather beds, too, for every boarder in the house!"

"That's just it. I'm satisfied that they're unhealthy."

"Feather beds unhealthy!"

"Yes, ma'am."

"What makes you think so?"

"That spring chicken you had for dinner to-day. He slept in feathers, and see how tough he was!"—Chicago Ledger.

Origin of a Classic.

The June-bug poem is sufficient of a classic already to secure a reference as "the old song." Yet it has been before the public less than two years. This gem has been more often mutilated, misquoted, and stolen than any other poem of its length in the language. There are at least a half-dozen negro minstrels who claim it. Its real author was the "This and That" man of the Louisville Courier-Journal. The June-bug poem is seldom given correctly. In the original and most beautiful version it ran:

The June-bug hath a gaudy wing,
The lightning-bug has fame,
The bed-bug has no wings at all,
But he gets there just the same.

Matrimony Day.

"Matrimony Day" is getting to be quite an institution at county fairs. A New York county fair recently gave a $500 wedding outfit to a couple who were married on the grounds. Hon. R. P. Flower added $30 from his private purse and the railroad running to Niagara Falls passed the happy pair free to that great curiosity and back. This is a rather high premium to pay for getting two young people married, but a good deal less would no doubt effect the object in many instances. On the whole the matrimonial feature of the county fair cannot help proving an interesting and excellent one.—Terre Haute Mail.

The Bustle in White Horse Gulch.

Rocky Mountain News: Every miner in the camp was excited and talking about it. Now, it took some very important event to thoroughly arouse all the boys along the gulch. A row in which only one man was considered a very commonplace social event, and an ordinary lynching did not attract much attention.

What was it?

Why, there was a woman in camp, and all was commotion. It was the first great social event in White Horse Gulch.

The young lady had finished her dinner and was strolling about the camp with her uncle, a large, fleshy, jolly old man, who was a large stockholder in one of the principal mines in the gulch. He had brought his niece, a young lady of 20, on a trip with him for company, and also to show her something of the wild and rugged West. It had been many a month since the boys had seen a woman, and hence everbody wanted to meet her and invite her to partake of the hospitalities of White Horse Gulch, for all the latch strings were out, and she would have been welcomed to the best the rude mountain cabins afforded.

Now, any woman would have appeared handsome. A dried-up old maid from New England, dieted and preserved on non-sugared tea for a quarter of a century, would have been considered handsome and very lovely, for the mountain boys are very gallant to women, and old maids are given a fair show every time.

The boys were all charmed by the polite manners and handsome face of the young lady, but there was a look of deep sympathy in the eyes of all when they saw her. "It is too bad," was the prevailing sentiment of all.

"What a handsome face, pard," exclaimed a miner, "but how unfortunate."

Some admired her handsome face, others her beautiful black hair, and others her comely shaped foot, but all pitied her for her deformity.

That evening, after the young lady had retired, the uncle was chatting with a number of the miners, and his niece of whom the fond uncle was very proud, became the topic of conversation. Finally, one hardier than the rest, said it was a pity she was deformed. In tones of sympathy he told the uncle how the hearts of all the miners in White Horse Gulch had gone out toward him for her affliction.

"Afflicted!" shouted the enraged uncle, "Afflicted! Why, she is only wearing one of those blankety blank bustles." And everybody replied in chorus:

"Bustle! bustle! What's a bustle?"

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Senate and House.

SENATE.

Senator Stewart has introduced a bill granting a pension of $5,000 a year to the widow of Chief Justice Waite.

Mr. Hoar offered a resolution which was adopted, instructing the select committee on the operations of the civil service to inquire and report whether there has been within two years any fraud or maladministration in the New York custom house in regard to the importation of sugar.

Conference reports on the bills to divide the Great Sioux reservation into separate smaller reservations, and to ratify and confirm the agreement with the Gros Ventres and other bands of the Blackfeet Indians in Montana, were presented and agreed to.

At the close of Mr. Stewart's remarks on the silver question the Senate resumed consideration of the bill for the admission of the State of South Dakota and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota.

Mr. Spooner addressed the Senate in favor of the bill. Alluding to the remark in Mr. Butler's speech last week to the effect that the precedent sought to be established would justify 100,000 socialists getting together in a corner of a territory and demanding admission as a state, he asked what was the objection to their petitioning for admission? What harm had petitioning ever done? They had the inherent right to get into the Union as states, just as certain states had claimed that they had the inherent right to get out of the Union. He did not believe that south Dakota would be admitted by this congress but he thought he might safely prophesy that before long there would be elected a congress that would recognize her rights and gladly welcome her into the Union of states.

HOUSE.

The motion in the House to suspend the rules and pass the river and harbor bill was defeated—yeas, 134; nays, 102.

Mr. Wilkins, of Ohio, moved to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution:

Resolved, By the House of Representatives, that it is the sense of this house that section 2 of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the government for the year ending June 30, '82, and for other purposes, approved March 3, '81, which is as follows: That the secretary of the treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the treasury, now otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds; provided that the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund but shall be redeemed and cancelled, was intended to be a permanent provision of law, and the same is hereby declared to have been since its enactment, and to be now, in the opinion of the House, in full force and effect.

Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, declared that this resolution meant nothing more than the defeat and burial of the house surplus resolution with the Beck silver amendment. He appealed to the ways and means committee not to allow it to be buried and if they did he appealed before God to the country to visit retributive justice upon them.

The resolution was finally adopted—yeas, 138; nays, 64. Adjourned.

Mr. McDonald introduced a bill declaring all interstate pools or combinations limiting or controlling the production, sale or price of any article of trade or commerce to be unlawful and a criminal conspiracy. He also presented a petition of citizens of Goodhue county, Minn., asking for the passage of the per diem pension bill.

SENATE.

Mr. Stewart offered a resolution (which was agreed to) calling on the secretary of the treasury for a statement of the amounts of United States money deposited in national banks, and whether the banks are allowed to use the money without the payment of interest.

Senator Cullom introduced a bill providing that in all cases where it shall appear that parties have paid $5.50 an acre for lands reduced in price to $1.25 per acre by the act of June 15, 1880, the secretary of the interior shall be authorized to repay to such parties the excess price of $1.25 per acre for such lands.

On motion of Mr. Plumb, the bill to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads was taken up for consideration. A number of amendments were offered and ordered printed.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the bill for the admission of the state of South Dakota, and the organization of the Territory of North Dakota, and was addressed by Mr. Vest in opposition to the bill. The senator from Wisconsin (Mr. Spooner) had waved yesterday that ensanguined garment known as "the bloody shirt," and scattered its ruddy remains around the chamber. He had spoken of secession, and said that there was no difference between states trying to break out of the union and states trying to break into it. But what did that senator say of states neither in nor out of the union, which claimed to exist as a state in spite of the laws and in defiance of congress? If any southern community had undertaken what the people of Dakota had done, there would have been an outcry immediately only exceeded by that in regard to Ft. Sumpter.

A resolution was reported and adopted asking the postmaster general for information concerning the rates of postage on seeds, and whether Canadians are given advantages over Americans engaged in the same business.

HOUSE.

A bill was reported for the location of a branch soldiers' home in Grant county, Ind.

Bills were reported for the erection of public buildings at Sioux City, Iowa, New Orleans, La., Brownville, Tex., Hot Springs, Ark., Helena, Mont., and Racine, Wis.

The bill to create boards of arbitration for settling controversies between common carriers and their employes, was reported, as was the bill prohibiting the importation of convict made goods.

Mr. Mills, of Texas, then moved that the House go into committee of the whole for the consideration of the tariff bill. No opposition was made to the motion and it was carried without a division. And then Mr. Mills made the leading speech on the subject followed by Mr. Kelly, of Pennsylvania.

SENATE.

Mr. Evarts, from the committee on foreign relations, reported back (adversely) Mr. Riddleberger's resolution to suspend the rules as to executive sessions during the consideration of the fisheries treaty. The Senate then resumed consideration of the Senate bill to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads. No progress was made with the bill, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill for the admission of South Dakota as a state, and the organization of the territory of North Dakota. Mr. Sherman addressed the senate.

After a long speech, Mr. Sherman was replied to by Mr. Vest; the discussion having involved the Hayes-Tilden contest of 1876.

HOUSE.

Mr. Belmont, of New York, introduced a bill to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States. Its main provisions are similar to those contained in the new treaty.

Mr. McCreary, of Kentucky, submitted the conference report upon the bill authorizing the President to arrange a conference between the United States and the South and Central American republics, Hayti, San Domingo and the Empire of Brazil.

The floor was then accorded to the committee on labor, and the bill to establish a department of labor was passed.

The next bill called up was that to create boards of arbitration for the settlement of controversies and differences between interstate common carriers and their employes; and it was considered in committee of the whole.

Mr. O'Neill, of Missouri, briefly explained the provisions of the measure, stating that it was substantially the same bill which passed the last congress, but at too late a day to receive presidential approval. The only difference was that the pending bill provided for special boards of arbitration to be appointed by the President to inquire into the causes of strikes and report to congress.

Mr. Parker, of New York, regarded the bill as good for nothing. It pointed nowhere and went nowhere. It was a mere temporary makeshift, and left all the great questions which were troubling the labor of the country precisely where they were before, with a mere pretense that congress had done something. It was sweetened wind. It was a cheat and fraud upon the people of the country. He favored a law upon the subject which would prevent the commerce of the country from being paralyzed whenever a difference occured between a railroad management and its employes.

Mr. Tillman of South Carolina hoped that the house would not allow this fraud to pass. It was as useless as a balloon. It was a mere tub to a whale.

Mr. Tarsney of Michigan favored the bill as a step in the right direction, although he admitted that it did not reach the foundation of the labor troubles.

Mr. Buchanan, of New Jersey, said that the remark of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Parker) that the bill was a cheat, was conspicuously inaccurate. The committee on labor did not claim that there was anything in the bill except a provision for voluntary arbitration. Grave difficulties would beset the American congress when it attempted to go further than that.

Mr. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, regarded the measure as unconstitutional and unwise.

The committee then rose, the bill was passed, and the house adjourned.

SENATE.

Mr. Hoar offered a resolution, which was referred to the committee on foreign relations, providing that the official reporter shall be admitted to report the debates and proceedings of the senate when the fisheries treaty shall be under consideration.

The senate then resumed consideration of the bill for the admission of South Dakota, and it was finally passed by a strictly party vote.—Yeas 25, nays 23.

HOUSE.

The House went into committee of the whole (Mr. Springer, of Illinois, in the chair) for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. An amendment was adopted appropriating $20,000 for the education of Indian pupils in Alaska. An amendment was adopted striking out the provision for an inspector of Indian schools and providing for a superintendent of Indian schools.

Mr. Bayne, of Pennsylvania, offered an amendment providing that at Indian day and training schools where church organizations are assisting in the educational work, the Christian Bible may be taught in the native language of the Indians, if, in the opinion of the persons in charge of the schools, it is deemed conducive to the moral welfare of the people. Adopted.

SENATE.

No business was transacted in the senate.

HOUSE.

The house resumed consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. Randall, to strike out the Choctaw judgment section. This motion was lost and the bill passed.

Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, from the committee on military affairs, reported his bill placing Gen. W. F. (Baldy) Smith on the retired list with the rank of major-general.

A motion to proceed to the consideration of private business was defeated by the managers of the various appropriation bills, and, on motion of Mr. Blanchard, chairman of the committee on rivers and harbors, the House went into committee of the whole on such measures.

To-day was the 100th day of the present session. The total number of bills and resolutions introduced in the Senate and House up to this date is 12,568, exceeding by more than 2,000 the number presented in the first 100 days of the last congress. So far the House has passed 425 bills and the Senate 831, and 185 House bills and 24 Senate bills have been sent to the President for his approval.

Progress of Civilization.

"The night ends with storm; yet rejoice; they herald the morning," were the last words of Erasmus, and in the brightening light of the new day the horizon of the future now plainly reveals the verdure of wide forests, temples of health and science, the fruit plantations of reclaimed fields and the garden homes of renaturalized men. The progress of our latter-day civilization has not yet reached its ultimate gaol, but we can no longer doubt that the principle of that progress is a reaction against the doctrine of anti-naturalism. All the leading nations of the Caucassian race are retracing their steps from ghostland to earth. From the Caucasus to the foot of the Cordillas, science is busy reclaiming the blighted gardens of our earthly paradise. All of our successful reformers are preaching a gospel of a physical regeneration.—North American Review.

The Lonely Man.

Robert Burdette has surely discovered the man who thinks the whole world of journalism will collapse if he revenges himself by crying, "Stop my paper." He says:

There are 1,400,000,000 people living on the planet which we inhabit. And yet there is now and then a man who wonders what the rest of us will do when he dies. There are people in "society" who honestly think that all the world closes its eyes when we lie down to sleep. There are men who fear to act according to their own convictions, because, perhaps, ten persons in a crowd of 1,400,000,000 will laugh at them. Why, if a man could only realize every moment what a bustling, busy, fussy important little atom he is in all this great ant hill of important, fussy little atoms, every day he would regard himself less, and think still less of the other molecules in the corral.

Feasting on Dog.

Wamego has a family of dog-eaters It is reported that they actually raise dogs for the table. We don't know whether they preserve them for the winter use or not, but suppose they look after a supply for that purpose. This is not a "pointer" for our butchers, but it is a fact. We have seen the Kaw tribe of Indians cook dog for a feast, and were invited to partake of the dish, but always declined with thanks.—Kansas Agriculturist.

The new laboratory of the School of Mines made the first run of Dakota tin ore at Rapid City. The reduction process was a complete success. Plans for the erection of large works for treating tin by this process were immediately formed by leading citizens. Prof. Emmons of New York, who has been recently inspecting and investigating mines, left for Chicago to look for machinery. He promises to take one-fifth of the stock of the new company. The process is so simple and cheap, it is thought the works cannot fail to pay.

The Northern Light, or "Hill's Boat No. 1," as she has frequently been spoken of, was successfully launched at Cleveland, and measures 290 feet keel, 312 feet over all, 40 feet beam and 24½ feet hold. She has an estimated carrying capacity of 2,800 tons, and an estimated speed of twelve and one half miles per hour. As soon as completed she will be put on the Northern line between West Superior and Buffalo and it is expected that she will be joined during the season, by two more boats for the same line from the yard of the same builders.

A RACY BOOK.

Scintillating with Sarcasm and Brilliant-Truth.

New York Letter.

Chap. I. "Has Malaria;" goes to Florida.

Chap. II. "Overworked;" goes to Europe.

Chap. III. "Has Rheumatism;" goes to Ems.

Chap. IV. Has a row with his Doctor.

I have read a deal of sarcasm in my day but I never read anything equal to the sarcasm contained in the above four chaptered book, written by some anonymous. I suspect the experience portrayed is a personal one; the author intimates as much on page 31. Let me give you a synopsis:

"Malaria" as it states, "is the cloak with which superficial physicians cover up a multitude of ill feelings which they do not understand, and do not much care to investigate. It is also a cover for such diseases as they cannot cure. When they advise their patient to travel or that he has overworked and needs rest and is probably suffering from malaria, it is a confession of ignorance or of inability."

"The patient goes abroad. The change is a tonic and for a time he feels better. Comes home. Fickle appetite, frequent headaches, severe colds, cramps, sleeplessness, irritability, tired feelings, and general unfitness for business are succeeded in due time by alarming attacks of rheumatism which flits about his body regardless of all human feelings.

"It is muscular,—in his back. Articular,—in his joints. Inflammatory, my! how he fears it will fly to his heart!

"Now off he goes to the springs. The doctor sends him there, of course, to get well; at the same time he does not really want him to die on his hands! That would hurt his business!

"Better for a few days. Returns. After a while neuralgia transfixes him. He bloats; cannot breathe; has pneumonia; cannot walk; cannot sleep on his left side; is fretful; very nervous and irritable; is pale and flabby; has frequent chills and fevers; everything about him seems to go wrong; becomes suspicious; musters up courage and demands to know what is killing him!

"Great heaven!" he cries, "why have you kept me so long in ignorance?"

"Because," said the doctor, "I read your fate five years ago. I thought best to keep you ignorant of the facts."

He dismissed his doctor, but too late! His fortune had all gone in fees.

But him, what becomes of him?

The other day a well known Wall Street banker said to me "it is really astonishing how prevalent bright's disease is becoming. Two of my personal friends are now dying of it. But it is not incurable I am certain, for my nephew was recently cured when his physicians said recovery was impossible. The case seems to me to be a wonderful one." This gentleman formerly represented his government in a foreign country. He knows, appreciates and declares the value of that preparation, because his nephew, who is a son of Danish Vice-Consul Schmidt, was pronounced incurable when the remedy, Warner's safe cure, was begun. "Yes," said his father, "I was very skeptical, but since taking that remedy the boy is well."

I happen to know what it was that cured the boy, for Genl. Christiansen, of Drexel, Morgan & Co's., told me that it was that 'wonderful remedy Warner's safe cure.'

Well, I suspect the hero of the book cured himself by the same means.

I cannot close my notice better than by quoting the author's advice:

"If, my friend, you have such an experience as I have portrayed, do not put your trust in physicians to the exclusion of other remedial agencies. They have no monopoly over disease and I personally know that many of them would far prefer that their patients should go to Heaven direct from their powerless hands than that they should be saved to earth by the use of any "unauthorized means."

Niagara's Water Power.

"A curious scheme has been divised for utilizing the water-power of Niagara Falls," says the American Architect. "The main feature of the plan consists in the construction of a tunnel, by which water is to be taken from some distance up the river towards Lake Erie, carried under the town of Niagara, and discharged into the channel of the river below the Falls. It is calculated that out of the seven million horse-power which, it is said, the river can supply, one hundred and nineteen thousand can easily be diverted by the tunnel and utilized to drive a series of turbine wheels, 238 of which, each affording 500 horse-power, will supply as many mills with a motive force which will be unaffected by the weather, cheap and perpetual. The cost of the tunnel and wheel-pits is estimated at $3,000,000,"

The Lake Superior house at Crookston, O. O. Lizzie, proprietor, and C. O. Champeau's two-story dwelling adjoining were burned. Mr. Champeau saved most of his household goods, but the building is a total loss, with no insurance. The twenty occupants of the hotel barely escaped in their nightclothes, saving nothing. Mr. Lizzie's loss is $4,500, with $1,600 insurance. The cause of the fire is unknown.

While trapping black birds for the Owatonna Gun Club, C. L. Greenwood, by accident, was shot by Fred Clinger, in the act of raising his gun to take aim. His face was filled with shot and he will probably lose an eye.

Why We Win

Because Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best spring medicine and blood purifier.

Because it is a concentrated extract of the best alterative and blood purifying remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Because, by a peculiar combination, proportion and preparation, it possesses curative power peculiar to itself.

Because it is unequaled for the cure of scrofula, salt rheum, boils, pimples, humors, etc.

Because it is the only medicine of which can truly be said "100 doses one dollar," an unanswerable argument as to

Strength and Economy

Because it effects remarkable cures where other preparations totally fail.

Because there is nothing equal to it for curing dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, indigestion.

Because every article entering into it is carefully scanned, none but the best is used and all the roots and herbs are ground in our own drug mill—which makes impossible the use of anything impure or deleterious.

Because Hood's Sarsaparilla is an honest medicine and every purchaser receives a fair equivalent for his money.

Because we ask only a fair price, and do not impose upon the public confidence by absurdly advertising Hood's Sarsaparilla as "worth" more than we sell it for.

Because its advertising is original and not dependent upon the brains of competitors.

Because it is a modern medicine; the ripe fruit of the industry and study of experienced pharmacists, under whose personal direction it is still prepared.

Because it has a

Good Name at Home

There being more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers combined.

Because it is clean, clear and beautiful in appearance, compared with the muddy, gritty make-up of other preparations.

Because when given a faithful trial according to directions it is reasonably certain to effect the desired result.

ARM AND HAMMER

To Housekeepers and Farmers.—It is important that the Soda you use should be White and Pure same as all similar substances used for food. To insure obtaining only the "Arm & Hammer" brand Soda, buy it in "pound or half pound" cartoons, which bear our name and trade-mark, as inferior goods are sometimes substituted for the "Arm & Hammer" brand when bought in bulk. Parties using Baking Powder should remember that its sole rising property consists of bicarbonate of soda. One teaspoonful of the "Arm & Hammer" brand of Soda mixed with sour milk equals four teaspoonfuls of the best Baking Powder, saving twenty times its cost, besides being much healthier, because it does not contain any injurious substances, such as alum, terra alba, etc., of which many Baking Powders are made. Dairymen and Farmers should use only the "Arm & Hammer" brand for cleaning and keeping Milk Pans Sweet and Clean.

A WAR TRAGEDY.

If you have never been in the valley of the Tennessee—I mean that part of the famous valley that stretches southwestward from the great Sand mountain to the picturesque table lands of Monte Sano, you have missed a scene the fairest of all in that country of fair scenes. I will not attempt to describe it. I cannot do it justice. No one can. It is the paradise of north Alabama, and in the heart of that far southern district devasted by war, and yet thanks to its protecting bulwark of mountains, its pleasant homes and well tilled lands escaped almost unscathed.

Not many miles to the north is Lookout mountain and the battle fields of Mission Ridge and Chickamauga. Further to the south and west, and on the same great trunk line that passes within the shadow of the heights on which Hooker fought his "battle in the clouds," is that already famous young city of phenomenal growth, Decatur, and beyond that, the new Sheffield and war scar-Corinth.

But while this corner of the great valley saw little of either blue coats or gray—except, perhaps an occasional foraging party that chance led away from the railroad and into the garden land between the big hills—the valley gave its best blood for the cause of the Confederacy, and sons and brothers left the cotton unpicked in the field to join Bragg and his gathering hosts across the border line of Tennessee, or to follow the fortunes of Morgan or Stuart on their cavalry raids to the north.

Back from the Tennessee, in a cove protected from the northers by the broad back of Monte Sano, a hardy mountain farmer had built a house of uncut stone—a poor place at best, but a home for the sake of what was in it. It was not a typical southern home, for the good wife and mother was housekeeper, dairymaid and gardener all in one, while the two strapping boys, with their father, did the work which on other plantations fell to the task of the negro slaves. At the nearest store, at Maysvillle, old John Rogers was, with indiscriminate courtesy, dubbed "colonel." Why, he never knew. Perhaps no one eles did. Even before the war military titles were popular in Dixie. Now they are all colonels. So few privates escaped the war.

Among the negroes "Col." John was looked upon with some disdain. A man who "worked" his farm without a single black "boy" was not likely to win the respect of "the quarters" at the big plantations on the river. Farmers who worked were "poo-ah white trash" in those days of easy indolence. But "Col." John thrived for all that, and never a home in all the broad valley was happier than in the little cove under the shadow of Monte Sano.

News travels slow in the country. In those days few newspapers found their way into the Tennessee valley of Alabama, and the first shock of war at Fort Sumter was too far away to affect the tranquility of the people by the great river. Then came the frantic call for troops by the government at Montgomery, and the great valley was at last awakened to the horrors of war. A recruiting office was opened at Huntsville, ten miles away, on the other side of Monte Sano, and husbands, and fathers, and sons left their homes and people and went away to the war. The valley of the Tennessee was desolate. The negroes went flocking northward in search of the army of emancipation, and the cotton was left in the balls to spoil. There came a time when even food was scarce, and beef was worth its weight in the strange new script the Confederate government had issued.

"Col." John fared worse than many, although for months after the boys of the boys of the lower valley had gone away into Tennessee, his sons yielded to the wish of the old folks and stayed at home. The time came, however, when honor compelled them to go, and they went; but the eyes of the aged mother were wet with tears, and the face of the white haired "Col." John was strangely old, when they bade their boys good-by.

There are brave hearts here at home who remember those sad farewells, when the boys in blue went far away to fight and die on these southern battlefields. There were the same sad partings in many a southern home, and the war left hundreds of decimated families in that fair valley.

Months passed and then years. Occasionally letters from the absent soldier boys came to the old folks in the cove, but they were few and very far between. They had gone north and enlisted in the Army of Virginia. They had been at Bull Run and had been on the peninsula in the checker-board operations of McClellan's campaign. The latest letter, scribbled in pencil and written in haste, and read in that little home with aching yet thankful hearts, told of good health and Confederate success. Side by side the brothers had fought, as yet unhurt. Now they were to go with Lee into the land of promise—the rich, corn growing valleys of Pennsylvania.

Gettysburg came, and the Army of Virginia, rudely awakened from its victorious security, was hurled back across Maryland and into Virginia again by the military genius of Meade. In the carnage of the first day the older brother was killed. The younger, while retreating with his decimated regiment from an unsuccessful charge, was taken prisoner. In company with several other Alabama soldiers, young Rogers, even then a mere boy, was brought to Philadelphia, and from here sent to Fort Delaware, as a prisoner of war. There he remained until the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court House.

The sad news of the battle of Gettysburg was slow in reaching the little home by Monte Sano, but when it did come it broke the spirit of "Col." John and turned still whiter the head of the sweet faced mother; for it was said that in the battle both boys had fallen under the shower of Federal balls. It was not long before there was a "burying" from the house in the cove, and the body of "Col." John was laid to rest among the pines he loved so well.

And the mother? She too would gladly have died, but nature was too strong. The time came, moreover, when she was glad that death had spared her, for there came to her from far away Fort Delaware a letter from her surviving boy, telling of the older brother's death and the younger one's imprisonment. She read the letter many times, and as the tears rolled down her sunken cheeks she fell on her knees and thanked God that one son at least had been spared to her. A sudden resolution possessed her. She would leave the little home in the cove and go away to the north. She would go to Fort Delaware, and they would not refuse to let a mother see her son—even a "Confederate" mother. Once she had looked upon his face again she would have courage to wait for his release.

Traveling was slow. Weeks passed before she was enabled to get through the opposing lines and into Washington. At last, dying from want, sorrow and fatigue, she stood in the commandant's room at Fort Delaware with written permission to see and speak with the boy she loved so well.

They tell sad stories of Fort Delaware in the south. They call it the Libby prison of the north. I don't like to believe it. Neither do you. They say that after a certain engagement the northern generals accused the Confederates of outrageous cruelty, and in retaliation a score or more prisoners were taken from the fort and ignominiously hanged. Perhaps they are mistaken, and that there were better grounds for hanging than that.

By some means a rumor had gained credence in the prisoner's barracks that something of the kind was to take place, while the impression prevailed that special vengeance was to be meted out to the soldiers of Alabama, because of alleged outrages committed by regiments from that state. Young Rogers was not a coward, but he had no desire to meet so unsoldierly a death. With that inventive genius which develops so rapidly among those held in confinement, the prisoners in Rogers' "gang" dug out the stone work and earth under one of the banks, and thus secured not only a comparatively safe hiding place for pilfered provisions, but also for one or more of their number when occasion demanded that they should keep under cover for a time.

The rumor that retaliatory measures were, in order struck consternation to many a brave heart, and when, for any reason, a Federal orderly came to the prisoners' barracks and called the name of a "Johnny Reb," there was a general feeling of misgiving, and an effort made, when possible, to discover for what purpose the prisoner was wanted before answering to his name. So that when one day the barracks were excited to a fever point by the calling of a dozen names or more, and the name of "Joe Rogers" rang with startling distinctness in the ears of that young Alabamian, he did not wait to be seen, but hurriedly crawled into the "grub" hole, and held his breath for fear of discovery and the consequences that would follow. Three times the orderly called:

"Joe Rogers! Joe Rogers! Joe Rogers!" rang through the long corridor.

Then the prisoners crowded around, and the orderly seemed to be unaware that Rogers had failed to answer to his name. He went away, and on the records it was written that Joe Rogers had been transferred—as even the officers thought—to be hanged.

A sad look came into the face of the commanding officer when the white haired woman gave him the slip of paper that to her meant so much.

"Rogers is not here now," he said, finally.

She looked at him, dazed by the intelligence.

"Not—here?"

"No; he has been transferred."

"Where?"

The officer had a heart.

"I—I do not know," he said. He could not tell that sad eyed woman what he believed to be the truth.

But he could not deceive her.

"He is dead!" she cried, wildly, and tottering forward she clasped her hands across her breast and sank into a chair.

"My poor boy!" she sobbed. "I loved you so, and yet I was too late!"

The parched lids closed over the sad gray eyes; the tired head fell forward the nervous fingers relaxed their hold.

"Come," said the officer, kindly; "you must go now. I cannot permit you to remain here."

There was no answer.

"I am waiting"—he began, and then he paused abruptly. Something strange in her appearance startled him, and he stooped down and peered into her face. As he did so tears came into his eyes. The sweet faced mother would never see the valley of the Tennessee again.

She was dead!

News flies in jails as it flies elsewhere. In his hiding place that night young Rogers was told the story of his mother's death. Strong man though he was, the shock was almost more than he could bear, and he grieved bitterly at the thought that, even dead, he might not look upon her face. But he was glad for one thing. There were kind hearts among the boys in blue, and they took the body of the dead mother across to New Castle, and there in the old church yard reverently laid it to rest.

Rogers managed to escape detection for the few weeks remaining before the close of the war. After the surrender he was liberated and returned to Alabama. There he lives and there I met him. He told me this story, and I repeat it because it comes so near home. It interested me. I think it will you.—Philadelphia News.

How They Marry in Louisiana.

Ever marry anybody in Louisiana. No. Well, marriage is a mighty serious matter in that commonwealth, and the young man who contemplates a matrimonial incursion into the pelican state cannot be too careful. I know whereof I speak, having married there once myself. In the first place a license costs $2.50, and before a minister is allowed to officiate you must not only present your marriage license, but are required to give bond and security in the sum of $2,500 for the proper maintenance of your prospective bride during married life. Imagine the dilemma of a stranger who arrives in the night, knows nobody except his girl, and wants to get married at early candle-light and take the next train. Imagine his embarrassment, I say, when he finds that he is compelled to go out among a lot of strangers, who have all been apprised beforehand of the nature of his expidition, and are more or less jealous of him, and make a $2,500 bond, before the ceremony can proceed.

THE MAGIC FLAGON.

Once upon a time there was an old tramp who was perfectly willing to work; but he could find no one who would give him employment, because he was a tramp. No one would let him go out and saw wood, for fear he would run away with the saw; so he had a pretty hard time of it.

One day he offered to chop some wood for a meal; and the farmer to whom the offer was made, agreed to accept his terms if he would allow himself to be chained to a stone post by the ankle while working, that it might not become necessary for the agriculturist to purchase a new ax.

The tramp readily assented, and was duly chained to the post and the ax put in his hands. He chopped away like a good fellow, and the wood was soon lying about him in great piles.

"It is awful rough," he sighed, as he heard the wind whistling through his tasselated coat-tails, "to be looked upon as a common tramp when you are not that by nature."

While he was thus mumbling his sorrows, a good-natured fairy, who had been making a rest in the shrubbery near by, overheard him and came to his side.

"Are you not, then, a common tramp?" the fairy asked.

"Not at all," replied the tramp; "but I am worthless, though willing."

"But why are you a tramp?" asked the fairy.

"Because my father sent me to Harvard, where I was graduated in due time, filled with things that are of no practical use."

"That is indeed sad," replied the fairy; "but if you are really willing to work, and can't get work, here is a magic flagon. It was originally a tomato-can; but now it is a charmed vessel. Whenever you want a drink of beer, just fill this with water, and it will immediately turn into beer. When you are hungry, put sand and stones into it, and they will turn into bread and meat."

The tramp was very grateful to the fairy for this splendid gift, and would have danced for joy if the chain on his ankle had permitted it. So he chopped on, harder and harder, and was as happy as he could be. After awhile the farmer's boy passed with a pail of water. The tramp was very thirsty.

"Won't you give me a drink of that?" he asked.

The boy paused, and the tramp filled his can. After the boy left, he looked into it and saw nothing but foam. Then he took a long draught—a draught whose length equalled the can's maximum capacity. Then he stooped and put some sand into it, with a stone or two. No sooner had he done so, than he reached into the can and took out two roast-beef sandwiches. The bread was soft and white, and the beef was rare and juicy. As the sandwich joined the beer, the tramp's eyes almost split with joy. He had not felt so light-hearted fot years. He was afraid to drink any more beer, for fear his joy might render him reckless and cause him to split his foot instead of the wood.

"Oh, if I could only get loose from this chain," he said, "I would not bother about the meal due me!"

But he couldn't get loose; and the farmer for whom he was doing the chopping was absent-minded and forgot to go to him, and left him out all night.

The tramp was very indignant, now that he owned the magic flagon, and was independent. He had a nice meal of bread and meat, and would have had lots of beer if he had only been able to get the water to put in the can.

At early dawn the farmer came out, and laughingly said that he supposed the tramp had chopped wood all night to keep warm.

The tramp was mad, but did not say anything. He knew he had done his last day's work in the way of chores. He would make his way back to Boston by degrees. All he would require on the way would be a brook and a sand-hill. His greatest fear was that he might lose his magic flagon, and again be an outcast.

All these things passed through his mind as the farmer was unchaining him.

"Breakfast is ready," said the farmer.

"I don't want any breakfast," replied the tramp: "I only asked to chop your wood to get the necessary exercise to rid me of my rheumatism. I am a wealthy amateur, out on a walking tour for the fun of the thing."

Then he skipped lightly off the place and made for a spring on the wayside, where he sat down and filled his soul with delight, and his stomach with haslet and bread and wine; for the flagon only gave breakfast edibles in the morning, such as liver, chops and omelette, with Sauterne; at noontime it gave an entree and beer, and, at night, roti and claret.

The tramp lived so high on the first day that at night he was no nearer Boston; except in spirit, than he was in the morning.

"Oh, I shall soon be back in Boston, studying Tolstoi and Browning," he mused, as he stretched himself out for a sleep, with the can fastened securely next his heart.

In the morning he arose and passed on his way, stopping at meal-times by a river or a brookside, to brace up his inner man.

And so he kept it up until he finally reached Boston, where he opened a small restaurant.

All the capital was a month's rent in advance. To get this he peddled sandwiches made in his flagon on foot. When he rented his place he had running water in it, and a load of sand in the back room.

He could thus sell bear at a cent a glass, and sandwiches at a cent apiece. Everything was clear gain. He was making money hand over fist, and no one knew the secret until a newspaper man saw him making his supply for the day, through a crack in the shutter. A full account appeared soon after and the tramp told how the fairy had given him the can and his subsequent history.

The next morning the tramp awoke to find his place had been entered and the magic flagon stolen.

And to this day, whenever a tramp sees a tomato-can lying on an ash-heap, he picks it up and buckles it on like a sword, in the hope that at the first spring it may turn out to be the magic flagon.—Puck.

THE GERM THEORY.

The Source of Disease in Man and Animals.

At the outset I would touch on the curious question whether a process akin to natural selection in the germ world may not modify the character of these germs in ways resembling those which have been adopted for their artificial modification. The various forms of life represented by these minute organisms have their stages of development like the higher forms of life, only lasting a much shorter time, so that with a very small portion of life even of an individual man hundreds of generations of germ life may pass. Again the lives of these germs doubtless depend upon their environment, and the various species undergo during the course of many generations changes akin to those which effect (in many generations of their much longer lives) the higher orders of the animal and vegetable. Hence, during the lifetime of an individual, and far more during several generations (as we measure time) the character of the disease germs to which smallpox, typhus fever, scarlet fever, measles and other such zymotic diseases are due may undergo marked alteration. We could thus understand the more or less deadly character of such diseases in particular years, and also in particular regions. We can also understand that some of the diseases of ancient times which seem to have disappeared may in reality be represented by diseases of the present day which resemble them in certain respects, but are, nevertheless, distinct diseases, and in particular differ markedly in destructiveness.

RELICS OF THE BLACK DEATH.

For example, the plague, as known in Europe only two centuries ago, has certainly no modern representative in the countries where in was once so greatly feared, if it exists anywhere. What is to-day called the plague in Oriental countries is a different disease, yet there are reasons for believing that our typhus fever is really akin to the "black death" of old times. The story is well authenticated which tells how in the place where certain victims of the great plague of 1665 were buried, death and disease lurked in wait, and nearly two centuries found victims among workmen employed to dig in the place where a pit had been prepared for the corpses too numerous to be buried in separate graves. But the illness that fell upon four of these workmen and on seventy others who contracted from them was not the plague but simple typhus fever. Assuming as we may fairly do, that the germs of the plague disease caused the fever which attacked these Nineteenth Century workmen, we have evidence that the typhus fever of our time is the direct descendant of the plague of former ages.

The evidence is not quite so clear in the case of vaccinia and smallpox; since it has not been demonstrated that protection against a particular disease can only be given by passing through a disease actually akin to it. It might be argued that as the particular effects of quinine which gives protection against malaria argue no kinship between malaria and the action of quinine, so the protective influence of vaccine inoculation does not necessarily prove that the germs which produce vaccinia (the disease, if so it can be called, following vaccination) are the same in species as those which produce smallpox.

Still in the light of recent evidence respecting zymotic diseases and germ diseases generally, it may be regarded as practically certain that the disease germs of vaccinia are the direct descendants of smallpox germs, which, during their residence in the heifer, have undergone a certain modification rendering them inocuous, while nevertheless introduced into the blood of the human body, they produce that particular change which results in what we call "protection" against smallpox. This being so, it may be regarded as probable that in the case of any other disease known to be produced by germs, methods of cultivation may be discovered by which the disease germs may be so cultivated as to lose their total power, while generating a disease sufficiently akin to the more dangerous illness to render the patient safe thereafter or for a while against its influence. So, that, as I pointed out several years since, when as yet such expectations were regarded as fanciful, typhus, scarlet fever, diphtheria, and a host of other ailments, which are known to be due to the presence of living organisms in the blood or tissues, may be treated as we now treat smallpox.

PASTEUR'S RESEARCHES.

It is noteworthy that men who seem careless about applying the protective influence of vaccination to their own families show a marked zeal in seizing at any protection for their cattle which kindred methods may provide. Thus, though Pasteur's researches into the terribly destructive disease known as splenic fever (some times called anthrax or charbon) were at first ridiculed and his conclusion opposed, the proprietors of flocks and herds agreed with admirable unanimity in accepting his means of protection as soon as the validity of his system had been demonstrated. The history of anthrax is instructive. The disease resembles the black plague in its action and in the rapidity with which its effects are developed. In bad cases death occurs in twenty-four hours. Where the disease is very prevalent proprietors have been ruined by the entire destruction of their flocks and herds. Between the years 1867 and 1870 no less than 50,000 deaths occurred among horses, cattle and sheep, in the district of Novgorod, in Russia, while 568 human beings perished to whom the disease had been in various ways communicated.

Pasteur's inquiries into the development of anthrax were characterized by the same combined patience, ingenuity and keenness which he had shown in his researches into pebrine, the silkworm disease. So soon as he had recognized the true nature of the anthrax bacillus he studied methods for cultivating it so as to mitigate its poisonous effects. His methods consisted in cultivating the bacillus in meat-juice or chicken-broth, to which air has access, but not dust. A certain time is allowed to elapse before it is employed for inoculation. If this period does not exceed two months the virulence of the bacillus is little diminished; but if it is extended to three or four months, the disease produced by inoculation is less severe and a considerable proportion recover; if the time is prolonged to eight months the disease produced by the bacillus is so mild that none of the inoculated animals perish, all quickly regaining full health and vigor, while all are safe, for at least a considerable period, from the deadly attack of the veritable anthrax.

A DECISIVE EXPERIMENT.

It was not until a crucial series of experiment (such as can not be made when human beings are in question) had been carried out that Pasteur's system of treatment was adopted. A flock of 50 sheep was placed at his disposal. He vaccinated (to use a convenient if not quite correct expression) twenty-five of these with the cultivated anthrax poison, repeating the operation a fortnight later. All the animals thus treated passed through a slight illness, but at the end of the month were as well as the remaining twenty-five. He now inoculated all fifty with the strongest anthrax poison, predicting that within twenty-four hours, or before 6 o'clock next day, the twenty-five who were inoculated for the first time would all be dead, while the others would be perfectly well. A large number of cattle proprietors, veterinary surgeons, cavalry officers, and others interested in animals, gathered next day on the field where were the subjects of the experiment. At 2 o'clock twenty-three of the unprotected sheep were dead; the twenty-fourth died at 3 the twenty-fifth at 4. But the twenty-five vaccinated sheep were all in perfectly good condition. One of them who had been purposely inoculated with an extra dose of the poison had been slightly indisposed for a few hours, but he was now as well as the rest. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

When Shall Our Young Women Marry?

The Brooklyn, N. Y., Magazine having propounded the question: "When shall our young women marry?" prints answers from a number of eminent women who might be supposed well qualified to speak. Louisa M. Alcott unhesitatingly gives her opinion that from twenty-three to twenty-five years is the right average age, and she claims to speak as "teacher, nurse, author and confidante to old and young." Rebecca Harding Davis says the time for a girl to marry is when she falls in love with a good man who loves her. Madeline V. Dahlgren believes in reasonably early marriages and thinks that a girl of twenty summers ought to be able to decide on a match without making any serious mistake. Lucy Stone doesn't favor early marriage. She puts the suitable age at from 25 to 30. Helen Campbell would clear the divorce docket by teaching that no man is fit to marry before 30 and no woman before 25. Julia C. R. Dorr says one flower blossoms in May, and another in August, but probably between 20 and 25 is the best age for a girl's marriage. Eunice White Beecher says there are no two cases alike, but she finds reasons why marriage of girls from 18 to 21 would seem to promise the happiest union provided true love was the foundation and the man not too old. Mary L. Booth declines to fix a limit of age, but says a girl before marriage should have an opportunity to see something of the world and to partake of the amusements of her age, that she may not afterwards be pursued with regret for having been defrauded of the enjoyment of her youth. Elizabeth P. Peabody wouldn't have a girl marry till she meets her ideal, and Adeline T. Whitney says she should marry when she is fitted for married life. The views expressed are all interesting, and all seem to agree that the girls ought to marry and be wide awake about it too. At the same time there is evidence that each and every one of these very competent advisers looks upon the matter as very serious business indeed.

The Curse of Worrying.

For Good Housekeeping.

Worrying is the cause more trouble than any other one thing, not except ng alcohol, for it leads men to murder, suicide, embezzlements, insanity, drink, family estrangements, quarrels and business difficulties. Worried people cannot make good bargains. Their judgments become so warped or twisted though dwelling too long on the same subject; with those subjects they are no clearer at the end of their thinking than they are at the beginning. There are multitudes of deaths every year attributed to regular specific diseases, as typhoid fever, dyspepsia, consumption and heart disease, which have for their cause worry. Worry induces such a condition of body that it readily receives the germs of disease.

To one who was accustomed to worry a friend said, who avoided worry as much as possible:

"What would you do if you stopped to consider the possibilities of every act? I knew of a woman who walked carefully across a smooth carpeted floor; she fell, broke her hip-joint and died in a few days. I knew of a neighbor who ate his dinner and fell dead as he rose from the table. Another went to sleep and never woke; another rode out and was killed." Thus, instance after instance might be mentioned for every daily act, if we had traveled or read much or met many persons.

Occasionally we meet people who can truly be called born fretters; they fret at everything, and seven days and seven nights scarcely give them time enough during the week to do all the worrying they are capable of doing; as for any one living with them it is worse punishment than they have to endure themselves.

We daily meet faces that show the results of worry; they are all seamed and wrinkled and full of lines. They should be a warning to us. If the time and strength spent in worrying could be spent in self-improvement and benefiting those near us there would be many changes in every community.

Human Depravity on the Frontier.

Polla-walla-kawacka, the big medicine chief of the Comanches, arose from the light task of removing the tangled scalp from the negro sergeant he had slain. "Speaking of the tear-off wool," he began, but at that the dead man sprang to his feet with a howl of anguish and rage and seizing the gigantic savage with both hands, he rent him in twain. "It is our native Injunstries that need protection," said the avenged soldier, calmly, as he lay down and died again, while the terrified tribe fled shrieking back to the reservation, to give themselves up and draw more rations.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Witty Waifs.

Mistress (severely)—Bridget, I told you to tell those ladies that I was out. Bridget—So I did, mum; I said you was out, but I thought you'd be back in a few minutes, an' begorra, mum, they said they'd come in an' wait.—New York Sun.

Esquimau—"Well, stranger, what are you doing up here?" "I came up to look at the country, but I guess I'll go home again. I don't like the climate." "What's the matter with it?" "Too sultry by far." "Sultry? Holy Grail! Where are you from?" "New York."—Lincoln Journal.

When a new town is growing all the male inhabitants of the place can drink at the same bar; but they must have at least five kinds of churches to accommodate those of different creeds. This peculiarity shows that religion is divided where sin is united, and the match is unequal.

Mistress—Then you are going? Cook—I am. I've been in the habit of living with ladies (marked emphasis on the last work). M. (sarcastically)—Well, if you are going, leave us a lock of your hair. C.—I have, ma'am. You'll find it in the butter.—Boston Courier.

Mr. Powderly recently said, when asked by a reporter for his reply to the charge of lying brought against by Mayor Hewitt; "Well, I guess I can tell fibs if necessary; I'm no Washington."

Bronson Alcott was a vegetarian, and often criticised meat eaters harshly. To one of them he declared one day that the eater of mutton becomes a sheep, the eater of pork becomes a hog, etc. "And is it also true," interposed the other, "that eaters of vegetables become small potatoes?"

A story culled from Mr. Frith's autobiography, and for which the writer vouches, is: "At one of the court balls in England Landseer attended, and when the King of Portugal, who was also a guest, was made aware of the presence of the great animal painter, he expressed his desire for an introduction. Landseer was presented, and the King in his imperfect English, said: 'Oh, Mr. Landseer, I am delighted to make your acquaintance. I am so fond of "beasts"!'"

Reformed Journalism.

Since the establishment of a "chair of journalism," in some of the colleges, the tone of editorials in some of the rural papers have been improved. The Democrat, at Meriden, Miss., is edited by a confessed graduate of the college which makes a specialty of educating journalists. A few days since the smoke-house of a certain citizen took fire, and the Democrat contained the following account ot the fire, which "beggars description:"

"The water seemed to spur the fire to wilder deeds. The flames and the smoke climbed and rolled higher and higher, and the scene became luridly awfully magnificent beyond tottering words' power to paint. It was a cant o of Dante's 'Inferno,' acted in all its fiery pomp and splendor. Banners of flame would now be waved out by dark smoke hands, then ten million curling little pennons of fire would hiss and flutter, then vanish, and a great reeling tower of smoke, whose darkness was stabbed and spangled with flame and sparks, would fill the scene, while all around the surroundnig buildings grimly shot back from reflecting surfaces a crimson greeting, and up in the far-off sky the out-glistened stars turned pale for shame, and the moon through the drifted smoke glowed like a bowl of blood."

Pinning a Gopher.

The gopher is quick and impudent. An English tourist, while staying at a wayside station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, saw an amusing contest between a cunning gopher and a smart Indian. The gopher, being fat, was marked by the Indian, hungry for a breakfast, as it entered its hole.

He crept on his stomach along the ground, and cautiously approached the hole, and, kneeling over it, waited, knife in hand, for the gopher to appear.

But the cunning animal had two entrances to its underground house. When the Indian held the knife over the front door, the gopher poked its nose out of the back door.

With a turn of his wrist, the Indian thrust the knife at the nose; but he was not quick enough, for the gopher, with a squeak, backed into its hole, and in a moment was looking out of the other entrance.

For several minutes this sort of hide-and-seek went on between the hungry Indian and the fat gopher. Suddenly the knife flashed, there was a squeak of pain, and the gopher lay pinned to the earth. The Indian had earned and gained his breakfast.

A Novel Bit of Brain Work.

A Springfield, Mass., bookkeeper has perfected a machine that is designed to aid brother bookkeepers and accountants in running up long lines of figures. He has been at work on the invention since 1873, and had the thing patented something like a year ago. The machine is cased in a light wooden box about eight inches square and three deep, and, lifting the cover, the interior is seen to hold an enamelled white surface, on which are two dials, and which shows the brass keyboard in the lower left-hand corner. The larger dial of the two is on the left of the machine, and is divided into 100 sections. The rim of the smaller dial is likewise cut into twenty sections. The hand which moves about the first dial is called the unit pointer. That which moves about the smaller one is called the hundred pointer. A little finger play on the brass keyboard makes the object of the dials and the reason of the pointers' names quickly understood.

The nine keys on the board are numbered from one to nine, and are placed in regular order, but also in two rows, 2, 4, 6 and 8 being above, and the odd numbers below. The key is a brass upright, and as the finger draws on it a spring allows it to slip back toward the lower end of the box. The pulling of each key on the board sends the unit pointer along on its journey around the dial as many points as there are units in the number of the key. Pull the 9 key, and the dial set at 0 goes to 9. Pull the same key again and the unit pointer moves to 18. Pull the 1, 2 and 3 keys now, and the pointer goes consecutively with a hop, skip and jump to twenty-four. When the unit pointer, keeping up its agile athletics, has reached its starting point again, there is a quick little motion on the right hand dial. The pointer then has "dotted and gone one." The machine's internal clockwork is more accurate than a human head can hope to be. It isn't troubled with malaria, nor is it ever larger in the morning than it was the night before. All the accountant has to do is to run his eye up and down the columns, pulling each respective key as he reaches the corresponding figure. A day is sufficient in which to learn the keyboard, and the motion of the hand quickly becomes almost involuntary. The expert can run the figures in his head and on the keyboard simultaneously, thus "proving" his work by one trip up or down the column. Carrying is performed by setting the pointer at the number to be carried. To set the unit pointer all that is necessary is to hold down key 1 and turn the point forward to a number one less than the one carried. On releasing the 1 key the pointer is on the desired number. The hundred pointer can be moved in either direction. The hand easily operates the nine keys, thus: Nos. 1, 2 and three with the first finger, 4 and 5 with the second, 6 and 7 with the third, 8 and 9 with the fourth. The inventor claims for the machine unerring accuracy and surprising rapidity. He says an expert can add 240 figures a minute with it.

Knaves and Lawyers.

Law, says Hooker, has its seat in the bosom of God. But that is perhaps not altogether true of all lawyers. When a rich man went to his lawyer and asked whether he could take a certain course his lawyer replied that undoubtedly he could take it, but that it would land him in the State prison. "Exactly," returned the man; "now I want to know how near I can come to it and keep out of Sing Sing," and the lawyer told him, and charged accordingly. Such counselors are not unknown. The revelations of the last few years have demonstrated that it is very profitable for lawyers to show knaves how much crime they can commit without going to the State prison. It is an immense offense, an abuse of the profession of law much more monstrous and anarchical than any misconduct which can be truthfully charged upon the press. It is an abuse, indeed, which an eloquent lawyer like Mr. Dougherty, speaking to his fellow-lawyers, might well have denounced with fiery zeal as tending to dishonor the entire profession. The history of the Sharp case puts the legal profession upon the defense much more than the press. The Judges, indeed, who insisted upon an honest observance of the forms of judicial procedure should have been resolutely sustained. But when it was known that money had corrupted Aldermen, and apparently corrupted lawyers, and would leave no other opportunity of corruption untried, it was hardly a great blow struck at the pure administration of justice to take good care that juries and Judges should stand in the full light of public scrutiny. If the task was overdone, and personal character was unjustly assailed, the abuse was less than the prostitution of legal skill and the possible perversion of judicial forms to a miscarriage of justice.—George William Curtis.

The other day while it rained, a flock of sparrows got on the dry side of Hamilton's monument in Trinity Churchyard. Soon an immense cat came through the railing. Just as a sparrow had returned with a worm, which immediately disappeared, the sparrow was in the clutches of the cat. All this was witnessed from a broker's office. The broker gave a quick order to his office boy, and boy and the broker' bull-dog went flying after that cat. The dog caught it when it ha1 almost reached Church-st., and in a second its back was broken. Then the big policeman went for that dog with a club, and the dog flew at him. The policeman shot the dog, the boy swore at the police, the latter cuffed the boy, and the broker swears that he will "have that cop broke."—New York Theatre.

It is Jay Gould's brains, not his wealth, that make him almost omnipotent in Wall street. Other men have fortunes almost as large as his; none are so shrewd and daring in stock manipulation. When he is away Wall street's pulse lags. When he starts for home the stock market is feverish with excitement. When he is in Gotham the quotations move up and down, almost at his own sweet will. He is a little, homely, weak man, whom almost any one could throw across the street. His reputation is bad, his health poor, and yet this insignificant-looking little fellow can shake the money centres of two continents. What a mystery genius is, and Jay Gould is a money genius.

The Times received a deserved set back in a resolution of censure passed by the Crookston Fire Department, and, as usual, tries to vent its spite on THE JOURNAL, claiming that if we had not called attention to its slur upon the boys, no one would have noticed it. This is what the egotistical Times young man says before he had learned the action of the Department:

"THE JOURNAL assumes to itself the role of champion for the Crookston Fire Department to protect it against the criticisms of the Times. The fire boys, we are glad to say, took the Times' criticisms in the friendly manner in which they were intended. The department has not degenerated so low as to be unable to stand a little friendly criticism, but if it had, it is safe to say it would not further degrade itself by appointing our cotemporary its defender."

After finding out that the boys very justly resented the Times man's impertinent meddling with a subject which he personally knew nothing about, he proceeds to say:

"LATER.—Since the above was in print the Times is sorry to learn that the good opinion of the Fire Department, expressed above, was hardly merited. At their meeting last night, we understand, they took occasion to censure the Times for criticizing them, and at the same time offered a vote of thanks to THE JOURNAL for defending them. We look upon this as a very short sighted action, to say the least. The Times has always been the first to give the boys praise when they merited it, and will continue to do so in the future. But it will also continue to make note of their little errors without fear or favor. Our best friend is not he who deals out the most taffy, but it is he who not only praises us for our good qualities, but tells us of our mistakes that we may rectify them. Notwithstanding some of the firemen did not take kindly to our criticism, we believe it has had the effect of making them more careful, and with this we are perfectly satisfied."

The point in the Times man's crop seems to be that there is no one but himself capable of judging whether the boys do well at any fire, or the reverse, and the report of any other man is impertinent meddling, no matter whether he is a mile away from the scene of action, quietly snoozing, or (which don't often happen in the night) is on the ground from first to last, sees and notes every movement made. He thinks it "very short-sighted action" on the part of the boys to resent the uncalled for slur upon them by one who knew nothing about the fire until informed of it hours afterward. He says "our" best friend is not he who gives us taffy, &c. This may be so in a certain sense, but implies that "our best friend" should know what he is talking about and should be a competent judge, in both of which points the Times man is lacking. He sets himself up, however, as a sure and infallible judge, from whose opinions there can be no appeal, but the trouble is that he or his opinion has no weight save in his own boundless opinion of himself. His account of that fire was not only a wrong to the boys themselves, but to the city, for it was calculated to give the impression that we have no adequate means of defense in case of fire, which is utterly false, and a person of such great pretensions as the Times man is, should be more careful how he jumps at conclusions on mere hearsay. A "friendly criticism," as he calls it, to be just, should be made from personal knowledge and by a person competent to be a judge in the matter. Next time a fire occurs in the night, the boys, after attending to it, should proceed to the residence of the Times man and turn the hose on him so that he may be able to speak from personal knowledge and experience, then his "friendly criticism" would have the merit, (at least) of a personal experience.

Elsewhere in this issue we reproduce, by special request, a communication by Mr. E. D. Childs to the Crookston Chronicle. We commend it to the careful perusal of our readers as it contains a good view of the workings of the high tariff from the standpoint of the farmer. Mr. Childs is one of our intelligent, thinking farmers who makes a study of his profession and is not content to follow in old worn ruts simply because his forefathers did that way. He believes in thinking and working for himself and such men, in any line of business are your successful men. Somehow he does not take kindly to the idea that the high tariff protects the farmer by furnishing him the only chance he has to sell his grain and by the way it is a curious fact that the thinking men among the very classes whom the high protectionist claims to be most benefitted, (i. e. the farmers and the laboring men,) are the ones who are kicking against the high tariff the most vigorously. Some way they seem to have an idea that a change in the program would be beneficial to them and without doubt they will soon render that request in so emphatic terms that one or the other of the great parties will be forced to heed them. The democratic party, while pretending to be in favor of a slashing tariff reduction, either do not dare to carry out the program or are unable to do so and it will be left for the republican party to accomplish, as is ever the case where a great reform is needed. That party never yet has been found wanting and we believe it will not in this case.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Crookston and Southeastern Railroad Company will be held at the office of A. D. Stephens, on Thursday, April 26th, at 8 o'clock p. m. Important business will be transacted.

The temperance lecture at McKinnon's hall on Saturday last was well attended. Mrs. Bailey is a very fluent talker, though often her ideas seem to crowd too fast for utterance. Her lecture was roseate with the good time to come when the prohibition party shall have "got it." Just exactly how she expects to unite the temperance elements of the republican and democratic parties with the prohibition party she did not make perfectly clear, but she intimated that they would never be forgiven by the prohibs when they come into their kingdom. One would get the idea that the prohibition party does not need the help of that class of people, but that, by some fairy means they were bound to ride triumphantly into power and beholden to no one but themselves. This is a very practical kind of a world and all political parties are dependent upon human agencies in a great degree and must take humanity as they find it—not as they would like it to be—and must make the most of the material at hand. No party can afford to mount itself on stilts and look disdainfully down upon the common herd with a—"I don't care a continental whether you vote for me or not, I have one good, solid plank in my platform and the sooner you get upon it the sooner I shall triumph—but mind you, you can't share that triumph with me"—kind of an attitude and expect to accomplish any marked results. The prohibition party has one grand idea,—temperance, but seems to think it has a patent on it and cannot look with the least grain of allowance upon any one who believes in making progress toward it even though it can not be accomplished at one blow. If this should be done, in this way it will be the first grand reform in the history of the world ever accomplished in this way. Every other one has been done step by step, slow but sure, until the grand work stands a complete whole, like human character which blossoms not into perfect fullness in one day.

The railroad company has made the following rates on a five gallon can of cream destined for our factory:

25 miles or under	10 cents.
26 to 50 miles	11 "
51 to 75 "	12 "
76 to 100 "	13 "
101 to 150 "	14 "

This price includes the return of the can to the station from which shipped. At this rate every farmer living within three or four miles of the road could send his cream to our creamery and receive almost equal benefits with the farmer who lives within that distance of the institution.

The Salmagundi Club met Friday evening, April 20th, at the home of Miss Ayers. The theme of the evening's study was: "Life and Works of Washington Irving." The most interesting features of the program were;

"Sketch of Irving's Life,"......Mr. Kelso,
Essay—"Irving's Alhambra"
..............................Miss Jayne,
Reading—"Legend of the Rose of the Alhambra..................Miss Bronson.
Spanish Health Song......Mr. Peterson.

The last number was well rendered, Mr. Peterson singing without accompaniment.

In the business meeting which followed the program, a vote of good will was given Misses Bronson and Phillips who were in attendance for the last time, as they were about to leave the city.

The Salmagundi has been a source of great profit and pleasure to its members and will be continued during the summer.

A Shooting Tournament.

The boys are making great preparations for the coming tournament which takes place in this city on May 31st and June 1st and 2d. There will be $1,000 in cash prizes besides which K. D. Chase comes to the front with an offer of a $500 city lot as a grand sweepstakes prize, (we believe that's what they call it.) Parties from Winnipeg, Grand Forks, Forgo, Fergus Falls, St. Paul, Lisbon, Plainview, Webster Ioa, and Lafayette Ind., have signified their intention to be present and participate; among the number being some noted shots. The boys anticipate grand times.

Why is This Thusly?

Last week, wheat was quoted at Fertile at 66 cents for No. 1 Hard. At the same time the market price in Crookston was 65. We fail to see any good reason why buyers along this line of road cannot pay as much for wheat as do the buyers along the D. & M., but according to the above showing they don't seem to.

Angus Items.

A little rain Saturday and Sunday.

Seeding is well under headway.

Fritz Mellok has gone down to Minneapolis to be gone a week or two.

Mr. D. McLennen is quite sick with typhoid fever. Mrs. McLennen was sent for and came up Friday.

Angus is to have a machine warehouse this season.

Quite a number of the farmers in this vicinity have been trying drills this spring, but they are not giving as good satisfaction as the broadcast seeders.

Mr. G. Evens is to build a large barn this spring to accommodate his increasing number of horses and cattle.

F. R. Stevens has moved back from Euclid where he has been during the past winter.

The Ladies' Aid Society, of Angus, has suspended operations until after seeding.

The rooms over the store are being fixed up in great shape and as Mr. Montgomery went East about ten days ago, to be gone about two weeks, it looks as though he might not come back alone.

Beltrami Telautographs.

For the past week the townsite has been covered with water about knee deep, caused by the overflowing of the Sand Hill River a few miles east of here. It is subsiding now and one week of pleasant weather will put the roads in good condition again.

James Hayes, of the firm of Hayes Bro's, who has been spending the winter with relatives and friends in Pennsylvania, returned Thursday. He says the spring is as backward there as it is here.

C. E. Ford, successor to A. W. Mott & Co., left Wednesday evening for Minneapolis, where he will remain for some time. His son, C. E. Ford, Jr., will have charge of the business during his absence.

John Egge is building a pretty little cottage on Atlantic avenue.

Mrs. C. W. Kimberly, of Crookston, at been visiting friends here the past week.

Those who have occasion to visit Beltrami will be pleased to learn that they can get good accommodations at the Gilsoul Hotel. Joe is a genial, good-natured landlord.

Dept. P. M. Ohl's trade is increasing so that he is obliged to put in new shelving and counters and hire extra help.

D. W. Haight's many friends here were very much disappointed this evening when they learned that he had changed his mind and would not visit us this summer. He is now at his old home in Iowa.

Miss Anna M. Nelson, teacher of the Beltrami public school, has made arrangements for the appropriate observance of Arbor Day. Our citizens have always been very much interested in tree culture, and no doubt this year will do very much to beautify their places.

The spring term of school in district 104 will begin Monday, April 30th. W. J. Nickle is the teacher.

EDNA.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 16, 1888.

Register and Receiver, Crookston, Minn.

GENTLEMEN:

In view of the order of the Hon. Secretary of the Interior dated August, 15, 1887, and office circular of Sept. 6 1887, detailed instructions were sent you Sept. 17, 1887, in regard to the restoration of indemnity lands within the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific R. R. and more particularly with reference to the manner in which filings or entries for said lands would be permitted by your office.

March 28, 1888 the resident counsel for the Northern Pacific R. R. Company, represents that many hundreds of applications to file for or enter lands under the above instructions have been made at the various land districts and that to order hearings in each case would entail much unnecessary trouble and expense to all parties in interest.

It is requested by said company that a test case be submitted involving all the questions or points liable to arise under any application to file for or enter this class of lands and that all other applications be suspended awaiting a final determination of said case.

I see no objection to such a course provided the interests of no individual case are jeopardized thereby and provided further that each applicant to file or enter is willing to agree thereto, but whenever any claimant desires a separate hearing it should be accorded in every instance. The rights of any claimant who does not agree to this mode of procedure cannot be affected thereby. My former instructions are modified in accordance herewith.

The resident attorneys for the road will be advised by this office and you will be careful to notify each applicant fully of their respective rights.

Very Respectfully,
S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Commissioner.

"Hill's Boat No. 1."

Successful Launching of the Northern Light at Cleveland.

Duluth Daily Tribune.

The steamship Northern Light was successfully launched at Cleveland at 8 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon from the stocks of the Globe Iron Ship Building company. The Northern Light, or "Hill's Boat No. 1," as she has frequently been spoken of, measures 290 feet reel, 312 feet over all, 40 feet beam, and 24½ feet hold. She has an estimated carrying capacity of 2,800 tons, and an estimated speed of 12½ miles per hour. The latter will be made by triple expansion cylinder, 24, 38 and 61 inches, with a 42 inch stroke and two Scotch boilers 14x12½feet. Her wheel will measure 14 feet in diameter, with a 17-foot pitch. She is provided with water tight bulkheads and water bottoms. To protect her from disaster in case of collision or striking a rocky bottom, she will have four gangways on each side and carry three spars more for unloading than anything else, as all the canvas she will carry will be jib and mizzen sails. All her cabins will be on deck, the foward cabin being beautifully finished in hard wood. In finishing it is proposed to give her no forecastle deck, and to construct her anchor deck even with the rail doing away with so much box foward and improving her appearance. Boilers and machinery will go at once into the Northern Light, and it is expected that she will be complete in every detail and ready for sea in about six weeks. As soon as completed she will be put on the Northern line between Duluth, West Superior and Buffalo and it is expected that she will be joined during the season, by two more boats for the same line from the yard of the same builders.

The Crop Outlook.

Farmers Will Pay More Attention to the Culture of Coarse Grains.

Duluth Daily Tribune.

Chicago, April 20—The Chicago Times tomorrow will publish several columns of special dispatches from its correspondents in the cereal growing districts of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakota outlining the crop situation in the northwest. Planting and seeding have been delayed by the lateness of the season from two to three weeks and very important changes are taking place. Farmers in practically every section of the northwest outside of the confines of the great RedRiver valley, which is one of the vast wheat fields, are paying more attention to the raising of coarse grains and less to wheat than usual. The effect of this will be to diminish spring wheat acreage and increase the area devoted to barley, flax and oats, and in the southern latitude to corn. This cutting down in the acreage of spring wheat may be an important market factor, in view of danger that threatens the winter wheat crop of western and middle western states. Regarding the delay in planting and seeding, the Times notes that the late season in the northwest does not necessarily mean a crop failure, but it increases the dangers to be encountered.

Politics and the Tripod.

Minneapolis' Evening Journal.

The Duluth News has started in to secure Knute Nelson's nomination for Governor and urges it in season and out. The tart and epigrammatic Red Wing Republican gives five reasons why it doesn't favor Knute for governor. These are: (1) He doesn't want it. (2) We don't need him for it, (3) He is needed more in the house or in the senate. (4) It isn't necessary to make him Governor in order to elect him senator and if such a course was pursued it would smack too much of log-rolling. (5) His nomination would shelve Rice, a thing which ought not to be done.

It is doubtful whether these reasons will repress the Nelson boomers. They will be apt to answer: (1) A public man in debt to his party couldn't well decline. (2) We need a strong state ticket to help the congressional and national tickets, and Nelson's nomination would put an effectual quietus on the factional strife between McGill, Merriam and Scheffer. (3) He has determined to retire from the house and can easily be returned to the senate to succeed Sabin, where a man representative of Minnesota's most advanced political ideas is needed, and where Nelson could accomplish much more for the Northwest than he could in the house. (4) A triumphant election as Governor would be an indorsement of his senatorial candidacy. His nomination for Governor under the circumstances would be tantamount to the direct election of a senator by the people. (5) Rice could then become Governor, or if it is preferred not to run two Scandinavians on the state ticket, Rice could run for congress in his own district.

This, in effect, is what Nelson's friends are saying. What can the Red Wing paper answer?

Two Bulls For Sale!

The Thoroughbred Shorthorn Bull, "Red River Valley," bred by Sam'l McCreary, Neshannock Falls, Lawrence Co., Pa., by whom he was sold to the late Geo. C. Reis, of Edna, in 1879, and by him brought to the Red River Valley. He was born May 30th, 1878, and his pedigree shows him to be in one of the very best Shorthorn families in existence. As my herd is all akin to him and I have now no further use for him, I will sell him at a bargain or trade for horses or other stock; also a thoroughbred son of his, one year old. These animals are both A 1 as their pedigree, which may be seen at my residence, clearly shows. D. MCMILLAN,

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk.—ss. In Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of Eleanor A. Witherow deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Elizabeth Cooper formerly Elizabeth Norie of Clay County, Minnesota, representing among other things that Eleanor A. Witherow late of Polk County, Minnesota, on the 15th day of February A. D. 1883, at Crookston in said County of Polk died intestate, and being a resident of this county at the time of her death leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a creditor of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to B. Clements, granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before the judge of this court, on Monday the 28th day of May A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the probate office in Crookston in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of deceased, and to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said county.

Dated at Crookston this 24th day of April A. D. 1888.

By the Court,

WHAT CROOKSTON NEEDS.

Just double everything mentioned above, except saloons, lawyers and doctors. Especially do we need more than double our manufactories. With millions of feet of the very best of white pine right at her door, there is no reason why she should not become an important lumbering centre. Crookston is the first important railway town on the log drive, furnishing facilities for shipping lumber east, west, north and south and intermediate points of the compass. The needs of this immense scope of country requires the product of a dozen or more such mills as the one we have, for years to come, and the pine lands tributary to Crookston by way of Red Lake River is adequate to the demand. Every bushel of wheat marketed in Crookston should be ground in Crookston. This would require many such mills as the one we have. At the present time we are shipping most of our wheat in bulk, paying freight to get our bran and shorts out of the country, when every pound of it is needed in the country. A dozen large flouring mills would not be too many, and every one of them could have a large and lucrative business. In manufactories of different kinds fortunes are waiting to be developed, and a good cabinet shop would be a bonanza to the lucky owner. There is no city in this great Northwest where the inducements offered to capital for investment are so great as right here in Crookston.

Money to Loan.

We have the cash always on hand to loan on good farm security. No second mortgage. No delay. No commission.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

[First publication April 19th, 1889]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty dollars ($60) installment of interest, which became due and payable on the 24th day of December, 1887, upon a certain mortgage made, executed, and delivered by John N. Ives and Annie Ives, his wife, of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 28th day of June A. D. 1884, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 30th day of June 1884, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 262, 263, 264 and 265.

And whereas a further default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the mortgagors failing and neglecting to pay the the taxes assessed against and levied upon the premises covered by said mortgage, prior to the date of the sale of lands for the payment of taxes, and the mortgagee, to protect the lien of its said mortgage, has been compelled to pay, and on the 2d day of May, 1887, did pay in satisfaction of the taxes then due and delinquent on said premises, the sum of twelve and 75-100 dollars ($12.75.) and the said defaults having each continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of such default and declaration aforesaid, there is claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and ninety-two dollars and twenty-nine one hundredths ($692.29,) and no action or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼.) of Section thirty-two (32.) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less, according to United States Government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest, taxes and fifty dollars attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on the 2d day of June A. D. 1888, subject to redemption at any time within one year, in manner provided by law.

Dated at Moorhead, April 12th A. D. 1888.

Special term April 17th, 1888.

In the matter of the estate of Robert McLeod deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of A. M. McDonald administrator of the estate of Robert McLeod, deceased, representing among other things, that he has fully administered said estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining and allowing his account of his administration, and for the assignment of the residue of said estate to heirs.

It is ordered, that said account be examined, and petition heard, by the judge of this court, on Saturday the 12th day of May A. D. 1888, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the probate office in Crookston in said county.

And it is further ordered, that notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said county.

Dated at Crookston this 17th day of April A. D. 1888.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk.—ss. District Court. 14th Judicial District.

In the matter of the assignment of L. M. Lambert and O. G. Mathews, copartners as Lambert & Mathews, insolvent.

On reading and filing the report of Charles M. Way, assignee of said Lambert & Mathews together with his account as such assignee.

Ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said Lambert & Mathews appear before said court at my chambers in the city of Moorhead, in the County of Clay, on Saturday the 19th day of May 1888, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, of said day, and show cause why said report and account be not approved and allowed, and said assignee be not directed to make final dividend of the assets in his hands as such assignee to such creditors as have proven their claims and filed releases of the same.

Ordered further that this order be served by publication in THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL once a week for three weeks previous to such hearing and by mailing a copy hereof to the address, if known, of each of the creditors of said estate.

Dated April 17th 1888.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk.—ss. In Probate Court.

Special term, held April 3d, 1888.

In the matter of the guardianship of Anton Anderson, minor.

On reading and filing the petition of Ole Anderson guardian of said minor, representing, among other things, that the said ward is seized of certain real estate in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and that it is necessary and desirable that all of the same should be sold, and praying for license to sell the same; and it appearing to the court, from said petition, that it would be for the best interest of the said Anton Anderson, minor, to sell said real estate at private sale.

It is ordered and directed, that the next of kin to said ward, and all persons interested in said estate, appear before the Judge of this court, on Monday the 21st day of May A. D. 1888, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the probate office in Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause, (if any there shall be) why license should not be granted for the sale of said real estate, according to the prayer of said petition.

And it is further ordered, that a copy of this order shall be published for four successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, the last of which publications shall be at least fourteen days before said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said county.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication March 15th 1888.]

DEFAULT HAING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of one hundred and eighty-three and 90-100 dollars which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Sarah Ann Allen and Joseph Allen, her husband, to G. W. Vis, bearing date the twenty-sixth day of December A. D. 1885, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 28th day of December A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock a. m., in book "2" of mortgages, on pages 284 and 285, and said G. W. Vis having died and having made Martha Vis, his wife, his sole legatee, and said Martha Vis having been duly appointed by the Probate Court of Ramsey County, Minnesota, administratrix "with the will annexed" of the estate of G. W. Vis and having duly qualified as such administratrix, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: All of Section one (1.) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-seven (47) west, of the 5th principal meridian, containing six hundred and fifty-three and 20-100 acres (653 20-100) more or less, according to the United States Government survey thereof, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county and state, on the third day of May A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated March 5th, A. D. 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE

BY FAILURE TO PAY INTEREST FOR the years 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886 and 1887 and taxes for the years 1885, 1886 and 1887. Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Octavianne Joly, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Alonzo F. Richardson, mortgagee, dated the fifth day of March A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-three and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the fifth day of March A. D. 1883, at 2:15 o'clock p. m., in book "X" of mortgages, on pages 290, 291 and 292, on which there is declared and claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred four and 72-100 dollars, principal and interest and seventy-one and 68-100 dollars taxes and interest, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

The said mortgage was duly assigned by an instrument thereof, duly executed and delivered by the said Alonzo F. Richardson, to D. N. Richardson and J. J. Richardson, dated the 25th day of February A. D. 1886, and recorded in said office of the Register of Deeds on the fifth day of March 1886, at 3 o'clock p. m., in book "23" of mortgages, on pages 528 and 529.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or by his deputy, on Saturday the 12th day of May A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The north half (n½) of the southeast quarter (se¼) and the northeast quarter (ne¼) of the southwest quarter (sw¼) and lot three (3) all in Section seven (7) in Township one hundred forty-nine (149) north of Range forty-three (43) west.

Dated this 24th day of March 1888.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 29th 1888.]

BE IT KNOWN, THAT ON THE FIFTEENTH day of February one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, Elisha B. Odell and Marion S. Odell, his wife, made, executed and delivered unto The Farmers' and Mechanics' Savings Bank of Minneapolis, their certain mortgage: That said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the fifteenth day of February A. D. 1881, at 3:20 o'clock in the afternoon, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 125, 126 and 127: That said mortgage conveyed the hereinafter described premises to secure the payment of six hundred ($600) dollars, in three years from its date, and the interest thereon at the rate of ten per centum, per annum, payable semi annually: That default has been made in the payment of said principal sum and interest thereon: That there is hereby claimed to be due on said mortgage debt the sum of seven hundred and two and forty hundredths ($702.40-100) dollars: That no action, or proceeding, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof: That said mortgaged premises are situate in Polk County, Minnesota, and are described as follows, viz: The southeast quarter of Section twenty-four (24.) Township one hundred and fifty-two (152.) Range forty-eight (48.) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less, according to government survey.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by reason of said default in the conditions of said mortgage, and by virtue of the power of sale therein contained, said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said described mortgaged premises, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county and state, on the fourteenth day of May A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption as provided by law.

MONTANA SHORT LINE.

When traveling every one should consider well the questions of economy, comfort, safety and speed, these questions being of the same importance in a journey of an hour as in one of several days' ride. An examination of the map will convince anyone that this is the most direct route to and from all the principal points in Central and Northern Minnesota, Dakota and Montana. Our epuipment and time are excellent. Our rates are the lowest, but this fact is something which speaks for itself. Definite figures and maps can be obtained by applying to any Agent of the Company, or the General Passenger Agent.

ST. PAUL MINNEAPOLIS MANITOBA RAILWAY.

The following are a few of the Principal Points reached via this Line:

ST. CLOUD, SAUK CENTRE, FERGUS FALLS, CROOKSTON, ST. VINCENT, HUTCHINSON, PAYNESVILLE, MORRIS, APPLETON AND BRECKENRIDGE, MINN.; WATERTOWN, ABERDEEN, ELLENDALE, WAHPETON, FARGO, GRAND FORKS, GRAFTON, DEVILS LAKE, BOTTINEAU AND BUFORD, DAKOTA; GLASGOW, DAWES (FT. BELKNAP), ASSINNIBOINE, FT. BENTON, GREAT FALLS, HELENA AND BUTTE, MONTANA; WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, AND ALL PACIFIC COAST POINTS.

Parties seeking farms or business locations will find unusual opportunities for both on this line in Northern Dakota and Montana, also in Minnesota where the Company has for sale at low prices and on favorable terms 2,000,000 acres of excellent farming, grazing and timber lands. What a Native Cow Can Do.

ED. HOARD'S DAIRYMAN:—I received the sample copies you sent me and am much pleased with the valuable information they contain as a dairy paper. I have always followed dairying in a small way, keeping from ten to fourteen cows and was generally satisfied with the cow that would give a large flow of milk, without testing its butter qualities, till within the last year or so. I find there is a vast difference in cow's milk as regards butter. I have a cow eight years old last June; she had always given a large flow of milk. She dropped her calf March 23d, 1887; commenced weighing milk March 27th. She has given, to March 10th, 1888, 9,500 pounds of milk. I did not think of making a butter test until June 20th, when the morning and night's mess weighed 43 pounds. Set in can and cooled in water to 62 degrees until sour. Churned whole milk, which made 3 lbs. 2 oz. of butter, after being washed in ice water and salted for use. August 16th, as before, 35 lbs. of milk made 2 lbs. 11 oz. of butter. Dec. 1st, 21 lbs. 10 oz. of milk made 1 lb. 10 oz. of butter, which makes an average of 13¼ lbs. of milk to 1 lb. of butter; which average would make 696 lbs. of butter for the season. She was milked twice a day until Feb. 6, and then gave 17½ lbs. per day. After that, milked once a day up to March 10th on one-half her usual grain ration with a view to drying her up. She was then giving 8 lbs. 8 oz. per day when I ceased milking her. She is supposed to be a native; am not sure as to that as I bought her mother of a stranger. Her mother was equally as good for milk. She has never eaten grain through the grass season until last. She was fed about 5 lbs. of meal and bran, mixed, per day, while on grass, and 9 lbs. when feeding hay. She is due for milk April 9th, 1888. I think this a remarkable record for the feed she had.

As I have no ax to grind, or stock to sell, 70 years of age and going out of the dairy business, the above record can be relied upon. The estimated weight of the cow is $950 or 1,000 lbs.

Barbourville, N. Y. JOHN DRAKE.

He'll Stand Without Hitching.

Philadelphia News: One great charm of Abraham Lincoln was his use of the homely language of the people, the smiles and metaphors which spring out of every day life. There were no frills on his talk. It was plain, simple, direct, and went straight to the spot.

In speaking of Judge Gresham a great friend of Lincoln said: "He is more like Lincoln in his talk and in his character than any man I know." This statement does not agee with the opinion of the people who talk about the man who during the war was known to Grant as "the fighting colonel." But such people don't know Gresham. There is no need to be afraid that he's not "all right." Little incidents often tell more of a man's character than big ones. Here is a little one which shows what Gresham is. Some time ago, sending a letter of introduction for a friend, he said: "I am sure you will like him. He will stand without hitching." In that phrase of an off-hand personal letter you can see the man. It is language like Lincoln's. It applies to Gresham himself. Make no mistake. Republicans can rely on him. There's no iceberg manner, after dinner oratory, or shifting politician's ways about him. He will stand without hitching.

The Pioneer Press says that Senator Bucknam, having just finished his drive on "Skunk River," finds that he has time now to attend to the Congressional canvass and will shy his castor into the ring for congress. If this be so we imagine the Senator will find that he has a bigger drive up Salt River, demanding his attention, right away quick after the convention.

Gossip at Duluth.

Talk That the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Will Back a New Road Northwest.

DULUTH, Special Telegram to Pioneer Press, April 24.—Said a gentleman last evening, connected intimately with railroads and in a position to know considerable about the movements of the different roads centering here and the railroad developments of the Northwest:

There will be some very important railroad news for Duluth in the near future, probably within the next three months. The Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic will either sell out or back a new road to the Northwest from Duluth. There is a splendid opportunity for a through line by way of the South Shore, and a new line from the Red River torough to the East.

The late action of the Canadian government in removing the disallowance clause in reference to other roads than the Canadian Pacific in Manitoba has already greatly stimulated railway projects from Duluth to the Canadian Northwest. It will prove of great benefit to this city, turning considerable business this way, and also to both the Minneapolis & Manitoba and Northern Pacific lines. It has already stirred the Duluth & Iron Range officials and owners to thinking of a line to the Northwest, and there are many who think that it has greatly increased the chances of the building of the Duluth, Winnipeg & Northwestern, one of the newly incorporated roads, or the Lake Superior & Paciffic. If the South Shore company should decide to back a new road to the Northwest it is supposed here that it will be one of these last two named companies. The building of either one of them, as a connection of the South Shore, would hasten the completion of the Manitoba's direct line between Duluth and Crookston and other points in the Red River Valley.

The Bloody Fifth.

EX-LIEUT. GOV. BARTO EXPECTS THERE WILL BE A LIVELY FIGHT IN THE FIFTH DISTRICT.

St. Paul Dispatch.

Ex-Lieut. Gov. Barto was at the capitol this morning. Being asked about Fifth district politics, he said:

"There is a good chance for a fight in the Fifth district, and things are beginning to warm up. I was over to see Maj. Edwards at Fargo the other day, and he said I could carry Fargo all right. The farmer element in my district seems to favor Scheffer for governor—that is, the executive committee portion. But probably there will be a larger proportion of them in favor of Scheffer than was at first supposed. The farmers seem to have the idea that the newspapers and every body else are down on them, and this may in a measure account for what some are disposed to call the 'disgruntled' condition of affairs among them. But the prosperity of the country depends upon the prosperity of the farmers. Their discontent arises from the change that has taken place during the past few years in the agricultural conditions of this part of the country in relation to other countries and other parts of the United States. Minnesota farmers now compete with natives of India in raising wheat, and are at a disadvantage because the latter can raise wheat at half the cost that we can. As to cattle raising the farmer of this State competes with the Montana ranchman. To feed a steer on grass during the summer and sell him in the fall, the expense of raising being $15, and compete with the Montana stock owner whose expense for accomplishing the same result is $5, is competition that is disadvantageous to the farmer of this State. He must change his methods of operations, both as to wheat and cattle. The latter he must sell in the spring, when the Montana ranchman can't get his cattle to market. The changes in agricultural conditions have come about so rapidly that they are scarcely realized by anybody, and until the farmer changes his methods to correspond to the changed conditions, he will work to a disadvantage. But this is no interview, you know; I haven't been interviewed for a long time."

Duluth Evening Herald: From the tone of the country press it is quite evident that Judge Stearns is daily gaining strength in his race for congress. His fences appear to be in pretty good repair along the Red River Valley and his candidacy is growing in popularity every day. Barto, of St. Cloud, is taking a swing around the circle corralling delegates, while Comstock is handling his campaign from Moorhead and is pursuing more of a still hunt. Duluth's candidate has a big prestige. From all quarters he is looked upon as the coming man and if he does not receive the nomination it will be simply because his forces have not been trained. The votes are ready, all that is required is proper organization.

Wages—England, United States.

Farm, Stock and Home.

A correspondent sends us a clipping from the National Tribune, containing what purports to be a list of wages in the different departments of steel making in the United States and England. The extract shows that thirteen workers in England get $10.88 for a day's work, while thirteen men doing the same work in the United States get $44.32. Of course, such scales of wages exist only in the subsidized imaginations of protectionist journals and orators; there was never such relative difference in wages; in fact, for the last twenty years there has been no time when the present age of labor represented in a ton of steel rails was not larger in England than in the United States. Still, for the sake of argument, we will concede the truth of the claim, just to see what it proves.

The duty on steel rails is now about 85 per cent of the price in England. If a duty of 85 per cent enables us to pay 300 per cent more wages would the abolition of the duty reduce wages here to a level of those of England? If so, how? In view of the foregoing proposition how much would the comparatively slight reduction contemplated by the Mills bill be likely to affect wages? The National Tribune says:

"The farmers of the country can determine whether men who receive from 50 cents to $1.40 wages per day would be as good customers for the wheat, pork, beef, mutton, butter and other products of their farms as men who receive from $2.00 to $5.67 per day."

The farmers of the country can see no benefit in paying a price for steel, iron, transportation, etc., based on the high wages, and selling their products on the basis of the low wages, the precise situation to-day. How is the man who gets $5.67 a day a better customer than he who gets $1.40, if the first will pay no more for a bushel of wheat than the last? If the price of wheat corresponded with the price of labor (as claimed) and the price of the product of the labor, then everything would be lovely. But both Tribune and farmers know such is not the case; the Tribune dare not say so, the farmers are saying so, hence the friction. The cheap labor over the sea fixes the prices of farm produce; the high wages on this side fixes the price of what farmers consume, and this the Tribune parades as vindicating the soundness and value of our protective policy, and even expects farmers are going to agree with it.

If the scales of wages here given were true, they would be, under the circumstances, most powerful arguments for a decided reform of our tariff system. If the Tribune had been moved more by reason and less by a hasty zeal to serve its masters it would have seen at once that it was trying to prove too much.

Harrowing and Rolling.

American Agriculturist: In the spring when work presses, and we are anxious to get in the seed, there is a constant temptation to sow or plant before making the ground as fine and mellow as our better judgment tells us is necessary. Patience is the greatest of all virtues; but with the farmer in the spring it must be an active energetic patience. After the crop is in he waits patiently. But before sowing we must be on our guard against the kind of impatience that results in hasty and imperfect preparation of the land.

Oats can be sown on land early in the spring without much harrowing, and we presume the same is true of spring wheat. But barley requires the best of tilth, and the harrows must be kept at work till the surface is fine and mellow.

Harrowing and rolling require more careful attention than is usually bestowed upon them. We do not roll to make the land firm. Harrowing will make the land firmer than it can be made, except on the surface, by a roller. We roll to break the lumps. The roller will not crush the lumps that it cannot reach, and so we harrow to break some of the lumps and to pull the others to the surface, leaving it rough, and then follow with a roller. Great improvements have been made in harrows and rollers. The work can be done with far less labor than formerly, but there is still need for judgment and promptness. A field may work well to-day, that tomorrow, after a rain, would be damaged rather than improved by the harrow or roller. And part of a field can be worked while other parts are still too wet. We need to have everything ready, so that not a moment may be lost when the conditions are favorable for the important work of fitting the land for the reception of the seed. And do not fail to put in the seed as soon as the land is ready for it. It is rare that a farmer sows or plants too early in the spring.

Nelson and His Party.

Minneapolis Journal: The St. Louis Globe-Democrat calls Knute Nelson a "free trade republican." That will do for a slur at the representitive of the Fifth district, but the fact remains that Mr. Nelson is not a free trader and has said nothing in congress to justify such an imputation. He has presented the best tariff bill of the session and stands directly in line with the majority of his party in this state. The Journal does not owe anything to Mr. Nelson personally but a grudge for unfair treatment, but it does not allow a matter of that kind which will do him more harm than it can The Journal, to prevent it from assuring the Globe-Democrat that Mr. Nelson's tariff position is the only safe one for his party in Minnesota this year. And we venture the prediction that the republican platform of Minnesota will declare as strongly for tariff reform this year as has Mr. Nelson.

Knute Nelson: "Our leading agricultural staples are breadstuffs and cotton. The latter is theoretically and the former practically, so far as our producers are concerned, free of duty. The home price of wheat is fixed by the export price, and the farmer of Minnesota has to compete, without any governmental aid direct or indirect, with the farmers of India in the markets of England. And it is in these great and unprotected agricultural industries that our growth has been the greatest and most pronounced. But for the great volume of export of our non-protected agricultural staples our foreign commerce would cut but a sorry figure and the balance of trade would be heavily against us all the time. During the last fiscal year our total imports amounted to $692,320,000, while our total exports amounted to $703,022,923, and of this total 74.41 per cent were agricultural products, while only 19.45 per cent were products of manufactures."

On the Other Hand.

Red Wing Republican: We do not favor the presentation of the name of Congressman Nelson for governor because:

1. He does not want to be made governor.

2 We do not need him for governor.

3 He is greatly needed where he is, or if not there, then in the senate of Congress.

4 It is unnecessary to make him governor in order to make him senator, and that way of doing it will smack more of management, log rolling, machine business, than of the spontaneous popular demand which is Nelson's right, if we desire emphatically to declare a practical faith in the principles we have for years expressed.

5 Mr. Nelson's nomination for governor would undoubtedly shelve A. E. Rice for lieutenant governor which there is no reason nor propriety in our doing.

Hoard's Dairyman: Boys, educate yourselves in dairy farm work. Learn how to carefully handle cows and young stock, and be a good milker. Don't you see that men are constantly advertising for young men of that character at better wages than other farm hands can obtain? Here is a splendid field to train for. You must have brains, a teachable mind and good control of your temper. But there is good money in it.

Hoard's Dairyman: A good dairy cow is always a strong eater and drinker. But dairymen should always remember that there is a great difference in the way the feed goes. A cow of dairy blood and performance eats largely in order that she may turn out large quantities of butter or cheese. Another eats less, it may be, but turns her food mainly into flesh. With a thoroughly good cow to manufacture it we can always afford to put in feed and take out butter. That is what a good dairyman is here for.

Duluth Evening Herald: Duluth will present no candidate to the Crookston convention for delegate to Chicago. This city desires to furnish the Republican candidate for congress and will ask for nothing more.

Motley Register: Ex-Gov. Barto was in Brainerd this week, and talked politics. He considers that Judge Stearns is his strongest opponent as successor to Knute Nelson.

FARM NOTES.

Farm, Stock and Home.

Sheep are great weed killers.

Don't try to work too many acres.

Spare the heifer calves from the good cows.

There is a deal of unnecessary money spent for horse shoeing.

The blizzard is a tariff reformer, at least it demands free and cheap woolens.

Give the potatoes a soft, mellow, rich bed to lie in; they will reward you for it when they get up.

Stock will undoubtedly be rushed onto the pastures soon as possible this spring, and sooner than it should be, owing to the lateness of the season, but we want to urge all possible abstinence in the matter, for too much haste now means injury to both stock and pastures hereafter.

Farm, Stock and Home: If the price of wheat should decline 20 per cent in England to-day, to-morrow a 20 per cent less price would be posted in every local elevator and grain warehouse in the United States, and every farmer selling a bushel of wheat would be compelled to take 20 per cent less for it than he got yesterday. If the price of steel rails, fencing wire, sugar, cotton cloth, wool hats or bed blankets should decline 20 per cent in England to-day, to-morrow farmers of the United States would be paying just as much for all those things as they paid yesterday, and manufacturers of them would not be compelled to take even one per cent less than before. That's what's the matter with our present trade system; and intelligent, thinking independent farmers are beginning to find it out. This country is big enough, skillful enough, and is possessed of resources enough to dictate the price of her own farm products, and to make prices of manufactured articles for the world; but she never will do it while she is a nation of commercial cowards.

Farm, Stock and Home: We very much fear that Hon. Knute Nelson, of Minnesota, will have to plead guilty to the charge of being a statesman. In the first place, his eyesight is remarkable; he can actually look beyond the boundaries of a single congressional district, a rare power in these days. Then, too, he is capable of evolving sentiments and principles from sources other than party creeds. If he had lived in times of war he would have been a most valiant soldier, for he shows evidences of a courage greater than that required to face the cannon's mouth, the courage of his convictions. It is said Mr. Nelson proposes to retire from politics; he is probably moved to such a step from sheer loneliness.

The American Agriculturist for May '88 is one of the brightest, most varied and valuable numbers issued during the successful career of this time-honored peridical. It opens with a full-page engraving (by Cary,) entitled "A May Day Outing." Another full-page engraving represents "Early Morning Call in the Alps." Among the live stock portraits, for which the Americal Agriculturist has always been famous, are horses, cattle, swine, sheep and poultry. Then there are plans of dwellings and outbuildings, new devices and labor-saving implements, flowers, useful and ornamental plants, etc. A. B. Allen, one of the founders of the American Agriculturist, treats on the proper feeding of horses; Joseph Harris contributes an article on the culture of beans; Seth Green, the New York State fish commissioner, gives farmers practical instruction in fish culture; Chester P. Dewey discusses the adulteration of milk, and the workings of the "Milk trust." Mrs. Mary Treat continues her talks on insect enemies of plants. Among the well-known writers in this number are Dr. A. G. Chase, W. W. Meech, Miss M. Morgan, John J. Willis, C. L. Allen, James K. Reeve, A. M. Clough, M. B. Faxon, Miss E. K. Winans, A. H. Duff, A. S. Fuller, Geo. A. Martin, Drs. Geo. Thurber and F. M. Hexamer, and many others. The household, and boys' and girls' departments are even more interesting and entertaining than usual, and every department of the periodical shows plainly that the publishers, as well as the editors, have set themselves to work to bring their publication to the highest degree of excellence. Price $1.60 per year, English or German; single numbers 15 cents. Address, American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, N. Y.

On Wednesday evening of last week the fire department was called out to attend to a fire in the little watch-house, just south of the Manitoba coal sheds. The fire had got a good start before the boys turned the river loose on it but it wilted too quick thereafter. The wind was blowing a gale from the south at the time and the coal sheds were in great danger for a time, taking fire once but promptly squelched by the fire laddies.

It is said that the lost spirits in the infernal regions welcome with demoniacal glee the arrival of a former earthly acquaintance to the abode of the damned, on the principle that misery loves company. The Hallock Enterprise is altogether too previous in its announcement of the arrival of the new register. A correspondent of the Wabasha Herald, of last Wednesday, states that Mr. Dickman "leaves this evening for Crookston.". Inquiry at the land office on Tuesday evening revealed the fact that Mr. D. has not showed up yet nor is he expected inside of two weeks. Everything is all ready for work to be resumed upon his arrival.

Fisher had a lively sensation on Wednesday last. Soon after the evening train had passed a prairie fire was seen rapidly approaching the town, fanned to fury by the gale that was blowing at the time. Fortunately a great many farmers were in town that day and with their help the citizens were enabled to save their town though T. A. Dunlava lost a pile of lumber and Hugh Thompson nine barrels of kerosene. It is supposed that a spark from the engine started the business. Had the fire occurred in the night no doubt the fine little village of Fisher would now be lying in ruins. As it is the loss is very slight and Fisherites are congratulating themselves over their fortunate escape.

Regular attendance at church is a very good thing but even this may be overdone if it is the cause of restlessness and whisperings so loud as to disturb those who would like to hear what the preacher says. Far better would it be to go so seldon that one would have enough business listening to occupy his mind fully during the short services.

Mr C. Pepin died suddenly at his residence a few miles northeast of the city on Thursday. He sat down to dinner in apparently his usual health, but once during the meal complained of a peculiar feeling in his chest. Immediately after dinner he was taken with sudden and severe distress and told his wife he felt as though he was going to die. A messenger was dispatched for a doctor but before he arrived Mr. Pepin had breathed his last. He died about 2 o'clock. Mr. Pepin, a few years since, lived across the river in Sampson's Addition, near Walker's mill, kept a number of cows and had a good milk trade. Of late years he has been on his farm in the town of Louisvile. He was about 55 years of age.

Weather Record for April.

Mr. John Ross furnishes us the following table giving a record of the weather during the month of April. It will be seen that the prevailing winds were from the northwest and southeast. Snow fell on the 1st and 18th of the month, and rain on the 4th, 9th, 17th, 21st, 22d and 26th. There were 18 clear days in the month. The 2d was the coldest day, the thermometer indicating 0 at 7 a. m., 16 above at 12 m., and 25 above at 6 p. m. The warmest day was the 25th, 48 above at 7 a. m., 66 at 12 m. and 67 at 6 p. m.

Auditor P. J. McGuire entertained the assessors on Saturday last. A large number were in attendance which shows that our assessors are alive to the importance of their duties. Their session was prolonged throughout the day and was very interesting and instructive. The universal verdict of the assessors is that Auditor McGuire is the right man in the right place.

Donnelly's great cryptogram was simultaneously issued in London, New York, Chicago and other great cities on Monday. It consists of two great volumes and it is said of it that if it does not substantiate the claim that Bacon was the author of the Shakespearean works it is at least the entering wedge of a serious doubt. It will be read with great interest by all literary scholars.

J. T. Watts has developed into a full blown crayon artist. Evidence of his skill may be seen at the office of Wm. Watts, on Broadway where John may also be found ready to take orders for crayon work. The samples show evidence of great skill.

Mat. Anderson, assessor of Higdem was in attendance at the assessors' meeting last Saturday, and gave THE JOURNAL a pleasant call, leaving his name on our subscription list. Mr. A. has had lots of experience as assessor both in Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Do you mind the hint which the health officer drops to all who have been negligent in the matter of slicking up? Except in a few cases the notice is superfluous as the majority of our citizens hardly waited for the snow to disappear before they commenced to clean up and now there is no city in the Northwest that looks neater. No flies can roost on Crookston in this or any other matter.

Ammonia in Baking Powders.

Scientific American.

Among the recent discoveries in science and chemistry, none is more important than the uses to which common ammonia can be properly put as a leavening agent, and indicate that this familiar salt is hereafter to perform an active part in the preparation of our daily food.

The carbonate of ammonia is an exceedingly volatile substance. Place a small portion of it upon a knife and hold over a flame, and it will almost immediately be entirely developed into gas and pass off into the air. The gas thus formed is a simple composition of nitrogen and hydrogen. No residue is left from the ammonia. This gives it its superiority as a leavening power soda and cream of tartar used alone, and has induced its use as a supplement to these articles. A small quantity of ammonia in the dough is effective in producing bread that will be lighter, sweeter and more wholesome than that risen by any other leavening agent. When it is acted upon by the heat of baking, the leavening gas that raises the dough is liberated. In this act it uses itself up, as it were; the ammonia is entirely diffused, leaving no trace or residuum whatever. The light, fluffy, flaky appearance, so desirable in biscuits, etc., and so sought after by professional cooks, is said to be imparted to them only by the use of this agent.

The bakers and baking powder manufacturers producing the finest goods have been quick to avail themselves of this useful discovery, and the handsomest and best bread and cake are now largely risen by the aid of ammonia combined, of course, with other leavening material.

Ammonia is one of the best known products of the laboratory. If, as seems to be justly claimed for it, the application of its properties to the purposes of cooking, results in giving us lighter and more wholesome bread, biscuit and cake, it will prove a boon to dyspeptic humanity, and will speedily force itself into general use in the new field to which science has assigned it.

Red Wing Republican: We are firm in the faith that Mc Gill, however competent as the chief executive of the state of Minnesota, cannot carry the party vote, and it is not impossible that his nomination may mean republican defeat.

News of the death of D. Mc Lennnan reached this city Monday evening. He died at two o'clock at his farm near Angus, surrounded by his family and many of his friends and neighbors. He was in full possession of his faculties till the last, realizing that he was about to die.

S. L. Collins has associated J. F. Creamer with himself in the machine business and the new firm intend to handle nothing but the best goods in the market in the line of agricultural implements. Among these machines may be found the Champion mower and binder and the Minnesota Chief thresher.

Henry Steege returned from his western trip last week. He says that those of our citizens who went there are busily engaged in preparations for the future and big with expections. Says that lumber is scarce and it is impossible to obtain it as fast as it is required. He thinks that capital can find plenty of remunerative employment there but labor is no better off than here if as well.

C. O. Christianson went down to see the twins last week. He got right back as soon as possible as it was snowing down there.

Wheat reaches 66 cents this week for the first time within the recollection of the oldest inhabitant. There is but little in the vicinity, in fact the mill could no doubt use all there is and more to good advantage.

The latest news received from J. W. Wheeler is to the effect that he is able to sit up but is very weak and too thin to cast a shadow. His friends are very sanguine of his early recovery.

Ortonville Herald-Star: In fixing the basis of representation in county conventions, hardly a county in the state has taken the 1886 vote for governor, that vote failing everywhere to represent the party vote. This ought to be a good pointer for McGill men.

Luverne Herald: A very determined answer in the negative has already been given by the state press, and a warning has been sounded which the political tricksters who are attemping to control the next state convention in the interests of McGill will do well to heed.

Lakefield Standard: If Gov. McGill is shrewd enough to obtain a renomination in the face of all this opposition he will be entitled to a re-election. But, the question for republicans, to consider is; would it not be better to select a candidate upon whom the party can harmoniously unite and work with enthusiasm for his success?

A visit to the new photograph gallery of A. P. Holand revealed samples of work, done by him, that is rarely excelled showing him to be an artist of great merit. A group showing one of M. U. Squire's writing classes is very natural and excellently executed. Mr. Holand also understands retouching, an accomplishment many artists lack, and does all his own work in that line. He is daily adding to his stock of samples and he has not a poorly executed picture in the lot. He invites JOURNAL readers to drop into his studio and see what he can do for them.

The Times man has often applied abusive epithets to us, has wracked the cavity where his brains ought to be in search of mean things to say about us and in his last issue finally caps the climax, calls us the meanest thing he can think of—a turn-coat! And calls us a turn-coat for hire. Well, he need not be so jealous of us, we do not intend to follow his example and go over to the democratic party for the loaves and the fishes nor at all until the democratic party loses its old-time traditions and presents a far better platform than the republican party has. It is true the democratic party is a very promising party—promising everything but fulfilling nothing while the republican party while not promising so much is the only one that ever accomplished results worthy of mention. The democratic party, promised the people to reduce the tariff if once placed in in power. How have they done it? They did nothing and said nothing until the reduction plank was put into the republican platform and then they commenced to fife and drum "reduction!" This is only for the purpose of keeping the rank and file in line while the leaders continue to enjoy the spoils of power. They never will accomplish anything, any more than they have and nothing will be accomplished until the republican party does it. Had the democratic party intended to accomplish any good for the country they have had ample opportunity to do it but being a party of great promise that is all they do or can do. You need not be so scared, Mac., we do not envy you your position in the party.

The Chronicle refers to the arrest of a prominent citizen on Saturday, on a charge of adultery, that he was taken before a Justice and gave bonds for his appearance at the next term of the district court, but does not say that the accused alleges black-mail. The attorney for the accused came to our office on Monday, and stated that it can and will be proved to be a clear case of black-mail, and requested us to refrain from comment before the court has had an opportunity to decide upon the merits of the case. We do not believe that any good is ever accomplished by newspapers mixing up with, and passing judgment upon, cases that properly come within the province of the court, but especially we do not believe in a one-sided view being presented, and if we were going to say anything about it we should give all the facts as far as developed. The province of a newspaper is to give all the news it can collect and do all the good in the community that it can. Scandal travels with the velocity of thought and is not a legitimate item of news, because, no matter how quickly a paper catches on and prints it, it is only a stale rehash of scandal by the time it reaches the public that already knows all that can be said and a great deal more than any respectable newspaper will say about it. In this particular case it is a matter far more to be regretted by every right-minded citizen than to be gloated over, enlarged upon and rolled like a sweet morsel 'neath the tongue. Whatever the facts of the case may develope, a due regard for our city will cause every honorable person to keep a very close mouth in the matter, as no good can come from an opposite course, and much evil might and certainly would be done by prynouncing judgment before the true status of the case has been reached in court.

THE PROFESSOR.

I rang for Jane to bring my tea upstairs, and hunted for the sal volatile to compose my nerves. The new professor had arrived to deliver his first lecture to the pupils of Heliotrope Female academy. As the "accomplished principal"—so the newspaper expressed it—of this great institution, I consider it my duty to have a professor of science added to my corps of teachers. It sounded well in speaking to say: "Professor East, of Wisteria Academy." I must say it was the aim of my life to have everything appear much better than it really was. At a teachers' meeting we had discussed the matter. "I shall stipulate for an unmarried man," I informed the ladies, "middle-aged, learned and companionable for intellectual women like ourselves." The teachers all agreed with me, but Col. Noel, my wealthy patron, demurred at the proposed advance. He came in just as our meeting adjourned. Being a widower, andas Eva had taken her history lesson in the study to learn, I begged him to sit down and tell us how he managed his dear motherless children.

"I don't manage them, blessed if I do. I've turned them over to you ladies to manage. Keep that rascal Jack Norris away from my Eva. That's all I ask. Bless my heart, what can I do with a parcel of girls on my hands?"

"My dear Colonel," I said, in a sympathetic tone, for he certainly glanced at me while speaking, "in my position the care of tender, innocent girls has become a lovely study. I dote upon it. The only trouble to me is that my care of them is too short."

"So it is, and a confounded shame, too," and the Colonel looked at me again, straight in the eyes.

"In my position vigilance, wisdom and foresight are required," I said again in my most impressive manner. "I may safely claim for myself these requisities to a perfect manager of young girls."

The colonel laughed good-naturedly as he added: "I wager she's safe—Eva is; she will have a fortune of her own, and that scoundrel Norris knows it."

"In my position," I remarked, for the third time, "the ultimate good of my charges is the aim of my life. under my roof dearest Eva is secure. Mr. Jack Noris will never try to outwit me. He may be a bold rascal, but Mr. Jack Norris won't venture to trifle with me."

Col. Noel was emphatic in his assent to this assertion. "He's a dare devil, Noris is, a wild, harum-scarum, worthless scamp, but blessed if I boleive he'd have the hardihood to defy you," laughed my chief patron, in that complimentary way of his which showed me in a quiet way his preference for myself. I had numberless answers to my advertisement for a professor, but I tossed them all aside and engaged Prof. East. The moment my eyes rested upon him I felt intuitively that the very person I desired had presented himself. So handsome, so very handsome, in spite of immense green goggles; so gentle, and refined, and so good, so innocently good, I engaged him at once on the easiest terms. Indeed, Prof. East declared himself so appreciative of the great advantage of enjoying our society that he almost forgot the question of salary. He was quite indifferent to money. I found him willing to come for a mere pittance which went far to bias me in his favor, as it always does seem hard to pay out so much money to teachers. The flutter of nerves mentioned above was occasioned by the arrival of the professor. He was actually in the house. All the teachers were struck by his ingenuous manner and straight-forward, beautiful candor

"He says he never met a more charming set of ladies," observed Miss Leonard, the English teacher.

"He says the girls are not to his taste, he despises such young things; he says m yeyes are lovely."

"Ma foi! Your eyes, indeed!" ejaculated Mam'selle Adèle, the French teacher. "He vows my retroussenose is piquante, charmante, ah, monsieur is one grand gentleman."

"I don't believe in flattery," interjected Miss Wenham. Nobody insults me by compliments. The professor thought I was one of the girls. Indeed, I never saw a man so amazed as when I told him I was a teacher." Miss Wenham looked every day of forty-five years.

"He is very near-sighted," I reminded her.

"Not at all," insisted Miss Wenham. "He only wears glasses to shade his eyes, and he always says just what he thinks."

Putting on my glasses I drew out a note. It was from the professor. I was determined to read it merely as a check to their vanity and conceit. "Let me see," I began, quite as if the idea had that moment occurred to me. "He says in this note: 'I am coming early to have a better opportunity of knowing a lady whom I have long admired for her talents and erudition.'" Without the smallest notice of a decidedly envious laugh, I folded the note and went to my room to read up on the miocene period. The professor was to lecture on the miocene period. After taking my seat and leaving my glasses on the table—they always made me look ten years older—I went down to see Prof. East. To my amazement there sat Mam'selle Adele in her best black silk, with crimson trimmings, talking in her excitable foreign way! There, on the other side, was Miss Leonard in her best plaid, smiling in her bland amiability. Miss Wenham in her Sunday cashmere ogled him in front. To do the professor justice, he seemed restless and in evident expectation of some one else. As he turned at once to me, I felt certain that I was the person for whom my handsome young professor waited. We discussed extinct pachyderms of the miocene period. I made some strong points, to which he yielded without argument. Miss Wenham whispered quite audibly that the professor had not a chance to put in a word.

When we were passing into the lecture-room I observed that he looked at Edith Sands, who contrived to be in the way, and that she laughed rather pertly. Before I could speak to her the professor said in a low tone: "What a great figure you have, my dear lady, queenly, positively queenly."

I heard that silly Eva titter so rudely that common decorum induced me to send her to a back seat. She is considered beautiful by some people, but to my thinking her face is weak; besides, she has a round, chubby figure. I had it from the professor himself that he admired a queenly figure. The lecture was rather obscure, of course. I saw that the professor was very deep, but I am sure the girls appreciated their privilege. Eva Noel turned very red and almost choked with laughter. If it had been anybody else but Prof. East I might have imagined that he became a trifle mixed and confusing on the niocene strata, but then he was certainly a handsome man. By the merest accident I happened to be in the hall when the professor was putting on his overcoat, and found the teachers around him in an admiring circle. I must say that my acumen and knowledge of human nature never evinced itself so distinctly as when I engaged Prof. East. He turned at once to me and spoke in the most complimentary manner of my observations of the teritary epoch. "Nothing ever interested me so much. We must talk it over thoroughly, it is most absorbing," he declared. "Besides, we don't often have the advantage of such an intellect as yours to elucidate abstruse matters." Which proved how very much interested he was in the subject.

Eva Noel came in from the library for a book just as the professor closed the door behind him. I noticed that she wore a buttonhole bouquet with a jacqueminot rose and smilax, which I am positive the professor wore delivering his lecture. The artful minx must have picked it up somewhere.

"How did you come by those flowers, Miss Eva?" I demanded severely.

The girl turned very red. "Somebody gave them to me," she said, in insolent defiance.

"You wicked girl," broke in Miss Wenham; "do you remember Ananias and Sapphira? Those are the professor's flowers. Vain creature, to suppose that he would give them to a chit like you! It is shameful."

Eva reddened more and more, but I could see that she was tittering and laughing to herself while I sent her to bed. "I will speak to Eva to-morrow. She can't trifle with me. I do believe I can see through a millstone. No one can blind me," I said in a tone of deep meaning.

"Some one ought to give the professor a hint of Eva's duplicity," suggested Miss Leonard.

"Perhaps it would be just as well to give him a hint of her shocking behavior towards that dissolute wretch, Jack Norris," supplemented Miss Wenham.

"I shall certainly do so," I returned in emphatic approval. "Prof. East must be warned—he is such a good man—such an innocent, unsuspecting disposition—we must take care of him. I do flatter myself I am a judge of men—yes, he must be told about Eva Noel."

The teachers agreed with me perfectly; indeed, I could not recollect when we were all so unanimous upon any subject. I thought over all I had to say to the professor, until I had arranged quite a happy and affecting way of putting it. Plainly it was my duty to secure the professor against the arts and wiles of this, weak, pretty face—a girl without the faintest claim to a queenly figure.

Prof. East arrived much earlier than was expected. However, the moment I heard of it I saw my opportunity to give him a precautionary hint about Eva's indecorus, artful ways. The parlor door was partly open, and the professor's voice audible from within. I had the curiosity to stop and listen. My position demands watchfulness.

"Don't be alarmed," he was saying, "my luck never wavers. That old dragon is no match for me."

"But I'm dying with fright all the time. How can you do it."

The voice was no other than Eva's. She broke off into a laugh, but turned first red then pale when I walked in, holding myself very erect and assuming my most commanding aspect. It evidently impressed the professor, for he put on his immense green glasses and at once began to talk to me of the fossils of the tertiary epoch. I made my points about extinct pachyderms while I had a chance. They were telling and powerful, and, I must say, delivered in an eloquent and scientific style. I had been awake until two in the morning reading upon the subject. Prof. East turned his head on one side, then the other, and looked meditative.

"I am lost in admiration; it is your figure—the form of Juno superb! inspiring!" he suddenly declared, with the delightful, ingenuous candor which I discovered from the very first as a beautiful trait of his disposition.

"Don't flatter me, you dear, naughty man!" I exclaimed, as I shook my head at him.

"Flattery?" he retorted: "I am an unsophistocated fellow, always letting some truth slip out and giving offence. Ah, me, I know you are furious."

"Don't apologize, I know the truth will slip out," I said very kindly; he did look so wonderfully handsome, even with those hideous green glasses on. "We quite understand each other, and I may say are so congenial that we are sometimes imposed upon. I feel it my painful duty to warn—yes, really warn—you against a pert, forward, insolent girl, as shallow and vain as a peacock."

The professor came a step nearer. "I think I know who you mean," he whispered. I fairly lost my temper—not with the professor—not at all, he was so good looking, but with that abandoned girl trying to attract his attention. It was scandalous.

"She is an unprincipled, designing creature," I went on.

"And so desperately homely," he added.

"I know you must think so," was my triumphant reply; "but would you believe it, some people call Eva Noel pretty?"

"Where have I heard that name?" he questioned thoughtfully. "Oh, I have it, the little girl just now I scarcely noticed; very ordinary, is she not?"

"Fearfully so," I assured him. "She has been badly compromised by a shocking affair with a dissolute scoundrel, Jack Norris. I watch her very closely. The miserable knave can't trifle with me. I beg you to remember that this is a mark of my confidence, purely confidential. I mean to outwit that rascal Norris, and, of course, can't allow you to be taken in. Come to me if Eva speaks, or even looks at you, my dear professor. I will protect you."

The teachers interrupted me by coming in at that moment, but the professor pressed my hand gratefully and thanked me in the sweetest way as he went out to the lecture-room. It quite startled and kept me awake long after my hour for retiring, and then, late as it was, I caught a glimpse through the window of Prof. East moving through the shrubbery in the moonlight, gazing up at the windows, perhaps at mine. The professor is so unsophisticated, and so very good.

* * * * * * *

I believe I mentioned above how perturbed and broken my rest was on that eventful night. Several nights have passed since, but as far as I can see there is no prospect of anything but wakeful nights for a long time. I I slept rather late in the morning, after the night that unprincipled heartless, wicked man delivered his last—shall I call it lecture?

Miss Leonard met me in the study, a subdued excitement visible about her. Eva Noel must have gone home without leave; the servants have seen nothing of her; the girls professed equal ignorance. She had not been seen since retiring the night before. It was mysterious. In my position mystery was not to be borne. I sent a messenger to Eva's home. The messenger returned with the appalling news that Eva had not been at home. The mystery deepened. I had the cellars and garrets searched, the cistern dragged, the clothes presses examined, and even the great soap kettle raised to see if she could be underneath. To no purpose. Miss Leonard rushed suddenly into the study, and handed me a note. It explained all:

"Dear Madam—I have relieved you of the care of Eva Noel. We were married this morning. I don't charge you a cent for my two lectures. I'll even finish the course if you will post me on extinct pachyderms. JACK EAST NORRIS."

Prof. East and Jack Norris was one and the same. The perfidious wretch! Where is the salvolatile?—Family Fiction.

After Thirty Years.

A correspondent of the Atlanta Constitution has recently had the pleasure of interviewing a Mr. James H. Whiten, who has just returned from a thirty-years' stay in the wild West. His experience in the frontier life, which is full of Indian skirmishes, bear hunts, etc., is quite interesting, but the separation from his wife for a period of thirty-years, and what led to their meeting, is the most interesting feature of the story.

In January, 1857, Mr. Whiten was married to Miss Nancy Fowler, a beautiful young lady who resided near Westminster, S. C. Young Whiten was very ambitious to prepare his wife a commodious home, both being very poor at the time of their marriage. He made up his mind to try his fortune in the West. The gold fever was spreading through the West at the time like a contagion, and Pike's Peak was the objective point. So in the following spring, when winter winds had given place to the breezes of spring, and before the honey-moon had fairly waned, vows of everlasting devotion and fidelity were exchanged and Mr. Whiten turned his face westward.

After roughing it five years among desperadoes and Indians, and having gathered considerable money, he decided to return to his Nancy; but not so to be. The civil war was then in full blast, and while passing through the state of Texas Mr. Whiten was called upon for his services and had to respond. During his term many letters were written to the precious one, but no answer ever came. Through an acquaintance he was informed that his wife had refuged to parts unknown. In the soldier's camp, in the state of Kansas, the news of Lee's surrender reached him. Being destitute of means on which to travel and having learned through an effort to establish a communication that the one was dead for whom it was his pleasure to live, he returned to Colorado there to spend the remainder of his days in the solitude of the West. "For twenty-two years," said Mr. Whiten, "I wandered over the plains and prairies, my thoughts ever carrying me back to the place where I kissed her good-bye." It seems that his grief, instead of relaxing, grew more poignant. In the fall of 1887 he met an old friend, Joe Steel, in Montana. Mr. Steel told him that it was very likely that his wife was still living; that he had a faint recollection of a marriage in an adjoining county of a Mr. Southern to a Mrs. Whiten, who had longsince given up her former husband for dead, and that Southern was dead, so he was informed, and that the widow's postoffice was Fort Madison, S. C. Elated by these glad tidings, Mr. Whiten directed three letters to Fort Madison, one to Mrs. Southern, one to Mrs. Whiten, and one to Mr. —— Whiten, a supposed son of his. Eagerly did he wait for a reply, but none came.

The letters remained in the office till one day the postmaster at the place was fixing to make a legal disposition of them, when a countryman, Mr. Latham, chanced to step in. The postmaster casually asked Latham if he knew any one by the name of Nancy Southern or Nancy Whiten. Latham happened to be well acquainted with the widow, and, by the request of the postmaster, carried the letters to Mrs. Southern. She answered him at once, explaining her second marriage; that she had heard he was dead, and expressed great anxiety to see him. Mr. Whiten at once took the train for Westminster, S. C., having been, by her letter, informed that she lived at the same old place. Arriving at Westminster, he proceeded to the old country homestead, where the parting took place. There under the willow tree in the yard, where they parted thirty years before, they met again. Time and trouble had, of course, left its impression upon both. Said Mr. Whiten: "Though the black curls she once wore were streaked with gray, and the sparkling eye was dimmed, and the rose had left the cheek, yet she was as dear to me as ever. We are now living together as happily as when we parted in the spring of 1857. My son came to see me last Christmas—the first time I ever saw him—and we all had a jolly time."

Bridget—"Enjoy slape, is it? How could I, I'd like yez to tell me? The minit I lay down I'm aslape, and the minit I'm awake I have to git up. Where's the time for enjoyin' it to come in?—Philadelphia Call.

CUPID.

Is there man more grossly stupid—
  Can you earthly marksmen find,
Like this so-called boy-god Cupid,
  Mischievous and color-blind?

Now, he takes a dart from quiver,
  Aims at tender hearts—but look!
It has pierced the young man's liver,
  And has struck her pocket-book.

Look again! With glee inhuman
  Flies the arrow o'er its track—
Rich and learned and white the woman,
  But the man is coarse and black.

Thus the boy-god takes his pleasure,
  Aiming wildly, shooting wide,
Ever filling up the measure
  Of distress and humbled pride.

Were he mortal, he would suffer;
  But keep well this thought in view:
He would make some pathway rougher,
  Were this flesh immortal, too.

MR. BOLDON'S EXPEDIENT.

"I am fairly dished—ruined—done for. I had better order my coffin while I can pay for it." This was the sad soliloquy of Mr. James Boldon, solicitor and notary public, as he sat alone in his office in High-st., Westborough, one October morning.

And truly Mr. James Boldon's position was not a happy one. He was a young man, lately admitted as a solicitor, and he had spent all his little capital to no purpose in trying to make a practice for himself in the town of Westborough.

He was almost a stranger in the town, and, although he had been there nearly a year, he had hardly succeeded in making an acquaintance, much less in gaining clients. The report that there was "an opening" in the place, on the strength of which he had come there, had proved to be entirely fallacious. The town was just large enough to hide him. It was in vain that he went regularly to St. Augustine's Mission Chapel, in the hope of having his name put on the building committee of the new church; in vain that he frequented (at proper hours) the billiard-room of the new Royal Hotel; in vain that he sedulously attended the county court and the police court with a glazed black bag which held nothing but a newspaper and one or two law books. Business would not come to him. Nobody knew him, and nobody cared to know him.

There was, indeed, one man who knew him—one who might, if he had had any business whatever, have proved a useful friend—Mr. Lionel Winn, editor of The Westborough Independent. The young lawyer had made the acquaintance of Mr. Winn over the billiard table. But of what use was it to have the means of getting a flattering notice in the newspaper, when there was absolutely nothing to notice?

It was nearly 12 o'clock. Mr. James Boldon had been looking over his ledger and even his sanguine disposition failed him, as he marked the state of things there disclosed. He rose from the table with a groan, put on his hat, and, telling his solitary office-boy (who was improving his time by boring holes in the lid of his desk) that he would not be in till after lunch, he sallied forth into the street.

Not having any particular object in view, he thought he might as well go to the railway station and get a London paper, and thither he directed his steps.

After buying his paper, Boldon observed on the platform the station-master, whom he knew by sight, engaged in an angry altercation with an elderly man, who looked like a farm laborer. A little crowd surrounded the disputants, and Boldon sauntered up to see what was the matter.

"A tell 'ee a've coom from Lamborne, an' a'll pay no more," said the man.

"You must pay the fare from London all the same," returned the station-master, angrily. "Here's the bylaw. You can read it for yourself—that is, if you can read."

"Naw, a caan't."

"Well, it says that any one traveling without a ticket must pay the fare from the station at which the train started. How am I to know you only got on at Lamborne?"

The dispute went on, the station-master, who had been a sergeant in the guards and had a great idea of the importance of his office and the necessity of enforcing the law, having evidently the best of it. The young solicitor ventured to say something for the man, and was roughly advised to mind his own business. This rather nettled him; and as the poor man protested that he could not pay the fare from London—seven shillings and ten pence—and there was every prospect that he would be taken before the magistrates, Bolden good-naturedly paid the money for him, and the matter was at an end.

Our hero walked abstractedly back to his office, pondering over the hard case of the poor man whom he had succored; and his deliberations lasted for some time.

On the following Saturday morning Bolden omitted to shave, and stayed indoors all day. After a substantial early dinner he proceeded to make some changes in his raiment. He put on an old tweed suit considerably the worse for wear, and a pair of boots that had seen better days. His hat he took from a well-merited oblivion, and finally adorned his neck with a red and blue woolen comforter. Thus equipped, he set out for a walk to Lamborne, a small town about ten miles off.

He reached his destination about 7 o'clock in the evening, and his first proceeding was to go to an inn and order some tea. Having refreshed himself he left the inn after exchanging a few words with the landlady, and visited two or three shops. In each shop he made one or two small purchases, directing that the goods should be sent to him at Westborough; and in each case he was careful to take a receipt for the money he paid. Then he went to the railway station, at which he knew the London train for Westborough and the west would stop in a few minutes, made one or two trifling purchases at the bookstall and managed to engage the man who kept the stall in conversation for some time. The train came in as he was still talking to the man at the bookstall, and Bolden quietly took his seat in it, without having gone through the formality of taking a ticket.

When the train arrived at Westborough, the young solicitor explained that he had joined the train at Lamborne and tendered the fare from that town. As he expected, the money was refused, and the full fare from London demanded. This Mr. Boldon positively refused to pay, and accordingly he was detained till the station master was sent for.

That official, in all the majesty of gold-laced coat and tall hat, soon arrived, much annoyed at being disturbed at his evening meal.

"What's all this about?" he demanded sternly, as he came upon the scene.

"They want to make me pay the fare all the way from London, and I've only come from Lamborne," answered Boldon in a humble tone.

"Of course you must pay the whole fare. There's a by-law on purpose, made and provided."

Mr. Boldon mournfully shook his head. "Oh, no, sir!" he said meekly, "I really can't do that."

"You'll have to go to the lock-up, then," rejoined the station-master, roughly. "You'd best pay up."

Mr. Boldon, only shook his head again and sighed heavily.

As the lawyer expected the official was exasperated by his obstinacy and encouraged in his high-handed manner by the meekness with which he was confronted. None of the railway people recognized in the shabbily dressed, unshaved individual before them the spruce gentleman who had paid a poor man's fare a few days before.

"Bonnor, go for a constable," said the station-master, with the air of an inflexible judge awarding a term of twenty years penal servitude.

"Don't do that; I'll give you my name and address, I'm known in the place—that is, I'm quite respectable you know."

"Oh, I dare say," returned the station-master, with with true official superciliousness.

There was an awful pause while the porter was gone to fetch the constable.

"Don't you think," suggested Boldon, almost timidly—"don't you think it might be as well to telegraph to London for instructions?"

The station-master frowned.

"They couldn't complain of you in that case, at any rate," pursued Boldon.

The station-master hesitated.

"I'll wait in the waiting-room till you get an answer," said Boldon, as he led the way to that cheerful apartment.

The official darted a suspicious glance at his prisoner. Still, the advice was prudent and he acted upon it. In half an hour the answer came back. "The passenger without a ticket must pay the fare from London, or be charged before the magistrates."

"Just let me see the message you've got," said Boldon, when the result was announced to him. "If it is as you say I'll go quietly or else pay."

They showed him the message.

"No, I really can't pay all that money, you know," said Bolden sadly, as he read the telegram; and accordingly he was marched off to the police office, guarded by a policeman on the right and by a constable in the imposing uniform of the Great Railway Company on the left.

As it was Saturday night, nothing could be done that day, and Mr. Boldon did not choose to disturb the Sabbath rest of Mr. Lionel Winn, his only available friend, by asking him to bail him out on Sunday.

On the Monday morning, however, an early message was sent to Mr. Winn and he promptly appeared and bailed out the young lawyer, who was heartily tired of his incarceration. Later in the day the case came on before the magistrates and Mr. Boldon, attended with the landlady of the inn at Lamborne and one of the shopkeepers who were able and willing to prove that he could not possibly have traveled from a greater distance than Lamborne on the preceding Saturday night. The charge was of course dismissed, one of the magistrates a jolly old fellow, named Bracebridge, remarking that Mr. Boldon, who seemed to be a respectable solicitor, had been treated shamefully, and that if he stood in Mr. Boldon's place he would be inclined to let the Great Railway company hear of the matter again.

Next day the Westborough Independent contained a long account of the "incredible and really scandalous outrage to which one of the most respected members of the legal profession in our town has been subjected;" and it need hardly be said that, in a day or two, the course at which the worthy magistrate had hinted was adopted. Mr. Boldon brought his action against the railway company for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution.

As everybody knows, Westborough is an assize town, and the case of Boldon v. the Great Railway company excited a good deal of public interest. Everybody wished to know how the law stood on the question, for everybody had had occasion sometime or other to travel without a ticket.

Mr. Bustard, Q. C., was counsel for the plaintiff, and nobly he performed his task. He pictured his client, a member of an honorable profession, a gentleman of delicate and sensitive feelings, dragged by the ruthless hands of the police through the crowded streets on a Saturday night, exposed to the rude gaze of the jeering mob, and shut up in a cold lonely cell for the greater part of two whole days. And all for what? Because this gentleman had the courage, the public spirit to resist an unreasonable and illegal impost. It was the interest of every railway traveller—he might, therefore say of every man, woman and child in the three kingdoms—that the rights of the traveller and the liberty of the subject should be vindicated in the person of his client. "My client does not care for damages, gentlemen," said Mr. Bustard in conclusion. "That is not his object in coming here. His object is to expose an abuse, an illegal abuse gentlemen, which has been too long continued—to clear his own character of the ignominy which has been cast upon it—vindicate the sacred principle of the liberty of a free-born Englishman."

As for the question of law, Mr. Lynx, who was for the railway company, hardly ventured to rely upon it. "It has been held over and over again," said Mr. Justice Portman, that this by-law is bad and illegal. It affects to inflict a fine of arbitrary and varying amount, where there is no breach of the criminal law; for here, as in most such cases, there is no pretence that there was any attempt to defraud. You will find a verdict for the plaintiff, gentlemen," he added to the jury, "with such damages as you, looking at all the circumstances of the case, may think will fairly compensate the plaintiff for the wrong he has suffered."

The jury promptly found their verdict—damages fifty pounds. The result was received with some cheering, which became general when Mr. Bustard announced that his client had never intended to put the damages in his own pocket, and that he would send a check for the amount to the treasurer of the County Hospital.

This well-timed generosity settled the question of Mr. Boldon's popularity. The Ladies' Committee of the hospital nominated him at once as one of their male advisers, and his name was put on the list of life governors. The amateur dramatic and choral societies sent him tickets for their entertainments, given for the benefit of charity. The Westborough Independent printed in a prominent position the letter of the hospital treasurer gratefully acknowedging Mr. Boldon's munificent gift, and added a few laudatory words of his own.

Finally, after a pleasant little supper in Mr. Boldon's lodgings, there appeared the following paragraph in that excellent organ of public opinion: "We have heard it rumored lately that a few of our more prominent townsmen have been talking of according to Mr. James Boldon, solicitor, a substantial mark of their appreciation of his public-spirited behavior in a late trial, and of his disinterested conduct in handing over the fruits of his victory to one of the most deserving of our local charities. We have heard it whispered that W. H. Bracebridge, esq., J. P., who has already publicly expressed his sympathy with Mr. Boldon and Algernon Tracey, esq., the treasurer to the Daleshire County Hospital, have expressed some intention of heading the subscription list. We give this to our readers with all possible reserve, but we have no hesitation whatever in saying that such conduct on the part of the gentlemen we have named would reflect honor up on themselves, and would not be wanting in appropriateness, as the names of both of these gentlemen have been associated with the public vindication of Mr. Boldon's honor. Our readers may depend upon our keeping them acquainted with the progress of events."

This promise was so faithfully carried out and the proposed testimonial was so thoroughly taken for granted that Mr. Bracebridge and Mr. Tracey found themselves compelled to take the honorable place which had been assigned to them. The mark of esteem took the form of a purse of sovereigns, which reached the respectable figure of one hundred pounds.

A dinner was held as a matter of course, to celebrate the event, and the presentation was made in proper form. Mr. James Boldon returned thanks with a becoming modesty, declaring with some humor that more by far than even their generous gift did he value the happy consciousness that his humble efforts in the public service had been appreciated, that he had gained the good will of his neighbors and that he was now no longer a stranger in their midst but one of themselves, a Westborovian to the backbone, accounting the esteem and respect of his fellow-citizens his richest possession.

In this Mr. Boldon was perfectly right. Clients came in apace. He had got his name up for good.—Whitehall Review.

The Future of Our Families.

What is our duty as regards provision for the future for those who are or may be dependent upon us? There are two facts that point the path of duty too plainly to be misunderstood. The first is, that public opinion is dialy strengthening in the conviction that, in view of uncertain business ventures, unexpected reverses and unfulfilled business plans, all ending in early death or, at least, before life's expectancy, that it is much the duty of the head of the family to protect the life which produces the bread, clothing and homes of the family, by sharing with a large number of persons the risks on a certain amount of valuation on such a life, as it is to protect the house which shelters the family by sharing the risk of its loss by fire with a large number of owners of other houses. This kind of public opinion shows no mercy to the householder who fails to insure his house, and the time hastens when the same public sentiment will say of the deceased protector, whatever other good things he may have done, he failed in his duty to accept the propositions of those who offered to share with him the risks of a portion, at least, of the valuation of his life.

The second and stronger motive results from the inward consciousness which approves this public sentiment, and which will be clear if we remember that only one-fifth of the deceased are solvent, that is, only one-fifth leave anything for friends after the liabilties of their estates are paid. Two-fifths have enough to pay their indebtedness, and the other two-fifths do not leave anything. Every individual in commencing life hopes to be of the one-fifth, but four-fifths fail of this end. It would seem from this, that failure is the rule of life, and financial success is the exception. It is well known in business ventures that a small fraction only secure their aim. A few succeed and the courage of the struggling masses is kept up, as they point to their success.

Now, friend, saying nothing of the uncertainty of the life which would enable you to secure what you desire for the family, your chances are too small in the stern competition of the age, for you to rely on business success alone for this result. Join our Order and secure a certainty, and then you will enter upon the race of business and all the struggles of life with the more confidence and stronger hopes. It will give peace to your pillow and strength to the day's battle. The expense is so small and the advantage so great you cannot afford to neglect this opportunity. Remember still further that now is the only sure time; sickness or death may be approaching.—Rainbow.

A Dying Mother's Prayer Answered.

From the New York Sun.

A Maine newspaper says that Mrs. Esther Potter, of Long Ridge, who has just died, after a long illness from consumption, was the mother of four children, the youngest a baby. She could not bear to think of leaving the little one, and constantly prayed that it might go with her when she died. A few days ago, when it was plain that she was about to die, she called her family around her, and bade them good-by, and then, clinging to her baby, prayed that it might die too. It had been perfectly well, apparently, but, after a kiss from its dying mother, closed its eyes, and in five minutes was dead.

Real Romances in Life.

London Correspondence Toronto Week.

I want to tell you something I heard as I came from "Partners" the other night. About forty years ago a Mrs. Monroe, a childless widow with a large fortune, took a house in Curzon street for the season, and wanting a companion, bethought her of her neice Jessie, the eldest daughter of a clergyman in Scotland, a young lady only just out. The girl was written for, came and proved a great success, for she was an excellent dancer, exceedingly pretty and blessed with a good digestion and consequently with a good temper. It was after the May drawing room, at which she had been presented, and at the ball at S. House, that captain—shall we call him Nemo?—meeting her for the first time, fell desperately in love before the end of the evening. A few rides in the early morning by the Serpentine, a few "drums" in the Arlington street or Park lane, the opera twice, the theatre once, endless dinners, routs and balls, and then just at the end of the season, he proposed and was accepted. The lover having little money, Mrs. Monroe generously agreed to give her niece an allowance, and insisted on the marriage taking place in town, instead of upsetting the quiet little mause close to the loch on the west coast. So St. James's, Piccadilly, was filled with the elite to view the ceremony one early autumn morning, and Miss Jessie in orange-blossoms and Brussels lace sat in the old barbaric fashion through the long wedding breakfast, afterwards, in flounced gown and round-curtained bonnet, going with her bridegroom for their honeymoon to the Italian lakes. Captain Nemo was a sailor, and soon had to start with his ship for a cruise of fifteen months. I think there was a talk of his wife joining him, but the station selected was an unhealthy one, so after all she remained in England with her aunt to look after her. Letters were to be very regular, and the time would soon pass. When the letters were all written and received, and the very last of the fifteen months had dragged itself away, the day arrived on which Jessie was to meet her husband at the railway station. No one was on the platform but Mrs. Monroe, looking white and strange, who gave him a note to read, and then took him to his pretty little empty house from which the inmate had flown only that morning to Paris. The poor lady wept, and asked that her carelessness might be forgiven: she had been duped, deceived and would never see the wretched girl again. Captain Nemo was quite gentle. Yes, he would try to dine with her that night and they would talk what was best to be done. Then he went into the morning room, where Jessie's miniature still hung on the wall, and an hour afterwards, when they went to call him, he was found dead with a bullet through his heart, clasping her portrait and her cruel letter in his cold fingers. There being no World or Truth in those days, the scandal was quietly hushed up. After a time Mrs. Nemo appeared again in London, but none of her old friends noticed her; her own people sternly cast her off. Mrs. Monroe answered no appeal and formally refused any communication, and finally when she died left not a penny of her fortune to her erring niece who had so grossly deceived her. So year after year came and went, and matters grew from bad to worse. A woman educated so long ago was not so likely to be able to help herself as is the Girton-trained girl of the day, with her practical common sense, and it became more difficult for her to keep her head above water. Within the last ten years she has found occupation, however; and if you like to come with me some afternoon I can show you a small spare woman in neat bonnet and shawl, with fine China-blue eyes and lint-white hair, diligently sweeps a crossing in the very heart of her old neighborhood; which small woman is Mrs. Monroe's niece, the girl who was presented to the Queen, who danced at S. House, who was married at St. James's, Piccadilly, and had an Italian honeymoon. She refuses help now from any one.

Not Enough Time.

From the London Globe.

Not without reason did George Eliot lament over the decease of "that fine old gentleman, leisure." He has long been dead and buried by this age of haste and bustle, but his loss is one not easily supplied. Leisure is by no means a synonym for idleness, as some persons appear to think. In the old days when leisure flourished, men worked, though they did not hurry. The wagon arrived eventually at its destination, though it did not rush along like the express train. There still exists a few remote nooks of the earth where people hold to the Spanish maxim that "Haste comes from the Devil," and labor is performed after the fashion of "Sleepy Hollow." To drop into one of these places is a marvelous rest and refreshment to the denizen of cities, where life is carried on at high pressure.

There is something pathetic, in reading many a modern biography, to note how an hour's space for performing an hour's labor is the boon most earnestly desired and most seldom attained. Philanthropist, statesman, artist, author—all echo the same complaint; all lament at being overwhelmed and overdriven, compelled to perform twenty-six hours' work in twenty-four; of having no leisure, no time for repose. Rank and wealth bring no exemption from the burden of labor; they rather increase it.

A plainly-dressed man who introduced himself as Mr. John Smith walked into a doctor's office and, having explained his symptoms, asked the doctor how long it would take to cure him. The doctor, who had treated the visitor with every possible courtesy, replied: "You will require several years' careful treatment under my personal supervision before you are perfectly well, but I think, Mr. Smith, you will be able to resume your labors in the bank in about two months." "Doctor, you are fooling yourself. I am not Smith the banker, but Smith the street car driver." "Is that so? Well, my good fellow, I don't see what you came to see me for. There's nothing the matter with you, except that you are not a banker."—Texas Siftings.

Page county, Va., had probably the most unique fire of the season—a house there having been set afire by the burning swallows that flew out of a chimney, and the fire having been put out with hard cider, several barrels of which happened to be at hand.

Women are helpless creatures when taken single handed, but when 300 mob together, as they did in an Ohio town recently, neither man nor bolts nor doors can stand before them. It is probable that a fire company composed of women would kick the inside of a house to pieces as thoroughly as the sterner sex.

M. Gervias, a French authority, says there are men capable of bearing arms—in Germany, 5,000,000; in France, 4,500,000; in Austria-Hungary, 1,800,000; in Italy, 2,000,000; in England, 800,000; in Russia, 6,000,000; and all the other European states, 4,000,000. That gives a total of 24,100,000. Of that number 10,000,000 are trained soldiers.

A Sioux City man who had been bald for years, was surprised lately to discover a patch of fiery red hair about the size of a silver dollar growing from the crown of his head. It came forth with surprising rapidity, and in a few days was several inches in length. The queer thing about it is that what little hair he had before was ject black, and the red lock covers only a small part of the bald space. It is so funny that he scarcely dares to take his hat off.

At the last session of the South Carolina Legislature an act was passed giving a pension of $5 per month to all disabled Confederate veterans or their widows. The act appropriated $50,000, and authorized the Treasurer to borrow as much as was needed after the appropriation was exhausted. The Pension Board is now in session, and they are appalled at the number of applications pouring in. It would require at least $200,000 to pay the pensions applied for.

It may seem strange to those who have never visited the United States Senate that two members of that body should be able to speak at the same time for any extended period. Senator Brown, of Georgia, and Senator Reagan, of Texas, arose together to address their colleagues. Senator Brown, as is his custom, proceeded to read his remarks, while Senator Reagan began his speech on the impromptu plan. Without noticing one another, the two statesmen continued to deliver a kind of oratorical duel for some minutes. The galleries laughed, and finally the presiding officer silenced one of the speakers.

A bit of romance is being enacted in New York, in which a wealthy banker, a tramp, a lovely young lady and a yellow kid glove are the principal figures. The banker was strolling through Central Park when he was suddenly attacked by tramps, who were roughly treating him. A lady appeared on the scene, and drawing a self-cocking revolver, compelled the villain's to flee, then bestowing upon the banker a charming smile from her lovely blue eyes, she disappeared, leaving behind no clue to her identity save a delicate kid glove that fell from her pocket as she drew the revolver. And now the banker, like the prince in the story of Cinderella, is hunting for this maiden with the mate of the yellow kid glove, vowing to endow her with his heart and wealth.

News from Washington.

The report of the house committee on elections on the Lynch-Vandever contested election case (Sixth district of California) will hold that not enough ballots actually cast were thrown out to have changed the result in favor of Lynch, the Democratic contestant.

The department of agriculture claims that the approximate damage to barley, rye, millet, etc., by the chintz bug was last year about $60,000,000. They attacked wheat and rye first, then barley and oats, and afterward corn, grass, millet, sorgum and broom corn.

With all the expedition possible, Speaker Carlisle does not now think it probable that congress will adjourn before the middle of August. One month at least after the meeting of two national conventions will be devoted to the making of campaign speeches. The record of the last congress was larger than any which preceded it. This congress will surpass them all.

The secretary of the treasury opened proposals of sales of bonds to the government, under the circular of April 17. The total amount offered was $1,824,600. The secretary accepted the following offers: $20,000 coupon 4s at $1.25; $10,000 and $5,000 registered 4s at $1.24¾; $15,000 coupon and $15,000 registered 4s at $124.70; $150,000 coupon and $5,000 registered 4s at $1.25. All the other offers were rejected.

Mr. Nelson has directed the attention of Secretary Vilas to the fact that the agent upon the White Earth reservation is reported to have been engaged in canvassing among the Indians to secure their opposition to his bill for the civilization of the Chippewas and their request for the adoption of the agreements made with the Northwestern Indian commission last year. He has asked the secretary to ascertain definitely to what extent Agent Sheehan has interested himself in this matter, and why he has taken so deep an interest in it.

Items About People.

Hon. Absalom Townsend, one of the oldest and best known residents of Galena, and Wisconsin lead mines, died at his home in Shullsburg, in the latter state, aged seventy-eight years. He was for many years prominent in the politics of Wisconsin, and represented his district for several terms in the state senate.

Mr. Phelps was upon the floor of the house and senate the other day. If his purpose was to convince those congressmen who have protested that he ought not to be appointed chief justice because he appears like an Englishman, he undoubtedly failed to accomplish his purpose. Mr. Phelps looks, talks and dresses like an Englishman.

A novel marriage occurred at Aberdeen, Dak. George W. Griswold of Mina, Dak., was united to Miss Hattie Hunt of Chicago, whom he saw for the first time an hour before the ceremony. The marriage is the result of a correspondence begun through a matrimonial paper. Griswold is an industrious young farmer in fair circumstances. Miss Hunt is a rather attractive, bright and modest German girl. Their meeting, which was warm and unaffected, indicated a clear case of love by correspondence.

Miss Ada Bell Richards, daughter of the late Capt. S. C. Richards, of St. Louis, a cousin of President Arthur, was married to Dr. Wright, of the Choctaw nation, Indian Territory, the ceremony by by Rev. Dr. Marshall, a cousin of the bride. The groom is a quarter blooded Choctaw Indian, a son of the late Gov. Wright of the Indian Territory. He is a well educated physician, 30 years old and quite handsome. The couple became acquainted while Miss Richards was doing missionary work in the territory last year.

Crimes and Criminals.

Mrs. Marvin, an old lady of Freeborn county, Minn., started for California to visit a daughter; but when she got to West Liberty she was robbed of her purse, ticket and check to her trunk. The purse contained about $40, and Mrs. Marvin had to return home.

Much excitement was caused in Licking, Mo., by the discovery that James Smalley, a well known citizen and proprietor of the Smalley house, had murdered his two children, aged five and seven, by cutting their heads with an axe. He next attacked his wife, who escaped by jumping through a window, as her insane husband had locked all the doors. Smalley then cut his own throat and wrists with a carving knife and expired by bleeding to death.

A shooting affray occurred at Dickinson, Dakota, between Jasper Hultz and Frank Chase, resulting in the death of Hultz. It was the result of an old quarrel. Both men lived fifty miles north of there, and had been drinking and playing poker all night. Hultz lost heavily. It is thought that Hultz fired the first shot. Four chambers in his revolver are emptied and one in Chase's. The ball entered under Hultz's right eye and passed through his head, coming out at the base of the skull. Hultz is a married man. It is thought that Chase fired in self defense.

Geo. Dunham was hanged at Woodbury, N. J. There was a clamor for tickets to witness the execution, which is the first that has occurred in Gloucester county in 65 years, but Sheriff Ridgeway adhered to the strict letter of the law, and few were admitted. Dunham slept but little the night before, although he was quiet. A glass of milk punch was given him, and he took a drink of whisky a few minutes before leaving his cell. The hanging was successfully accomplished and was without special features of interest. The crime for which Dunham was executed was the murder of his mother-in-law, Barbara Kandel.

The Catholic News at New York received the following cable dispatch: "The Vatican has issued a decree condemning boycotting and the plan of campaign. The decree distinguishes the national movement from these revolutionary means. It condemns only the latter."

One hundred and fifty men were put to work at Superior, Wis., breaking ground for the immense steel and iron works of the Land and River Improvement company at West Superior. Some 230 men will be employed to construct these works, and when completed 300 men or more will have steady employment.

The family of J. C. Waltmeyer residing in West Hempfield township, Lancaster county, Pa., has within the last ten days lost four children from a malignant type of diphtheria. Now the four remaining children, three well grown sons and a daughter, are dying, and the father and mother are down with the disease. The neighbors are panic-stricken.

A spike-nosed sturgeon was taken out of Lake Elysian at Elysian, Minn., that weighed 192 pounds. Its length was six feet and two inches from tip to tip. It measured eight inches thick and sixteen and a half inches wide. The spike on the nose was eighteen inches long and two inches wide. It was dead when found. There is no doubt that it is a salt water fish. The question is how it got into the lake.

The Democratic congressional committee of the fifth district of Minnesota have called a district convention to nominate a congressman. After 13 ballots it was decided to hold it early in July at Fergus Falls, the exact date to be fixed by the executive committee, which consists of J. P. Schmitz, Fergus Falls; J. W. Lilly, Crookston; Henry Keller, Sauk Center; Theo. T. Hudson, Duluth. The basis will be a delegate for every 250 votes for Ames, making 120 delegates in convention. The second congressional convention will meet at Mankato on the day before the democratic State convention.

The supreme court at Washington affirmed the decision of the supreme court of Minnesota in the case of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad against Fred G. Herrick. Herrick was an employe, injured through the negligence of an engineer. He received damages under a statute in Minnesota, also in force in Iowa, making railroad companies liable for injury to employes, through the acts of an agent of the company. Senator Davis, for the company, contended that these statutes violated the fourteenth amendment to the constitution, in that it showed discrimination in not applyng to all persons and corporations alike.

Sullivan, the slugger, has returned to Boston, where he was received with an ovation and procession. Mrs. John L. Sullivan, the champanion's legal wife, intends to set herself right before the world. She is endeavoring to secure a warrant for the big fellow's arrest immediately on his arrival, on the charge of improper relations with Annie Livingstone. She takes this step, she says, because John L., while traveling on two continents during the past two years, has acknowledged Annie Livingstone as his wife. She tried to have the slugger arrested while he was surrounded by his enthusiastic friends and admirers, but her evidence was not strong enough.

The World's Boston special says that Sullivan went on a spree aboard the Catalonia, insulted ladies, had fights with the steamer's employes, beat Anna Livingston, and was so violent that the captain threatened to put him in irons. Rev. W. R. Mantley, one of the passengers, is given as authority for the statements. He says that Sullivan cursed Mrs. Mantley, and threatened to "swipe her d—d brats out of existence" if she did not keep them out of his way. The steward, in defending himself from an attack, broke a soda syphon over John's head, which pleased the big fellow so much that he said the steward was the only man aboard. The engineer threatened to turn the hot water hose on Sullivan, who thereafter let him alone.

A Singular Accident.

An explosion that pitched 70 people into the air, throwing one man 50 feet, wrecked 17 large plate-glass windows, ruined $35,000 worth of clothing, damaged a building $15,000 and caused a stampede of hundreds of people from the upper stories of tall buildings, occurred in the basement of a building on State and Jackson streets in Chicago. Queer enough, no one was killed, although two or three may be fatally injured.

Two workmen were drilling a hole across the street from the basement to make a conduit for electric light wires, and accidentally punctured a gas main. They lit a candle to see what was the matter with the drill, and the next instant they and 70 odd clerks and customers in the clothing store overhead, the massive plate glass front and great piles of ready-made clothing were mixed up in an almost inextricable mass with broken timbers and falling plaster while people for blocks around thought an earthquake had occurred and rushed to the scene. The fire was quickly extinguished by the department. The two workmen in the basement were found to be very badly injured and three or four clerks in the store above were injured internally. One of them, George Dunlap, when the explosion occurred was standing on a hot air register, and was thrown 50 feet, landing on a pile goods. His back is badly injured.

A Town Destroyed.

Central City, Dakota, was almost destroyed by fire. The entire town between the sawpit and pocket gulches is gone—113 stores and houses altogether. Every business house, except the brewery and McDonald's hardware store, is gone. The fire accidentally originated in Bellevan & Johnson's restaurant, spreading so rapidly that it was impossible to check it. The Central fire department and entire service from Deadwood were on the ground, but the water gave out and nothing could be done. The loss is fully $250,000; insurance only $15,000, about equally divided in the St. Paul Fire & Marine, Commercial Union, Niagara, Springfield, Firemen's Fund, London Fire. Relief for the stricken city is being organized in the various towns in the Black Hills. Central is one of the first and richest mining camps in the Black Hills, but the deposit was long ago worked out. The town probably never will be entirely rebuilt.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Senate and House.

SENATE.

The session of the senate to-day was opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mrandes, rabbi of the Spanish and Portuguese congregation of New York, who, according to the Jewish custom, wore his hat while engaged in prayer. This is the second instance probably, in the history of the government—certainly within the last half century—when a Jew has offered prayer in the Senate.

The following bills for a public building at Portsmouth, O., $360,000. To amend the laws relating to mineral lands and mining researches. To authorize the city of Chicago to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for waterworks purposes. To provide a collector at the port of St. Paul. The Portsmouth, Chicago and St. Paul bills are House bills. A pension bill having been passed on motion of Mr. Beck, Mr. Blair proposed to celebrate the era of good feeling when that senator was found asking for the passage of a pension bill.

Mr. Hale, offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the civil service commissioners to furnish lists of all persons certified for appointment to the patent office from March 4, 1885, to March, 1888, and lists of all persons selected and appointed under such certification.

HOUSE.

Mr. Heard, of Missouri, from the committee on elections, submitted the report in the contested election case of Frank versus Glover, from the Ninth congressional district of Missouri, and it was referred to the House calendar. It finds the contestee, Mr. Glover, entitled to the seat.

Mr. Burrows of Michigan followed in an eloquent speech on the subject, pointing out what he considered the objectionable features of the bill in its present form.

Mr. Mills, of Texas, asked unanimous consent that all gentlemen might be allowed to print in the Record any remarks upon the subject of the tariff, but Mr. Reed, of Maine, objected.

At the conclusion of his speech the committee rose, and an attempt was made to have a night session, but it was defeated by the Republicans refusing to vote, leaving the House without a quorum. The House then adjourned.

SENATE.

The House bill giving to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across the Red River of the North, was passed.

Mr. Mitchell offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the secretary of the treasury for copies of the reports of Special Agents Beecher and Tingle as to the alleged smuggling of opium from British Columbia.

The motion to refer the President's message was taken up and Mr. Voorhees proceeded to address the Senate thereon.

On motion of Mr. Frye the conference report on the joint resolution for a conference of the American nations was non-concurred in and a new conference was ordered.

The animal industry bill was laid aside and the bill to forfeit unearned land grants was taken up, but went over without action and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

The House went into committee of the whole on the tariff. Mr. Bynum of Indiana said the bill presented did not meet with his unqualified approval. He believed that duties on imports should be levied and collected at all times to meet the current, ordinary expenses of the government and that any extraordinary expenses should be met by a resort to internal taxes. Believing this to be correct, he would maintain the present internal revenue system of taxation until the last obligation of the war was discharged.

Mr. Dockery, of Missouri, said that the surplus was required in the channels of business and trade and commerce, in order that capital might employ labor, and said that the question presented was how that surplus was to be disposed of.

The committee then rose.

Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, from the committee on appropriations, reported the bill making an appropriation of $150,250 to enable the executive departments to participate in the Centennial exhibition to be held in Cincinnati, O., in July, August and September. Committee of the whole.

The house then took a recess until 8, the evening session to be for debate only on the tariff bill.

SENATE.

Mr. Sherman, from the conference committee on the House joint resolution accepting the invitation of the French republic to take part in the international exposition in Paris in 1889, made a report which was agreed to. It fixes the amount of appropriation at $250,000.

The senate then resumed the consideration of the railroad land forfeiture bill, and Mr. Palmer proceeded to argue against all the amendments as to the lands granted to the State of Michigan for railroad purposes, and by the Governor of that state deeded to the Lake Superior Ship Canal Company.

After a speech upon the general land policy of the government, by Mr. Dolph, the bill was laid aside without action.

The following bills were taken from the calendar and passed: The senate bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Black river, Arkansas; the senate bill granting the right of way, 100 feet in width, to the Kansas City & Pacific Railway company through the Indian Territory, the company to pay $15 per mile per annum for use of the nation or tribe of Indians whose land is taken.

HOUSE.

The Senate bill was passed for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska.

The House then went into committee of the whole on the tariff. Mr. Buchanan, of New Jersey, opposed the bill.

Mr. Hemphill, of South Carolina, said he could not conceive a system more unjust, more unreasonable, more unfair and more unrighteous than the protective system.

Mr. Osborn, of Pennsylvania, submitted an argument against the bill, which he characterized as a blow at the dignity of American labor.

Other speakers followed until the day was spent.

SENATE.

The Senate committee on education and labor, at its meeting, ordered favorable reports on the following: Senator Blair's bill to restrict the sale of opium in the District of Columbia and the territories; House bill to establish a department of labor; Senate joint resolution proposing an amendment to the consitution for ever prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transporation and sale of alcoholic liquors in the United States. Senator Call was authorized to report as from the committee his bill of the last congress to establish a national college of dental science in Washington.

HOUSE.

On motion of Mr. Dunham, of Illinois, the Senate amendtment was concurred into the House bill authorizing the city of Chicago to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for waterwork purposes.

Mr. Dunn, of Arkansas, from the merchant marine and fisheries committee, reported and the House adopted a resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information relative to the seal fisheries in Alaska.

After a short discussion as to whether it was competent for the House to proceed to the consideration of private business, the House went into committee of the whole, Mr. Springer of Illinois, in the chair, on the tariff bill. Speeches were made by Messrs. Bremer, Ford, Goff and Laudes.

Mr. Gifford presented the petition of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union against running interstate trains and mail trains, and against military drills on the Sabbath. Tariff speeches have been the order of the day, thus adding to the stock of campaign literature to be distributed in the coming Presidential campaign. The House committee on military affairs directed a favorable report on the bill granting right of way to the Duluth & Manitoba Railroad Company through Ft. Pembina (Dakota,) military reservation.

How He Killed Him.

John Gorres, the Willow Lake farmer who killed his hired man, John Rosencrantz, near Redwood Falls, Minn., made the following statement before the coroner's inquest: Rosencrantz made a contract with him on the 4th instant to live with him for one year. On the 23d instant he said he was dissatisfied and wanted to leave. Gorres told him he could go and that he would pay him off as soon as he could go to Sanborn to get the money. He and his wife went to Sanborn for that purpose, and on their return home, their children informed them that Rosencrantz had been stealing various articles. On being charged with this, Rosencrantz admitted that he had taken a few iron rings of but little value, and some camphor and asked Gorres to come up stairs and he would get them out of his trunk. Gorres did so and on the articles being restored he became enraged and slapped Rosencrantz's face. Rosencrantz went out of the house. When Gorres started to go out shortly afterwards, Rosencrantz stood in front of the door with a pitchfork and said he would kill him. A struggle over the fork ensued; and Gorres getting possession of it struck Rosencrantz over the head at least three times. On Rosencrantz saying he had enough, Gorres helped him into the house and upstairs to his room, where he went to bed. Gorres went for a neighbor, who, on going to Rosencrantz, found him unconscious. A doctor was sent for but shortly after his arrival, about 9 o'clock, Rosencrantz died. There were no other witnesses to the killing and the jury found that Rosencrantz came to his death from blows at the hands of Gorres with some blunt instrument, and he was turned over to Deputy Sheriff Larner, who committed him to jail at New Ulm. Rosencrantz was unmarried, aged twenty-five years, and without any relatives in the country. Gorres is a well to-do farmer, and has heretofore stood well with his neighbors.

A Public Land Dispute.

There was quite a little row in the United States senate the other day over a debate on public lands. Plumb's forfeiture bill was the measure in hand and the great question involved was "shall actual purchasers from land grant companies or subsequent homesteaders and pre-emptors, or squarters, be allowed preference when their lands are returned to the public domain?" The whole question settled itself locally in Northern Michigan about the lands of the Ontonagon & Brule River railroad and those of the Portage Lake canal. The curious spectacle of a house divided against itself was presented in Senator Palmer's efforts for certain homesteaders who had gone on these lands and Senator Stockbridge's fight for the actual purchasers of the same land from the companies, to which number himself and Senator Sawyer of Wisconsin belonged. Palmer had offered an amendment protecting the squatters in case the lands were forfeited, and Stockbridge one to protect the purchaser. In the interest of harmony both were withdrawn. Senator Hoar renewed Stockbridge's amendment in the interest of a Boston syndicate which owns the land, and a distinguished controversy ensued. Hoar was better read on these subjects than Palmer or Stockbridge, and went on to show that all of Palmer's honest settlers and homesteaders were dummies placed on the land by a company of Washington claim agents, among them J. H. Reddington and W. C. Hill, to wrest the lands from the purchasers in case it was forfeited. He read from letters and contracts to show that those Washington land attorneys were to have one-fourth interest in each claim the "honest settler" succeeded in getting away from the purchaser who had already lived on and improved it in case it was forfeited.

Queen Victoria in Berlin.

Queen Victoria of England has just visited her daughter, the empress of Germany at Berlin. The empress, the crown prince and crown princess, and the prince and princess of Saxe-Meiningen received her at the depot. The greetings between Queen Victoria and the royal family of Germany were warm. The crown prince conducted the Queen to an open carriage drawn by four horses, which she entered, and with the empress beside her was driven to the castle. Crowds of people lined the route and cheered enthusiastically as the carriage passed.

Queen Victoria made three visits to the sick-room of the Emperor, who, by the doctor's advice, kept his bed, which he will do for a day or two till he gets stronger. After breakfast, Queen Victoria summoned Dr. Mackenzie and made minute inquires as to the Emperor's health.

The meeting between Queen Victoria and the Empress was very touching. The Queen burst into tears on the approach of her daughter. They embraced and kissed each other repeatedly with hands firmly clasped. The Queen only waited to remove her mantle, and went immediately to see the Emperor. She was astonished and delighted to find him looking better than she expected.

The greeting of the people of Berlin to the Queen was everywhere respectful. The men doffed their hats and the women curtsied. She was cheered enthusiastically except in the immediate vicinity of the palace, where the people refrained from any noisy demonstration on account of the Emperor.

By invitation of the Empress there was a large gathering of members of the imperial family at the palace, to meet the Queen. Among those present were the crown prince and crown princess, the Emperor's daughters, the prince of Hohenzollern, Prince Frederick Charles, Prince Leopold, the hereditary prince of Hesse-Darmstadt, Prince Henry, the Prince and Princess of Saxe-Meiningen and the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Baden.

The Situation in France.

A majority of the deputies for the Seine department have signed a manifesto to the electors condemning the Boulangist movement. The senators for that department have been asked to attach their signatures to the manifesto. The threatened split among the Boulangists seems to have been averted. La Cocardo officially announces that Gen. Boulanger will not be nominated for other constituencies. Gen. Boulanger has issued invitations to a political dinner at the Cafe Riche. President Carnot has imparted to the council the purport of the speech which he intends to deliver at Bordeaux.

The chamber of deputies fixed Thursday, April 26th, for the discussion of the Panama canal lottery loan. The report of the committee of the chamber of deputies which considered the Panama lottery loan proposal recommends that permission be immediately given to the company to issue the loan, and expresses confidence in the early completion of the canal.

President Carnot was met at the various places by officials exeressing their attachment and devotion to the republic, and was everywhere received with acclamations. Sometimes shouts for Boulanger mingled with the cheers. At Souterraine, replying to the mayor, the President said, "You are right in thinking that I shall know how to defend the republic against enemies within and without."

Sharp Letter to Sheehan.

In reply to a petition form the settlers of Crow Wing and Cass counties, complaining of depredations, etc., which have been committed by reservation Indians, and asking that such Indians be restrained from making incursions into the settlement of the petitioners, the department of the interior has addressed the following letter to T. J. Sheehan, Indian agent at the White Earth agency:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16.—J. T. Sheehan, Esq., United States Indian Agent, White Earth Agency—Sir: I am in receipt of a letter by department reference from Hon. Knute Nelson, inclosing one from H. C. Stions, dated Brainerd, April 7, transmitting three petitions signed by 101 persons, settlers in the counties of Crow Wing and Cass, complaining that reservation Indians go into the settlements, purchase whisky and commit depredations and other offenses, and pray that the proper Indian agents be instructed to restrain all Indians from making such incursions. You are instructed to make a thorough investigation of the subject and take such prompt and effective measures as will result in keeping the Indians on their reservation. * * * You will say to the Indians that if they continue to annoy settlers that they will be liable to arrest and prosecution under the laws of the state, and further that the settlers may become exasperated and resort to violence (in fact they so threaten in their petition), an event which might lead to the most serious results. * * * You will take such steps as may be necessary to vigorously prosecute the parties referred to in the petition who have been guilty of selling liquor to these Indians.

(Signed.) A. B. UPSHAW,
Acting Commissioner.

All About Blaine.

Under the caption "Mr. Blaine, A Highly Imported Intimation," the New York Sun (Dem.) prints the following:

A political rumor reaches us from a high Republican source and of so important a character that we publish it prominently. According to this intimation, the last thing that Mr. Blaine will do as he embarks on board the steamship which is to bring him home to the United States, will be to renew in the most positive language his refusal to be the Republican candidate for the presidency. This time, the declaration will be so absolute that it will give to all his friends a notice which they cannot ignore. He will say that even if he should be nominated by the Republican convention, he will refuse to stand, and as it will be impossible to communicate with him after the publication of this new refusal until the convention has met and done its work and adjourned, his most enthusiastic supporters will no longer be able to find any reason for hoping that he may be induced to change his mind and accept the nomination.

About the health of Mr. Blaine, his son, Walker Blaine, of Chicago, says: "I received a letter from my mother dated Rome, April 10. She says that my father at the time of writing was in the very best of health. He was going out every day, and enjoying his visit to that city in the highest degree. Invitations of a social nature were pouring in upon him in great numbers, and he was accepting as many of them as his time would permit. There was not the slightest symptom of any ailment about him. Indeed, on the contrary, he had not felt so strong and vigorous for many years."

Walker Blaine also stated that his father's trip to Europe was entirely for pleasure and not for health.

Government Indian Affairs.

Indian Commissioner Atkins says to his friends that he intends to resign the commissionership of Indian affairs. It is his avowed purpose to contest with Senator Harris of Tennessee for the seat in the senate, which will be made vacant next March. The only two persons mentioned as likely to succeed Atkins as commissioner are A. B. Upshaw of Tennessee, the assistant commissioner, and J. H. Oberly, one of the civil service commissioners. Both are understood to have the confidence of the president. Mr. Upshaw has been acting commissioner of Indian affairs much of the time since the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland, owing to the frequent absences of Mr. Atkins on account of the long and serious illness of his wife. Mr. Oberly was at one time superintendent of Indian schools and became quite prominent in connection with Indian matters. Nothing is known as to the president's purpose. Possibly Mr. Vilas may have some choice in the matter. Oberly would be glad, it is believed, to accept the place because it has a better salary and there is a better opportunity in the Indian office for a political manager.

Land Office Consolidation.

The three land offices in Congressman Lind's district—Tracy, Redwood Falls and Worthington—are to be consolidated. The law places it within the discretion of the secretary of the interior when the receipts of a land office fall so that its expenses exceed one-third of the amount received to consolidate that office with another. The receipts of these land offices have fallen very low, so that neither of them exceed $15,000 per year. The question of their consolidation was referred to the commissioner of the general land office, who has recommended that the three offices be consolidated. The question has arisen as to where the consolidated office shall be located. Certain influences have been at work, among them it is said that of J. F. Meagher, to secure its location at Mankato. This is hardly to be considered, however, as it would take the new office at least 150 miles away from the vacant public lands and entail great hardships upon people with final proofs, contests or filings to make. It seems pretty certain, however, that the three offices will be consolidated at an early day.

It Goes to Fergus Falls.

The joint commission appointed by the North Dakota and the Northern and Minnesota conferences of the M. E. church, to settle upon a location for the proposed Methodist seminary, met in Fargo to hear propositions from competing towns. The commission consists of ten members, five from Dakota and five from Minnesota. Mayor Newman delivered an address of welcome in behalf of the city, and Mr. Tevomy welcomed the visitors on behalf of the board of trade. Rev. Mr. Hollman responded for the commission, after which they proceeded to business. Propositions were received from Moorhead, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton and Fargo. The Moorhead site was visited in the afternoon, and at the session of the commission afterward it was decided to accept the offer of Fergus Falls, which consists of $5,100 cash, $7,000 in real estate, and a site of ten acres or more, valued at about $10,000. Most of the Dakota members voted for Fergus Falls, it is said, in the hope that a more important institute could soon be built in Dakota.

In the Canadian house of commons the correspondence with the United States bearing on the sea fisheries question was called for. Sir Charles Tupper and Sir John MacDonald assured the house that they had the utmost confidence that the United States would be forced to compensate all Canadians damaged by the seizures.

Judge Patterson of New York has denied the motion to quash the indictment in the case of Thomas B. Kerr, who is indicted together with Sharp, Foshay and Richmond for bribing the 1884 board of aldermen in connection with the Broadway surface railroad. His honor says the trial must be proceeded with at once.

Gov. Fitzhugh Lee of Virginia has written a letter to Gen. Charles H. Collis, regretting that the acceptance of a previous invitation will prevent his being present at the Grant birthday dinner. Along with his regrets, Gov. Lee sends an eloquent tribute to the unerring military ability of the great soldier.

The President has issued an order assigning Maj. Gen. Crook to the command of the division of the Missouri and Brig. Gen. Brooke to the command of the division of the Platte.

The Burlington & Quincy road has violated the terms of the recent passenger and freight agreement in making a circus contract at a less rate than that fixed. This nullifies the agreement, and leaves the various roads free to make such rates on circus transportation as they choose.

The greeting of Queen Victoria in Berlin was everywhere respectful and many times the waiting crowds cheered with enthusiasm. The Queen made three visits to Emperor Frederick's sickroom.

Lord Wolseley, at the banquet to Sir John Pender, disapproved the present English army and navy system, which he said would sooner or later land the country in disaster.

The Dominion government requested the bill to charter the Western & Northwestern road, now before parliament at Ottawa, to stand over for another session. This company contemplated building a cut-off to the boundary, but the government refused its assent, the intention being, it is supposed, to not allow more than the Red River Valley road at present.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The house, granary and barn on the farm of N. B. Gallop, near Dodge Centre, were burned. These were good buildings, the barn being as large as any in the country. The loss will be heavy.

Fire broke out in the coal sheds of the Manitoba company at St. Cloud, and the building was entirely consumed. Twenty-five hundred tons of coal, which were stored in the shed, caught fire.

Thomas Noyes, who was a pioneer settler in Wabasha county, died at his home in Maple Grove, Dak., on the 17th inst, aged eighty-seven years.

Fergus Falls will make an effort to secure the Methodist seminary to be located somewhere in the Red river valley. It is understood the city will offer $25,000 in property and cash.

R. F. McGrath's hardware store at Barnesville was broken into by tramps, presumably, and about $25 worth of plated ware and revolvers carried off. A tin box containing valuable, but not negotiable papers were found near the railroad cattle yards, the box having been cut open and abandoned.

A loud report was heard and a shock felt by parties south of Averil. It was at first thought that a steam boiler had exploded, but it is now thought to have been a meteor. As yet searchers have been unable to locate it, as the shock was felt for miles around.

August Kauke, who was robbed at Verndale, and nearly killed by highwaymen, is improving. The doctors feel confident that they will not only save his life but his arm also. Milo Lavanway, Owen Kingston and a young man named Rice have been arrested on suspicion, and were identified by the injured man.

Gilbert J. Hopkins, late from Montevideo, Chippewa county, whose people reside in Castle Rock, was adjudged insane and will be sent to the Rochester asylum. His father was committed to Rochester over a year ago.

A Worthington man found a pocketbook recently out on the prairie that another Worthington man lost while helping to fight fire out there some seven or eight years ago. There was something like $100 in the book when lost, and when found about $30 of it was in passable condition, but the balance was about destroyed by the exposure to the wind and weather.

Over thirty families have settled in the vicinity of St. James this spring, coming mostly from Illinois.

Frank Collins, American expressman of St. Cloud lit a cigar and, finding it would not draw, cut it in two and discovered a small cartridge in the middle with the ball pointed toward the small end.

Charles Greenwood, of Owatonna, while springing a trap for glass balls, was shot in the forehead and left eye by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of Fred Clinger.

The house of Mrs. Wade, in East Rochester, was burned, none of the contents being saved, but the sewing machine. Mrs. Wade is a widow with four children to support, and all her worldly wealth was in this house. No insurance.

A recent offer of C. A. Ballack to build a flax fiber mill at Lake City for a bonus of $4,000 is not likely to be accepted.

Mrs. Mary Ann Grinnell of Lake City has been committed for lunacy to the insane asylum at Rochester.

Hon. Amos Coggswell's nomination as postmaster of Owatonna has been confirmed, and he has received the necessary papers for execution before taking the office.

James O'Neil, who came to Moorhead from Milwaukee, attempted suicide by jumping through a second-story window of the Key City hotel. He had been intoxicated, and it is supposed attempted to take his life while suffering with tremens.

Frank Alle and Mrs. T. McDonald, arrested on the charge of setting fire to the house of Robert McDonald, had their examinations at St. James, and were discharged.

Mary Carron, aged 30, who lived with her brother, Fred, and her mother, on the Kieth farm, west of Marshall commited suicide by hanging herself in the barn. She had been considered partially insane for some time. Some few weeks ago she attempted to commit suicide, taking poison, and had been ever since closely watched by the family.

Rev. Louis Salzerer, of St. Paul, a German Catholic priest who was being taken to an insane asylum at Chicago, jumped from a car near Beudi Landing and fractured his skull. He died at Wabasha.

The Rochester city council has voted to remit the customary tax on the opera houses for the purpose of encouraging managers to bring before the people first-class entertainments.

An important case was decided at Duluth, involving the title to many hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of land. Messrs. Rice and Mallett were in partnership and the latter made several deals which his partner claimed were firm transactions, while Mallett claimed they were his own private affairs and in his wife's name. The judge decided in favor of Rice, who get $75,000, being the quarter interest in $250,000 worth of iron lands in the Vermillion range, 1,000 acres of land in Michigan and the Mallett audition to Ely.

A. H. Bereman, editor of the Wadena County Pioneer, died at his home, of congestion of the blood and heart. He had been sick for some time. His age was 27. He leaves a wife and little daughter.

H. E. Boen, secretary of the State Farmers' alliance, was arrested at Fergus Falls, by Deputy Marshal Campbell on the charge of cutting timber on government land. He had a hearing before United States Commissioner E. E. Corliss. Boen claims it is a piece of spite work and will amount to nothing.

Curious Mental Freaks.

Lizzie Zink, a 10-year-old girl of Mount Joy, Lancaster county, Pa., was discovered to be in a comatose condition the other day while at school. When she entered the schoolroom she told a playmate that an old woman had been following her and was coming in through the keyhole. The child, with her eyes tightly closed, cried loudly, "Gey weck," the Pennsylvania Dutch for "go away." When requested to open her eyes she said the old woman was holding them shut with her fingers. Figures were placed on the blackboard, and notwithstanding the fact that the girl's eyes were closed, she readily named all of them correctly. With the same precision she repeated words which were written upon the blackboard by the teacher. All questions were answered without hesitancy. Letters and figures were written on the floor with chalk at different points, and to the utter amazement of those present, the girl told in every instance, both their location and character. The water can, basin, bucket and the wearing apparel of other children in the school were in turn held above her head and behind and in every instance the nature of the article was announced without hesitancy. When Mr. Ober arrived she said she was glad to see him, though her eyes were closed at the time and no one had mentioned his name. She was taken home and remained in the same condition for six hours.

The Meanest Cheat Yet.

From the McKean County Miner.

A reputable citizen of the county writes us that not many days ago a man took a load of grain to a mill in this county, put his horses in the mill shed, and gave them half a bushel of oats in the feed boxes. He then went into the mill, but immediately returned to get a bag, but he heard his horses pawing as though they wanted something to eat. He went to their heads, and what was his astonishment to find their oats all gone.

He then began to investigate, and found the boxes had a false bottom. As soon as the horses put their noses into the oats it pressed the bottom of the box down so that the oats would run through into another box, the bottom of which was filled with auger holes. From last winter the poor horses that were hauling logs were supposed to be fed in this shed, and the thief who robbed the noble animals of their food ought to be punished.

ONE WOMAN'S METHOD.

Belle Ferguson was not very witty or not very wise. She had no particular force of character, on special accomplishment, no remarkable home excellence; but she was possessed of one source of influence—beauty—and that, after all, is no mean power.

Belle was a blonde—plump, tall, lithe and slender, with a peculiar floating grace in every movement that was one of her chief charms—blue eyes, somewhat small but soft, and shaded by light lashes, dark eye-brows (they were penciled, but every one didn't know that), and hair, long, thick and fine, of the true golden tinge, which she wore rolled back in the fashion so becoming to fresh, young faces.

What need Belle care if Miss Le Growle did whisper that her features were not beautiful, her expression deficient, and that when she had lost the freshness and coquetry of youth, that she would be positively an ugly old woman! Ralph Austin and Carlos de Arrondo, her Spanish lovers, didn't trouble themselves to pry into the future. They both loved, and were ready to quarrel for her. No one was more alive to this fact than Belle; nobody could have looked more unconscious than she did, flirting her little fan with lazy grace in her father's parlor, manifesting her temporary displeasure toward Carlos (who stood gloomily silent near her) in no other way than by her determined unconsciousness of his presence, and a marked and quite overwhelming increase of politeness toward Ralph Austin.

Ralph was born brave and modest. As a consequence he appeared to advantage. Belle's feigned admiration began to grow dangerously real. Her soft blue eyes sparkled with excitement, the pale flush of her cheek deepened into rose, and Carlos, who saw and read aright the changes of her face, turned and walked sullenly away.

Belle, half intent on revenging herself, half sincere in her admiration of Ralph, passed the next two days very much to her own satisfaction. Then somebody, perhaps Carlos himself, wrote Carlos to come and spend a few weeks, nobody knew precisely where, and Carlos went. The effect on Belle was disastrous. When she found that he was really gone, she rushed at once to Vivia Farrington, her cousin.

"Oh, Vivia! he's gone! he's really gone!"

"Who's gone!" said Vivia, looking up coolly from the sofa on which she was lying.

"Why—Carlos!"

"Well?"

Belle threw herself on the floor near Vivia and leaned her head on the sofa's edge.

"I am perfectly miserable!"

"Why?" asked the provoking Vivia.

"Why? you ask. Did'nt I tell you Carlos was gone?"

"Don't you mean Lieut. Austin?"

"No. I don't! Tiresome thing!" But whether this last referred to Vivia or the lieutenant this deponent knoweth not.

"Who is tiresome—Carlos?" asked Vivia. "Well, I'm glad you have your eyes open at last. I always did think him prosy."

"Prosy! He's no such thing—he's entertaining, and agreeable, and witty, and lively, and fascinating, and the dearest fellow in the world, and I haven't treated him well—I know I haven't."

Vivia smiled scornfully.

"You should have thought of that sooner."

"I know I should, you hard-hearted, cruel thing—but he did flirt with Rose Kenyon, and I was so angry! I wish I was dead!"

Just then came a tap at the door. It was Ellen, Belle's maid.

"Lieut. Austin wants to know if he can see you, Miss Belle. He said something about being ordered off suddenly."

"Tell him I will be down in a moment, Ellen."

Vivia said nothing, but she looked volumes; but that didn't disturb Belle. She gave a touch to her hair, another to her eyebrows, shook out the dress; smoothed her morning skirt, settled her cuffs, and went down to the drawing-room where Ralph was nervously waiting for her.

"I am ordered off, Miss Belle," was his first salutation. "I must go within the hour."

"Oh, dear, Lieut. Austin, what can we do without you?"

"Will you care?" he said softly and eagerly.

"Care? Why of course I shall! We shall all miss you."

Ralph seized her hand and carried it to his lips.

"Belle, will you write to me?"

"Yes, yes! Good-bye!" And Belle, who really had the conscience to be ashamed of herself, burst away from his detaining grasp, and ran to her usual resource in time of trouble—Vivia Farrington—and: "Oh, what shall I do? He will write to me—I am sure he will!" she concluded, in somewhat hysterical style. "Vivia, don't sit there as it you were a block, but tell me what shall I do?"

"Belle, you are too provoking. You are not worthy of either the lieutenant or Carlos, and I have no patience to see you playing battledore with two warm, noble, hearts. If you have pink cheeks and yellow hair—"

"Yellow hair!" Belle had borne all the rest patiently; but this was too much. Yellow hair she was not guilty of. It was golden. Every one told her so.

"Vivia, you are outrageous—my hair isn't yellow, and you are envious because you wanted Ralph Austin for yourself." And Belle sailed majestically out of the room, and unbosomed herself no further to Vivia Farrington.

She was not happy, though, even in the reception of letters once or twice a week from Lieut. Austin; a blush turned guiltily on her cheek when joked about them, and she would let no one post her letters for her. After three weeks Carlos came back. He was looking pale and worn—by no means the better for his trip.

She met Carlos with the pretiest little air in the world. It was not repentant, it was not submissive, but it argued strongly of both. But in the midst of her conversation there came an interruption.

"Here's a letter from the lieutenant, Miss Belle. Jim, his man, brought it on, miss, and begs a thousand pardons because he couldn't come here and deliver it last night."

Belle blushed a burning red as she stretched out her hand for the letter, but, Carlos anticipated her and took it himself.

"Is this from Lieut. Austin?" he asked, sternly.

"What right have you to ask?" returned Belle, trying to look courageous.

"The best in the world—that of your future husband. Once more—is this letter from Lieut. Austin?"

"What if it is?"

"You acknowledge nothing there is no harm if it is."

Carlos threw the letter on the table and got up.

"Good-by, Miss Ferguson."

"What do you mean? Where are you going?"

"Somewhere—anywhere—so that I never see you again." And he made a step toward the door.

Belle was really frightened.

"Carlos, don't go! Stop—I care nothing about him!"

"Carlos—"

Still he was immovable.

"Carlos, see here." There was a rustle and a crackle. Carlos turned around, radiant. She had thrown the letter into the grate.

* * * * *

Their wedding followed in a few weeks. Ralph Austin, when he recovered from the bitterness caused by Belle's trifling, found a true wife in Vivia Farrington.

Chaplain Milburn.

Washington Post.

Rev. Dr. Milburn, the blind Chaplain of the House of Representatives, whose prayers are just now creating a sensation, is a remarkable man in more than one respect. Forty-three years ago he was told by eminent doctors that he would be dead within six months, and since that time he has traveled, by actual computation, a million and a half miles in his vocation. He is now physically, although in his sixty-fourth year, as stong and robust as most men of thirty, and his intellect is of more than common power. He can give more accurate descriptions of Westminster Abbey, Cologne Cathedral, Notre Dame and the other Old World monuments he has visited than the majority of those persons who have not been dependent on other people's eyes and on their sense of touch. He can describe the rocky outlines and mountainous declivities of the Sierras and of the Rocky Mountains and the picturesque beauties of the Blue Ridge with a force and vigor combined with accuracy rarely equalled, even by writers who still retain their sight, while he has been blind since he was five years old. It is his wonderful power of thus describing in simple language the concrete things of life that renders his sermons and prayers so forciful and attracts to them such widespread attention. His first invocation to attract notice in the House was a vigorous denunciation of stock gambling, but recently he cast all previous utterances in the shade by referring to the present labor troubles in such a manner as to call forth from a Representative the remark that it was an "incendiary speech."

A reporter of the Post found Dr. Milburn enjoying the delight of a long-stemmed pipe. At the reporter's entrance the doctor arose, and, in a hearty voice, said he was "glad to see" him. The reverend gentleman is of tall and commanding presence. Broad-chested and inclined to stoutness, he is the picture of health. A full, untrimmed gray beard floats away down his vest, while his black hair, streaked with silver, is brushed back from his high forehead and hangs in bushy luxuriance upon the collar of his clerical coat. His strongly-marked features bear a kindly expression, and are every now and then lit up by a pleasant smile. While talking he fixes his eyes upon the person whom he is addressing, and the sightless orbs appear to look straight into the soul of his listener. He is a most interesting talker, and one of his favorite hobbies is the subject of health and its promotion. He is a very Jew in his selection of food, positively eschewing all hog meats, and he treats himself to a regular course of curry-comb and rough towel, cold water, oil and sun-baths every morning. As he himself says, he is one of the best groomed men in the country.

The Last Days of Webster.

From a Boston Letter.

During my five years residence in the city of Boston I saw the distinguished statesman several times. I heard his great speech in front of the Revere House. His voice rang out like a trumpet and he was heard distinctly by the vast multitude that filled the square and crowded the streets I also heard him address the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Faneuil Hall. The last time I saw him was a short time before his death. He was receiving the compliments and congratulations of his friends in Boston. The city was alive with visitors, the streets were thronged and flags waved from mast and spire, roof, tree and window. Instrumental bands "discoursed sweet music" and the great statesman rode in his carriage through the immense crowds of cheering friends, receiving their homages hat in hand and bowing right and left. A great change had passed over him. He had evidently been a sufferer—a disappointed man. He did not receive the nomination for the presidency, which he hoped to win. Whittier had scored him in a poem called "Ichabod." Wendell Phillips had criticised his course in congress in a sharp speech, and political editors had called him before the bar of public sentiment. When he died Theodore Parker delivered a splendid discourse, in which the most magnificent American statesman was duly honored and honestly complimented.

His last words were, "I still live." He lives in the memory of survivors, who saw him and who heard his marvelous eloquence. He lives in the history that records his great achievements as a lawyer, as a statesman and as a logical debater. He lives in works of art on canvas, in marble and in bronze. He lives in the printed speeches that have been published and scattered over the land broadcast as the grass in the meadows. Nature does not duplicate her greatest men in a single century, perhaps never. We may safely conclude that America will not have another Webster. "We shall never look upon his like again." This great man had faults, he made mistakes, he was human, although he was called the "god-like," but I have no inclination now to make a record of his mistakes and misadventures. Even the sun has spots, but it is a great light, a brilliant luminary shining upon the evil and the good.

CONVINCING GUARANTEES

Which are Justified by a World-Wide Experience.

TO THE PUBLIC:

Having branch houses and laboratories in seven different quarters, and therefore having a world-wide experience, we, H. H. Warner & Co., justify ourselves in making the following statements:

FIRST.—For the past decade we have held that 93 per cent. of diseases originate in the kidneys, which introduce uric acid into the system, a poison that is injurious to every organ, attacking and destroying first the organs which are the weakest. We have also held that if the kidneys are kept in perfect health most of the ordinary ailments will be prevented, or, if contracted, cured. Other practitioners have held that extreme kidney disease is incurable. We have proof to the contrary, however, in hundreds of thousands of cases in every section of the globe.

SECOND.—The kidneys being the sewers of the human system, it is impossible to keep the entire system in good working order unless these organs are doing their full duty. Most people do not believe their kidneys are out of order because they never give them any pain. It is a peculiarity of kidney disease that it may long exist without the knowledge of the patient or of the practitioner. It may be suspected if there is any gradual departure from ordinary health, which departure increases as age comes on.

THIRD.—We do not cure every known disease from one bottle. This is an impossibility.

FOURTH.—Warner's Safe Remedies have been recognized by the doctors and the people all over the globe as standards of the highest excellence.

FIFTH.—We make the following unqualified guarantees:

GUARANTEE 1.—That Warner's Safe Remedies are pure and harmless.

GUARANTEE 2—That the testimonials used by us are genuine, and so far as we know, absolutely true. We will forfeit $5,000 for proof to the contrary, GUARANTEE 3.—Warner's Safe Remedies have permanently cured many millions of people whom the doctors have pronounced incurable. Permanent cures are always convincing proof of merit.

SIXTH.—Ask your friends and neighbors what they think of Warner's Safe Cure.

REV. J. P. ARNOLD, Camden, Tenn., had fearful abscesses caused by Kidney disease. In 1878 and 1881, other running abscesses appeared. He was fully cured in 1883 by Warner's Safe Cure and in 1888 reported himself sound and well and he is over 70 years old.

MRS. ANNIE JENNESS-MILLER, editress of Dress, 253 Fifth avenue New York, eight years ago was cured of nervous prostration, when the best New England physicians could do her no good. She cured herself with Warner's Safe Cure, and writes in 1887: "To-day I am a perfectly well woman. It is the only medicine I ever take."

L. B. PRICE, M. D., a gentleman and physician of the highest standing of Hanover, C. H., Va., four years ago, after trying every other remedy for bright's disease, including famous mineral waters, cured himself by Warner's Safe Cure, and March 24, 1888, wrote: "I have never had the slightest symptoms of my old and fearful trouble."

HERMAN URBAN, of MacNeal & Urban, safe makers, Cincinnati, O., was broken down by excessive business cares. He was fully restored to health four years ago by Warner's Safe Cure and has since been in robust health.

DR. DIO. LEWIS wrote: "If I found myself afflicted with a serious kidney disorder I would use Warner's Safe Cure."

MRS. E. J. WOLF, Gettysburg, Pa., S. C. Farrington, Gotha, Fla., J. M. Long, 43 East 2d street, Cincinnati, O., and the sister of J. W. Westlake, Mt. Vernon, O., were cured of consumption, (caused by kidney acid in the blood, as over half the cases are,) by Warner's Safe Cure.

We could give many thousands of similar testimonials. Warner's Safe Cure does exactly as represented.

SEVENTH.—Warner's Safe Remedies were put on the market in obedience to a vow made by H. H. Warner that, if the remedy now known as Warner's safe cure, restored him to health he would spread its merits before the entire world. In ten years the demand has grown so that laboratories have been established in seven quarters of the globe. Warner's Safe Cure is a scientific specific—it cures when all the doctors fail, thousands of the best physicians prescribe it regularly, its power over disease is permanent and its reputation is of the most exalted character. Can you afford longer to ignore its extraordinary power? Now, in the spring of the year, a few bottles will tone you up and cure all those ill feelings which, unknown to you, are caused by the fatal kidney poison in the blood, which will surely end fatally, if not at once removed. For this no other specific is known.

No Leper.

From the Philadelpha Times.

Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, tells the following story as illustrating the ineffectual attempts of the Sandwich Island authorities to investigate the origin and transmission of leprosy in that country. There had been a murder committed by a healthy native, who was condemned to death. A German doctor begged the convict's life from King Kalakaua, on condition that the convict submit to a course of experiments.

Consent was given and the man was severely inoculated with the blood of lepers, without any apparent effect. At last the German dissected a piece of flesh as big as the palm of his hand out of the shoulder of a living leper and sewed it into a wound he made in a corresponding position on the shoulder of his subject. Even this failed. This was four years ago and the convict is to-day a healthy man. They are as yet in complete ignorance of the rules governing this dread disease as when, four years ago, they commenced the experiment.

High Price for a Book.

"The highest price ever paid for a book," said an expert, "was $50,000. The German government gave that sum for a vellum missal which was presented to Henry VIII by Pope Leo X, accompanied by the document of making Henry a defender of the faith. Charles II gave it to the ancestors of the Duke of Hamilton. A few years ago the duke put it into the hands of Southerly, Williamson & Hodge, of London with other books for sale. The German government sent a special embassy to buy it, and carried it back in an iron safe especially constructed for it. The highest offer ever made was for a Hebrew Bible in the Vatican, for which the Jews of Venice agreed to give its weight in gold. It was a vast roll which two men could scarcely carry, and the offer amounted to $100,000, but it was refused.

It is a most impressive sight, worth traveling many miles to see; and one not soon forgotten.

Not unlike the thrifty oak in its germ, development and growth, is consumption. But even this mighty foe of mankind, positively yields to the wonderful curative properties of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if taken early. Don't be blind to your own interests and think yours a hopeless case. This remarkable remedy has rescued thousands. Of druggists.

Teachers.

There is an increasing demand for teachers who are qualified to teach Bookkeeping and Penmanship. Teachers should improve the opportunity offered by the St. Paul Business College during the summer, and fit themselves for more remunerative work. We use, in the "Normal" department of our College, the State Text Books, and teachers will receive individual instruction from the principal. Students may enter at any time, and a special reduction from our regular rates will be given to all who enter before June 1. W. K. MULLIKEN, St. Paul, Minn.

A Thrilling Incident

In the mission life of Mrs. Ingalls, in Burmah, is well told in the "Baptist Messenger," relating how she was sent for to visit one of the Buddhist high priests, who had been nearly killed; and how, while in the most holy place in their temple, where none but priests had ever before been admitted, she was permitted unrebuked to use for him the sacred vessels which none but the high priest dare touch, and to even overturn and sit on one of their gods to rest; all through the influence of Perry Davis' Pain Killer, called by them "god medicine," so successfully had she used it in curing their many diseases, some of them considered heretofore fatal in that climate, among which were cholera, liver complaint, dyspepsia, the bite of venomous reptiles, etc. This speaks volumes for the Pain Killer.—London Times.

Most women look forward to matrimony as their proper sphere in life, but they should constantly bear in mind that a fair, rosy face, bright eyes, and a healthy, well-developed form, are the best passports to a happy marriage. All those wasting disorders, weaknesses, "dragging-down" sensations, and functional irregularities peculiar to their sex have an unfailing specific in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Purify Your Blood

For a good spring medicine we confidently recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla. By its use the blood is purified, enriched and vitalized, that tired feeling is entirely overcome, and the whole body given strength and vigor. The appetite is restored and sharpened, the digestive organs are toned, and the kidneys and liver invigorated.

Those who have never tried Hood's Sarsaparilla should do so this spring. It is a thoroughly honest and reliable preparation, purely vegetable, and contains no injurious ingredient whatever.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"For a first-class spring medicine my wife and I both think very highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla. We both took it last spring. It did us a great deal of good and we felt better through the hot weather than ever before. It cured my wife of sick headache, from which she has suffered a great deal, and relieved me of a dizzy, tired feeling. J. H. PEARCE, Supt. Granite Railway Co., Concord, N. H.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is the very best medicine to take to purify the blood and to expel the germs of scrofula, salt rheum, and other poisons which cause so much suffering, and sooner or later undermine the general health. By its peculiar curative power, Hood's Sarsaparilla strengthens the system while it eradicates disease.

"Early last spring I was very much run down, had nervous headache, felt miserable and all that. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and was benefited by it. MRS. J. M. TAYLOR, 1119 Euclid avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

Purifies the Blood

"We wish to express our heartfelt thanks for the good Hood's Sarsaparilla has done our little daughter. For three years she suffered with scrofula, which went to her eyes. After we had spent a good deal of money with no benefit, we tried Hood's Sarsaparilla. Two bottles greatly relieved, and five permanently cured her. We heartily recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla. C. F. ARM AND HAMMER

To Housekeepers and Farmers.—It is important that the Soda you use should be White and Pure same as all similar substances used for food. To insure obtaining only the "Arm & Hammer" brand Soda, buy it in "pound or half pound" cartoons, which bear our name and trade-mark, as inferior goods are sometimes substituted for the "Arm & Hammer" brand, when bought in bulk. Parties using Baking Powder should remember that its sole rising property consists of bicarbonate of soda. One teaspoon ful of the "Arm & Hammer" brand of Soda mixed with sour milk equals four teaspoonfuls of the best Baking Powder, saving twenty times its cost, besides being much healthier, because it does not contain any injurious substances, such as alum, terra alba etc., of which many Baking Powders are made. Dairymen and Farmers should use only the "Arm & Hammer" brand for cleaning and keeping Milk Pans Sweet and Clean.

MR. MOUSER'S SAWBUCK.

Mr. Mouser and his merry little wife occupied a charming cottage in the suburbs of a large city in the "Fatherland." His business connections were of such a nature that he was usually at leisure after four o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Mouser prided himself on being a man of originality and brains. Mr. Mouser also liked a little joke—at other people's expense.

It was Autumn. Mr. Mouser had just laid in a goodly supply of winter fuel. Wood was chiefly used for this purpose in the land of Mr. Mouser's birth.

Sitting by the window of his cosy living-room, enjoying a royal smoke from the long-stemmed porcelain pipe, Mr. Mouser watched the wood-sawyer plying his trade, made easy by long habit of handling wood and saw. As Mr. Mouser gazed and pondered an idea crept into his head. It was grasped—as ideas quickly became captive there."

"Lizbeth," said he to his wife, "it is singular I never thought of it before—I generally think of such things—but it strikes me that I could saw that wood myself."

"Gracious! what an idea!"

"A bright one, isn't it? A big saving, too! Just see with what ease it is done—the man cuts through the sticks as if he were slicing bread and butter; besides, I require more exercise; my health is not what it has been."

"Why, dear, do you feel ill?"

"N-no, but a man needs to exert himself if he does not wish to run down in muscular power. My habits are too confining; a sense of this fact has been growing on me lately. But I have solved the difficulty while watching that man play on his saw-jack."

A merry twinkle of the eyes and a laudable endeavor to maintain a serious expression would have convinced the beholder that Lizbeth also had ideas but like a properly respectful wife she kept them to herself until called for.

"Do you think, Lizbeth, that a little gentle muscular activity is what I need to stimulate appetite.?"

"You might paint the house or do some less tiresome work than wood-sawing," replied Mrs. Mouser.

"Oh, you underrate my capacities, my dear. And sawing wood is not such hard work. Come and see how simply it is done, yet how every muscle is brought into play. I am enchanted with my idea, and shall carry it out. The man can finish this job, but it shall be the last I ever pay for. What think you of it wife?"

"Well," laughed the lady demurely, "I think we shall be obliged to live on cold victuals and wear blankets to keep from freezing. But seriously dear, you had better consider what hard labor you are planning for yourself. If I were you I would experiment on a few cordsticks and assure myself that it is as easy as it looks."

"That's just like a woman," retorted Mouser, disdainfully; "she never does anything heroically; she is totally incompetent in matters of physical calculation. Now I can see just as well as if I had stood over that man's saw-jack for an hour the amount of force required to drive a saw through a stick of cord-wood. And I declare to you here and now I am going to do the next load myself. It is play; nothing but play!"

Lizbeth laughed so tantalizingly that Mr. Mouser turned upon her in a flurry of indignation, saying:

"You seem to have your doubts, madam!"

"Seeing is believing, sir!"

"Well, you shall see. You ought to know by this time that I am a man with a mind of my own, and when I say I am going to do a thing I do it. Please bear this in your shallow mentality, Mrs. Mouser, that I, your husband, am determined to never more pay one dollar for a wood-sawyer's hire."

"I am afraid I shall have to do a little of the wood-sawing myself, then," gravely murmured Mrs. Mouser.

Mr. Mouser meant business. He at once ordered the very best kind of a saw-jack made. He purchased a splendid saw, with sharp teeth and a light frame. He pranced about, happy as a schooboy, with dabs of yellow and green paint spattered all over his person, until finally the saw frame suited him in its bright yellow coat. The saw-jack he painted a lovely light green.

Daily he promenaded impatiently around the sheds where the wood was stored, and grumbled because the fuel lasted so unusually long. At intervals he added another coat of green paint to the highly decorated sawing-jack (sawbuck, it is called sometimes), and bade all his acquaintances and friends come and inspect his patent calisthentic toys, until every one for miles around became familiar with Mr. Mouser's green sawing-jack.

At last the longed-for day arrived. A big load of fine hickory had been piled in close proximity to the tools of decimation.

Mr. Mouser was all excitement. He passed by his amused wife with important disdain, and scarcely gave himself time to devour his dinner, he was so eager to be at work.

"Nothing more, thanks," he replied, as his wife wished to replenish his cup. Rising, he hastened to handle his pets with an ardor that caused Lizbeth to smile knowingly as she watched him pick out the very smallest and most slender cord sticks.

This was a great mistake on Mr. Mouser's part. He should have tackled the difficult ones first, on the simple but fruitful theory that custom would have sweetened his toil with the balm of greater ease.

My! how the saw rented and the abbreviated sticks tumbled to the ground! Still Lizbeth, who was peeping with laughter-brimming eyes, noticed that at the third cord-stick work seemed to slacken just a little, but seven were finished, and Mr. Mouser came in declaring he felt glorious.

The second day Mr. Mouser remained at table a trifle longer. Four cord-sticks in broken length licked the dust, however.

Third day—Mr. Mouser took time to glance over the daily news after dinner. Record: Three cord sticks.

"Lizbeth," said he, "I think I've been cheated in the saw-jack. It is not put together on as practical a plan as I was led to believe. It wriggles."

Fourth day—Mr. Mouser toyed over his dinner extensively. He smoked his pipe and read the paper. He glanced over his monthly magazine until dark, then started up, exclaiming:

"Mercy! how short the days are!"

Mrs. Mouser enjoyed the situation intensely but said never a word.

Fifth day—Mr. Mouser rose with a sense of injustice resting upon him. All day he was haunted by the outrageous fate that made him the owner of a sawing-jack.

"My dear, we require more wood than usual to-day and to-morrow, washing and ironing days, you know," said Mrs. Mouser as soon as he got home.

"I never saw anything like the way you women manage to consume fuel!" and Mr. Mouser grabbed his hat and strode angrilly toward the woodpile. A few sticks fell from the savage manipulation of the saw, while Mr. Mouser's snarling kept excellent time to the wild motions of the sawyer.

With a crash he sent the saw flying over the woodpile. This was too much. His wife was a brute to expect him to work like a slave during the few moments he could call his own free from business drudgery. But if he gave up he would never hear the last of it. Oh, if he could only get rid of that saw-jack.

A long time he pondered; at last a smile of joy illuminated his face. That night after his wife had retired, Mr. Mouser slipped out and carried that hated green object to the front gate. Presto, in the morning the corpus delicti would be gone. The highway was full of robbers, who would steal anything and everything.

He would make a big fuss about the loss, but take good care and not buy a second saw-jack.

He slept the sleep of the just until about four o'clock in the morning. It was still dark, but his anxiety to assure himself of the loss of his trouble caused him to sneak out and reconnoitre. The saw-jack was still there. Mr. Mouser whispered—not a prayer. "Oh, well, there is time enough still between this hour and daylight for a theft to be committed," he muttered. It was the voice of Mrs. Mouser that awakened him in time for breakfast. He glanced out of the window the first thing. Oh, how brightly the sun shone, and the saw-jack gleamed up at him in all its verdant beauty. No robber hand had carried it away. A fearful sigh escaped the Mouser bosom.

"You must saw some wood for me before you go, dear," said his wife.

"What, more wood!"

"Yes, dear; recollect you only sawed one stick last evening," rejoined Mrs. Mouser meekly, but a wicked gleam of mischief played about her eyes and mouth.

Mr. Mouser ignored her reply, and hastened to town with his pretty tools with a vigor born of awful fury, but way down in his soul a voice groaned, that sawing-jack must go!

Where? whence? how?

Mr. Mouser was a man of resources. Twelve o'clock, midnight. A burglarish darkness and silence brooded around as a man stole hence from his couch, and grabbing his trousers, left a cosey bedroom. A little later the only active creature about, a feline prima donna, might have witnessed a sorry sight; a solitary man marching townward, clutching in his strong right hand a beautifully painted green sawing-jack.

Soon he returned. The sawing-jack, where was it?

Mr. Mouser rose that morning in a most delightful frame of mind.

"Lizbeth, my dear little Lizbeth," he exclaimed, friskily, "I am going to work in earnest to-day. I am feeling much better than I have for some time. Here, feel this arm. How's that for muscle, eh? That's what sawing wood has done!"

Lizbeth blinked oddily, but looked contented. Mr. Mouser hastened out to "flip off a stick or two before breakfast," but soon came in looking quite angry and puzzled.

"What in the world has become of that jack?" It was gone. "Such infamy—to steal one's very implements of toil!" he cried in a rage, as he sent for the old wood-sawyer again.

Mr. Mouser, of course, grieved over the loss, but managed to conquer the regret sufficiently to display some of his wit and mirth.

But this good feeling received a sudden check the morning after the burglary of the "jack."

He had just opened the daily paper when his glance was arrested by a leading paragraph.

"Lizbeth, look at this!"

Mrs. Mouser became alarmed. Her husband was pale as death and trembling in every limb as he handed her the paper. She read:

"The residence of the Hon. Oliver was broken into night before last and a large sum of money and valuable plate and jewelry stolen. * * * The robbers entered by the garden window, from which they had removed the iron grating, while standing on a singular-looking wooden object, recognized by old-fashioned country folks as a 'sawbuck.' It is painted a light green, and will doubtless prove a valuable clue to the miscreants. A thousand dollars' reward is offered for return of jewelry or information leading to the arrest of the robbers."

"Why, this is splendid! You can at once notify the authorities that the 'jack' is yours—the theives who carried it off—"

"Oh, my—Oh, 'my!" groaned Mr. Mouser; "don't talk to me about thieves—I may be arrested any moment when they discover—

"Discover what? How can they arrest an innocent man because he owns an article stolen from him and used by wretches—"

"Oh, Lizbeth, I may not even be able to prove an alibi. Oh, what shall I do! I tell you, wife, I am not entirely innocent."

"Ah! we nab you confessing, my fine bird," a rude voice here interrupted, followed by the entrance of the minions of justice.

Mrs. Mouser begged, cried, stormed and implored. Mr. Mouser was mute and totally crushed; but the bold minions of authority led him away to a dungeon, where he languished for three days before his friends could obtain a hearing for him. In the meantime, the real culprits had been caught, but the law required an explanation of the language that appeared to the police like a confession of complicity, notwithstanding Mr. Mouser's unquestionable social standing and perfect respectability.

The court-room was crowded with his friends and neighbors. His wife gazed at him tearfully and lovingly, but Mr. Mouser was very much cast down. There was no escape. He had to tell how distasteful wood-sawing had proved to him, how he feared the ridicule of wife and friends if after all the boasting he gave it up. But when he related his midnight elopement with his green sawing-jack, even the court joined in the broad smile that ripened into a roar of laughter from the less dignified listeners. The crowing humiliation came, however, when he left the prison for the coach to be taken home. There he saw the green abomination resting at the driver's feet on the front of the carriage. His wife has not stopped laughing yet at his midnight adventure.

The First Woman.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

Woman's first appearance has been a fruitful subject for the legend-mongers. The Phonician myth of creation is founded on the story of Pygmalion and Galatea. There the first woman was carved by the first man out of ivory and then endowed with life by Aphrodite. The Greek theory of the creation of woman, according to Hesoid, was that Zeno, as a cruel jest, ordered Vulcan to make woman out of clay, and then induced the various gods and goddesses to invest the clay doll with all their worst qualities, the result being a lovely thing, with a witchery of men, refined craft, eager passion, love of dress, treacherous manners, and shameless mind. The Scandinavians say that as Odin, Vili and Ve, the three sons of Bor, were walking along the beach they found two sticks of wood, one of ash and one of elm. Sitting down the gods shaped man and woman out of these sticks, whittling the woman from the elm and calling her Elma.

One of the strangest stories touching the origin of woman is that told by the Madagascarenes. In so far as the creation of man goes the legend is not unlike that related by Moses, only that the fall came before Eve arrived. After the man had eaten of the forbidden fruit he became affected with a boil on the leg, out of which, when it burst, came a beautiful girl. The man's first thought was to threw her to the pigs, but he was commanded by a messenger from Heaven to let her play among the diggings until she was of marriageable age, then to make her his wife. He did so, called her Bahoura, and she became the mother of all races of men.

The American Indians' myths relative to Adam and Eve are numerous and entertaining. Some traditions trace back our parents to white and red Maoze; another is that man, searching for a wife, was given the daughter of the King of Muskrats, who, on being dipped into a neighboring lake became a woman.

Poor first mother! For untold centuries she has been twitted for her primal share in the world's cares and punishments.

But whether the product of a pimple or of a divinely-vivified rib, the paradox remains that she who is the truest daughter of Eve has never a lack of admiring slaves.

Diligence in Business.

"Diligent in his business!" It is the man who is diligent in his own business to whom the exalted position is promised. There are people, dearly beloved, who are diligent in every body else's business, and have therefore no time to attend to their own. They do not stand before kings; they more frequently stand before the police judge. Their diligence is not commendable. A workman is known by his chips; so alas! is the faro banker. Do you be diligent in your own business and be content with its rewards. You may not walk so many miles in a day as Fitzgerald, but you can sleep a good deal more in that time, and if you do not get so much money for it, neither do you get so many blisters. On your little salary at the suspender counter, you can not clean up $300,000 on Wall Street this week. But then neither can you be cleaned out of $450,000 next week.

You may not be able to set the fashions in male attire, but you can fill your soul with nameless joy and an exaltation of celestial birth, and climb to the top of high Olympus, and lean back and pile you feet on the sofa, and make yourself easy with the immortal gods, by paying your landlady every Saturday and keeping even with your tailor. You may never be the Washington correspondent of a society paper, but then your hair won't turn white in the agonized effort to explain what it is about a senator's wife who has red hair, freckles, no upper teeth, a hair wart on her nose, and a twang in her shrill voice, that "makes her so bewitchingly beautiful and universally admired."

Just be diligent in your own business, and wait in patience for the reward of your diligence. It may be a little slow in coming. The mills of the gods grind slowly, so does a hand-organ on the "Last Rose of Summer" stop, but it always gets there. And don't pay more for the reward than the reward is worth. A man who lives on twenty-nine cents a day will be apt to die wealthy, but he won't die very fat. It is the liberal soul that shall be made fat.

A Plague of Rats.

A recent number of the Pekin Gazette contains a memorial to the Emperor from the Governor of Uliassutai stating that owing to the appeaance of swarms of rats it has been found necessary to alter the routes of the Government courier service in three of the postal stations in the Khalkha region in Outer Mongolia. For two years past the pasturage of the districts in question has suffered severely from the ravages of these vermin, and last year nearly every blade of grass was eaten up. The whole country has been honey-combed with their burrows, the horses and camels are in a famishing state and there is no means of keeping them alive. The burrows are a source of great danger to the mounted courier, and the want of forage renders it is impossible to maintain a supply of animals for the service.

The latest thing reported in "trusts" is a "diamond trust." This will make newspaper editors howl more than ever. It is as much as they can do to keep their families supplied with diamonds at present prices.—Norristown Herald.

A MODEL LOVE STORY.

When the average writer of short stories or sketches determines to involve what is classed by the general public as a "love story," he begins by selecting fanciful names for his hero and heroine. Then he describes them at length as to their personal appearance, and rather briefly as to their qualities and character. The heroine he invariably endows with all the physical charms that nature in her kindest moods bestows; or, if he goes so far out of the beaten rut as to admit of the outset of the narative that she is not exactly beautiful, he at once hastens to provide her with certain specific charms, of such transcendent beauty that all possibly admitted defects are driven so far into the background as to become entirely forgotten. There seems to be an unwritten code among story writers to the effect that it is utterly impossible for a man truly to love a woman unless she has physical beauty that Venus would have envied. The possibility that true womanliness alone, in the broadest sense of that term, may inspire love, never occurs to them, or if it does, they crush it back as unworthy of consideration.

The personal appearance of the hero is not considered of so great importance, though it is usually deemed advisable to shower upon him a fair supply of what is commonly termed "manly beauty," a conveniently flexible expression, admitting a variety of interpretations. His character is but vaguely alluded to.

Having thus "created" the principal characters, the writer inspires them with a mutual passion for each other, which he calls love, but which is generally developed into a strange mixtures of folly, fathomless distress and excruinting agony.

Obstacles are shoved between the lovers ad libitum, and regardless of consequences, for the truth of the adage that "the course of true love never did run smooth" must be maintained at all hazards, even at the risk of driving the lovers to madness or death (in the story), and of shrouding the reader in Stygian gloom. The hated rival, the treacherous female friend of the heroine, the proud and obstinate parent, the miscarried letter—these and a hundred and one other well-worn means are employed to destroy the lovers' bliss. They are, perchance, separated for years, and when the individual who has created them by a few strokes of his pen, has tired of keeping them away from each other, allowing them to pine away slowly, and stirring up the sympathies and harrowing the feelings of the reader, he brings them together again after having deprived them of years of happiness. If he knows his business well, he will introduce into every other paragraph or so a reminder to the effect that he is not evolving fiction, but merely relating facts as they actually occurred.

Now, I think this is all wrong, I may be in the minority with my opinion, but so was Gallileo when he first began to lecture on the subject: "The earth do move." Gallileo at length convinced the majority that he was right, and I shall not take a back seat for him. Then, too, I have this advantage over him, that I am in a position to get my views published in a newspaper, while he was not so fortunately situated.

In order to demonstrate more clearly what brand of a love story I would recommend, I will write one briefly after my own mind, and allow a discriminating public to judge its merits or demerits. Autograph testimonials from those who like this kind of a story will be gratefully received by me, and not published without the senders' free consent. Every well adjusted story should have a title, and I will call mine "A Tale of True Love that Ran Smooth."

This is the story:

Ella Stone, operator on the typewriter in Knott & Scott's law office, was at her post every day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, from 9 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon and during the six months that she had served the firm, John Scott, the junior partner, on whom all the office work devolved, had ample time to make a study of her.

It was a habit young Scott had to make a study of persons with whom he had brought into contact provided he considered them worth his while. Ella was one of those whom he considered worth studying.

There was nothing striking in her personal appearance; she was good looking only as a thousand of other young girls are, until relentless time dims the luster of their eyes, causes the roses on their cheeks to fade, and pencils the lines of care upon their features. Health and youth are in themselves physical charms, unless a person is positively ugly; and in the possession of these Ella was charming. But description of her would apply as well to a hundred others in a crowd, therefore it would be superflous to describe her.

Young Scott also had no traits that would distinguish him in any marked manner from the average young man. As the protege of Elias Knott, a veteran lawyer with a large practice, considerable money and consequently no little influence, he was assured of a comfortable income, and could afford to look upon the bright side. It is easy to ignore the dark side of life when one has no cares.

Having thus introduced the two principal characters—it would be out of place to call them the hero and the heroine, for there was absolutely nothing heroic about either—it is in order to announce that each considered the other a very amiable sort of person. John frequently gazed with pleasure upon Ella's young face as she deftly touched the keys of the typewriter, while he dictated to her the verbose contents of long legal documents; and she found that tone of voice quite agreeable, and considered him altogether a pleasant young man.

This state of mutual feeling continued for some time; and as there is no such thing as a standstill in nature, and everything must either advance or go backward, thier relations gradually developed into love.

Of course it was not the kind of love that strikes people like a flash of lightning, upon their first meeting, and which exists mostly in the professional imagination of writers; it was a natural culmination of a series of successive conditions. Acquaintance grew into friendship, friendship into a quiet kind of affection which rapidly ripened into love.

It never entered the minds of these young people that destiny had intended them for each other; neither thought that death would follow should the other experience a change of mind and drift to another allegiance. Such thoughts never bothered them; they were happy in each others' society, and, while a disruption of their relations might have been a disappointment, and might have been regretted as such, neither would probably have gone into a slow decline and pined away, refusing to be comforted.

In this they were not different from most people, for love is never an instantaneous creation like a bruise that follows a sharp blow; it is like a blossom that cannot have its being until the seed is sprouted, the plant grown and the young bud has been formed. Place two young people of opposite sexes in a position that brings them constantly into each other's company, and unless their natures are mutually repellant at the outset, they will at length conceive an affection for each other. It is a natural result of natural causes.

There was nothing to obstruct the course of the love of John and Ella; both were fortunate in having their respective parents still living, but the latter interposed no objections to what promised to be a happy union. Nor was there anywhere a rival to John, nor any coquette to charm him away from the object of his affections.

At length the time came when John decided to ask Ella to be his wife. He did it without the fear and trembling and the agony of suspense that have come to be considered the mental conditions of a young man about to propose matrimony to a young woman. Nor did he come prepared with a set speech, nor cast himself upon one knee while declaring himself, nor say that he could not do without her. In fact he knew beforehand pretty positively what her answer would be, so he merely drew her a little closer—he was sitting beside her—and said gently:

"Ella, you know that I love you, will you marry me?"

Ella did not remark, to her credit be it said, that this was all so sudden, that she must have time to think. It was not sudden, for she had expected it; why should't she. So she merely placed her hand in his and simply answered:

"Yes."

For some reason that I could never clearly understand, writers always consider this the proper place to "draw the curtain." I refuse to do so. I will even venture the assertion that John kissed Ella several times or oftener, and she did not blush every time as though it were something to be ashamed of. Then they discussed plans for their future, and it became quite late when John started to go home. I forgot to remark that all this occurred at the home of Ella's parents, and not in the law office where Ella's resignation was now soon to be accepted; as the reader might have supposed.

John did not linger for four hours on the front stoop before leaving; he went at once after he had started, first having bidden his allianced an appropriate good-by, or rather good-night. He did not walk on air as so many lovers do on similar occasions—in the writer's mind—his steps were decidedly upon the earth, and the decidedness thereof was about the only outward manifestation of any exultation he felt. He was glad; contented with all the world and with himself, and consequently happy.

Ella likewise felt happiness within her, but she did not go to the seclusion of her chamber and sob out her joy. She retired and slept soundly.

With others this would have been the proper place to insert loads of agony and grief and distress; but I am not like others in this respect. After remarking that in due season John and Ella were married, and that they lived in domestic happiness thereafter, my story is finished, and I may add that any other young couple would have received the same treatment at my hands as did John and Ella.

But, says the reader, there is no plot, no romance in such a tale as this. True, there isn't; but that is not my fault; that is the fault of life. There is no depth, no vigor about the love you attempt to portray. adds the disappointed reader; it is cold, insipid, flat. Do you think so, kind peruser? Perhaps you imagine that love is a sort of a cyclone that comes without warning, rips everything to pieces and tears around generally until it gets tired and goes away somewhere. That is wherein you are mistaken. It isn't like that at all; love isn't. There may be a sort of feeling that operates in that wild fashion, but it isn't love, it is—well, I'll be hanged if I know what it is—passion, perhaps.

Real love is the sunshine that comes with the dawn of life's days; that grows warmer and more gladdening as it tends to the zenith, whose night not the darkest cloud of sorrow can entirely shut out, and which abides until existence itself is swallowed up in the night of eternity. There, how is that? I thought that sentence out myself.

All the foregoing is not exactly in my line, but I did the best I knew how. At any rate, if you don't like this kind of a love story, you are not obliged to like it, you know.—Albany Express.

A Farmer Dumfounded.

From the Rockland, Me., Courier.

A Rockland man who owned a cow made a bargin with a butcher to kill and sell it on commission. It so happened that the first offer the butcher received for the meat was from the owner of the cow, who did not recognize the carcass. Three-quarters of the meat was sold to him for five cents a pound, and he afterward sold it again at a small profit. The next day he bought the remaining quarter, beating the accommodating butcher down on his price, and sold that quarter for a small profit. When he settled with the butcher for his own cow he was indignant that the meat man sold it so cheap, and was dumfounded when he heard that he himself was the purchaser.

"Brown has threatened to kick me if he ever meets me out in society. Suppose you were me, and should see him come into the room, what would you do?"

"Sit down."—Judge.

A Tale of Love in Low Life.

Love rules the camp, the court, and various other places, says the poet. I cannot tell the name of the poet, and possibly I have not quoted correctly. I am shaky in quotation. When writing original matter, I never read Shakespeare, Milton, or Moore, for the reason I might imbibe something of them, and thereby lessen the force and beauty of my own matter.

Bridget Maloney was a maiden over whose head eighteen summers had passed—a great many years ago. She was, though you wouldn't dream of it from her name, a native of the Emerald Isle. The house of Maloney becoming too small for her, she left it, and in due time was domiciled in New York.

The Maloneys, proud as they are, have always recognized the eternal necessities. Bridget was a true Maloney. Food was a necessity. She would rather have dwelt in marble halls, but she was a woman. Women have no votes, consequently, they are not useful to politicians. Being a woman, she could not get on the police force. To accomplish her necessity, she went into a kitchen. Inscrutable are the decrees of fate. Who shall say there is not an overruling power?

But she was beautiful. To see her on a sunday with the house-maid, arrayed in her mistress's best clothes, was to see a vision of beauty equalled by few and excelled by none. It would have been better, perhaps, had she put on white stockings with her silk dress; but the unities are not always observed. Silk dresses and blue woolen stockings go often together. I have seen such incongruities even in the theatre.

She had money in the savings bank. She was, therefore, beloved.

Dennis Mahoney, policeman on that beat, loved her at first sight. He made inquiries concerning her book at the savings bank, and that love became distraction. He laid seige to her heart. He frequented her kitchen. He ate cold corn beef with her off the kitchen table, and manifested his tenderness in many ways. He took her to balls where she was observed of all observers. He proposed to her—she accepted him.

But the course of true love never did run smooth. This remark is not mine—I saw it once in a book. But as it is as good as any I can make, I unhesitatingly use it. At a ball she met Patsey McGonigle, and Patsey was entranced. Patsey was a porter in a wholsale pickle warehouse, and was a handsome man. He fell madly in love with her, and—oh! the fickleness of woman!—she fell madly in love with him. He moved upon her at once. He proposed. She accepted.

Here is a situation. A girl engaged to two men. It is harrowing, it is true.

The next night Dennis called, as was his custom. Bridget was not cruel. She desired to put him out of his suspense as quickly as possible. On the same principle we shoot men through the head. The head is a vital part.

She told him that she had ceased to love him and would not marry him.

"Dost love another?" demanded Dennis.

"I do—devotedly—wildly—madly. Away, man; I would see thee no more!"

And Dennis left her, grinding his teeth. As he reached the street the rain was beating furiously, and the lightening was illuminating the air. It was a fit night for the swearing of a terrible oath, for the formation of a fearful purpose.

Dennis Mahoney stood in the storm but he heeded it not. Taking off his coat and vest that he might tear open his shirt and swear in due form, with one hand in the air, with the other clenched in his hair, with the pitiless rain beating on his bare breast and the vivid lightning illuminating the scene, he swore to be r-r-revenj'd!

He kept his oath.

The next night Dennis Mahoney was in the familiar kitchen with Bridget. As nothing had been moved, everything was there. There was the range, the tin-ware, the table, and the sink. On that table he had eaten—the sight brought powerful remembrance to his mind, and he burst into tears. On that table, alas! he should eat nevermore! nevermore!

"Bridget," said Dennis, "you love me not—let me at least be your friend. Be my friend."

"It is well," returned the damsel, "While I cannot love you so long as the visage of the McGonigle is imprinted on this heart, I can at least respect you; and I will."

"Bridget, your good is ever in my mind; I dream of you by night and and think of you by day, or, as I like to be accurate, dream by day and think by night, as I have a night beat. Your good is my study. Bridget your kindling wood is green, and to start a fire in the range is difficult. Here is a liquid which I bought for you—for you—that makes it easy. See 'you pour a little on the wood—you touch a match to it—it burns. Is it not gorgeous?"

As Bridget stooped to examine it, the careful observer, had he been there, would have seen the expression of a demon on his once open countenance.

"I' faith," said Bridget. "But it is mesilf that never saw the bate uv that."

"Here is a gallon of it—take it—take it—it is affection's last offering."

And he rushed out up the area stairs he looked downward, and with his hand clenched in triumph, there came hizzing through his teeth the deadly words,

"R-r-reven-ja—ha! ha!"

All night Dennis Mahoney paced his lonely beat. As he passed the house he would pause for a moment to hear the rich voice of McGonigle mingle with the silvery te-he of Bridget.

"Laugh on," he said to himself, "laugh on! Ye will weep anon. R-r-reven-j!"

* * * * * * *

It was morning in New York. Dennis Mahoney was about to be relieved, when he heard an angry altercation. He approached cautiously, so as to get near enough to see the fun, and not too near to risk his person. There were blows; and, finally, a pistol shot rang out upon the air, and the party, separating dispersed. Dennis ran to the spot. There was a man bleeding to death—or, to speak more properly—weltering in his gore. He had weltered too much, for he was dead, or rather the vital spark had fled. Dennis looked at the face. Gracious heavens! it was Patsey McGonigle!

He glared wildy for a moment, and then pulled out his watch. It was a 16 dollar hunter-cased, Swiss watch. He had taken it from a drunken man—but this has nothing to do with the story.

"I have yet time!" he shrieked. "She gets up at six and kindles the fire at seven. It is now a quarter to seven. If this watch is as fast as it always is, I can save her—and marry her."

Away he sped. The gazelle never sped faster. As a speeder he did well. He tore down the street like a madman. Men would have turned and looked at that policeman, had there been any on the street. The house was in sight. One convulsive bound and he was in front of it—another, he was at the top of the area stairs—another, and he had burst the door and was in the kitchen.

"Bridget!" he shrieked.

There was no answer. In the center of the room lay a smouldering mass of kitchen girl and clothes, by the side was a bursted can of kerosene.

"Too late—too late!" he moaned, and looked at his watch. For once it was right. He was too late. Bridget was a cinder.

"Speak to me, Bridget," he moaned, rocking over the charred mass.

But she did not speak to him. Charred masses never do, and it was really absurd of him to ask it.

"Curses on the watch," he said. "I will never gobble a sixteen dollar watch again."

And Dennis Mahoney left that room a crushed man. He went on his beat as usual, but not as before. He didn't pick the pocket of a drunken man that day. He was like one in a dream. He walked about with a vacant look in his face, muttering to himself, "Bridget—three hundred dollars in the savings bank."

And that night there was a row. "This will end it," he said. He did not collar a small boy who was looking on, and rush with him to the station-house, but grasping his club he sailed in. A stone hurled with terrific force and great precision, struck him in the forehead, and he fell, his club rolling dismally on the pavement. He was taken up. A sweet smile was on his face—his lips were parted, as though he was saying, "Bridget—three hundred dollars in the savings bank."

Having killed off all my characters, I stop. He is a great man who can write of people who are deceased. Patsey was dead, Bridget was dead, and Dennis was dead. But the river runs on, the winds blow, the sun shines, the birds sing, and nature humps herself as usual. What is man, or, rather, what is two men, one woman, and a gallon of kerosene. Life is full of mysteries, and death is a queer go.—D. R. Locke.

A Cold Day in Nebraska.

That was a delightful trip I had. While I was communing with myself, a young man took the seat beside me, and as the train rolled on he unwound about twelve and a half yards of bright green and red and yellow and blue knit comforter from around his neck. Then he took off his fur cap and pulled off the knit cap which was hauled down close over his ears. Then he took off his big woolen mittens, and a pair of gloves, and then he drew off one pair of arctics. It is not au fait, even in the land of the blizzard, to wear more than one pair of arctics on the train. He then chucked off his ulster and unbuttoned his buffalo overcoat. The rest of hss wraps he did not remove, as he was going to get off in about forty-five miles. His countenance, when his face began to thaw out, wore an expression of profound dejection.

"Stranger," he said, "do I look all broke up?"

I told him that he bore the appearance of a man whose entire system was one permeation of laminated fractures, from withers to hock. I always talk that way out West. You see I want those guileless children of the "rowdy West," to understand that I am now residing in a land of superior culture, where we look proud and talk through our noses.

He looked at me for a moment and then reached for his hip pocket. As I dropped under the seat and crept behind my valise he drew out his tobacco box and I came to the front again, remarking that I was looking for my collar button.

"Oh, you kin talk English, too?" he said in a tone of admiration; "I wish I knowed more'n one language. But lemme tell you. I don't look half as broke up as I feel, 'r else you'd be a-skeered to set by me. You know how all-killin' cold it was Saturday night?"

I felt my frosted ear tenderly and nodded.

"Well, I got on a freight train and rode up to Hubbleson's siding, forty-three mild, that night to see my girl. I allowed to visit with her folks all that night and Sunday, an' come home on the passenger Monday mornin'. She lives six mild from the station, an' I tramped out to the house, in all that blizzard, and got there 'long 'bout 'leven o'clock Saturday night. An' I'll be teetotally cow kicked by a bulrush if there was a livin' soul to home! Old folks, 't seems, had gone away to Lincoln to stay over Sunday, my girl had went down to Grier's Island to stay a week; the hired man had taken the only hors' left on the place and gone down to a dance on Beasely's branch, eleven mild away, an' there I was, left over Sunday where I didn't know a soul. Went to Deacon Mumler's and told him who my father was, an' he kept me. Deacon's stone blind and has the asthma so bad he can't talk; his wife's so deaf she can't hear it thunder; they have no children an' don't keep no help, an' don't cook anything Sundays. I went to church three times that day and went to two funerals; the Deacon goes to bed at 8 o'clock, and so I shivered on a straw bed under a cotton quilt in a north room for thirteen hours. Now, think of all that when a feller 'd ben expectin' a turkey dinner, singin' 'Hold the Fort' by a melodeon all afternoon, and huggin' the purtiest girl in all Nebrasky from sundown till 1 o'clock in the mornin', and tell me ef I ain't got more right to feel broke up than any man this side o' the kingdom? Say 'no,' an' I'll slam you on the top o' the head with this overshoe."

I didn't say "no"—Bob Burdette.

The Detroit Record thinks that Becker County will favor Hon. S. G. Comstock for congress, for first choice, and Judge Stearns for second.

There has been a meeting of the republican club, at St. Paul, and now the Globe has donned its war paint and says that the sole object of the formation of these republican clubs is the election of A. R. McGill. Well, if this is the fact we must confess that Mr. McGill is a shrewder man than we gave him credit for. The origin of these clubs was in "the pivotal State," New York, and extends throughout the whole United States, and if McGill went down there and originated them he is indeed a deep one, but is he not doing a deal of useless work in other States? We are forced to the conclusion that the Globe is off its base, as usual, as we personally know that there is a number of republican clubs in Polk County who know neither McGill nor the machine. The club is an instrument in the hands of the people for smashing the machine.

The machine seems to favor the nomination of McGill for Governor. The executive committee of the Farmers' Alliance endorsed Scheffer, and if this proves to be an expression of the wish of the farmers, why not try Scheffer? Some seem to have the idea that W. R. Merriam is the only man who can ensure a republican victory, but we fail to see wherein banker Merriam is any better than banker Scheffer; in fact, if the farmers prefer Scheffer that is one good and sufficient reason why he should be nominated. They have never had their innings yet and it is about time they had. If they do not endorse him, what is the matter with trying some man outside of one of the great cities once in a lifetime? Is there not as good material to be found in the country as in either of the two cities, that we should be obliged to depend upon them forever for gubernatorial timber? For years they have furnished the governor, and is it not about time for a new deal? It seems so to us.

Rock County Herald: Because the governor made one good appointment it does not follow that the mortgage placed upon his official authority before election has been satisfied. The people are just beginning to find out the conditions of the bargain which our modern Faust, to secure honors legitimately beyond his reach, made with his political Mephistopheles, and the question now arises, are the Republicans of Minnesota disposed to approve the compact?

Mankato Register: Honesty constrains us to acknowledge that McGill's nomination would mean ignominious defeat; and why the handful of men who are supporting him still continue to deceive the people with confidential assertions in the face of such antagonism as exists toward the renomination is one of the mysterious things of the present day. In Blue Earth County McGill has no following that wields any influence whatever.

Sauk Centre Herald: The Herald thinks it knows that Hon. Knute Nelson does not desire the nomination for governor this fall. It is very certain that a large Republican contingent in the state favor such nomination as being the best possible solution to the political problem, which is rapidly becoming more complicated.

Knute Nelson: It seems to me that only so high a duty should be laid as will fairly cover the difference in the cost of production here and abroad, be it in labor, raw material, or interest on capital. Such a tariff I call a low as distinguished from a revenue tariff. Where a tariff tax exceeds in a material degree this measure, I term it a high tariff. It then becomes more or less prohibitory, breeds monopolies and works injury both to the consumer and the laboring man.

Lake Superior News: Duluth has now in store eight and a half million bushels of wheat, a quarter of a million of corn and smaller stocks of other cereals and about 40,000 barrels of flour. But supplies of all kinds are pouring in. Wheat receipts for the last two days were approximately 150,000 bushels, and flour is coming almost as fast. By the opening of navigation stocks will be great enough to fully test the arriving vessel capacity.

Mankato Register: There is an under current of opinion that Hon. Knute Nelson will be a prominent senatorial candidate next winter, as much from popular demand as from personal choice, and the major part of the comment heard is to the effect that he would run like wildfire in such a race.

Lake Superior News: Andrew Carnegie believes that within three years wages in the Pennsylvania iron regions will average a dollar a day or less. If Mr. Carnegie is right the experiment of high protection to the iron industries does not appear to have resulted in high wages. And if it is not effective to that end, there seems to be no good reason why it should be maintained. If a high tariff neither helps the laborer to higher wages nor the consumer to lower prices, it were best reduced. A reduction of one-third in the steel tariff and a similar reduction in the lower grades of iron products would not wipe out our industries, would not be that awful thing, free trade, and would be a fair blow at the steel combination who now maintain prices as high as the law allows.

Knute Nelson: The selfish greed of the New England manufacturer has reached out for cheap Canadian labor, while the polar star of the great West—our boundless and free-for-all public lands, have drawn thither the growing cream of New England, the concentrated essence of the Pilgrim Fathers, and I am glad of it, for there is no human being I so love and admire as the New England Yankee transplanted to our boundless and exuberant West they are all like myself, believers in a just low tariff as I have defined it.

Beltrami Telautographs.

Dave Fulton and wife are visiting relatives and friends in Ada.

Braun Hovvig, of Fertile, passed through here Saturday on his way to attend the assessors' meeting at Crookston.

Divine services were held at the school house in district 104, last Sunday. Rev. Olson, of Crookston, officiated.

The democrats seem to find difficulty in finding men of their party qualified to hold positions in this county. Cleveland sent a man from another county to run our land office and our own postmaster has been a resident of Washington Territory for the past six months and no successor appointed yet.

Jas. Thompson's arm is nearly well again.

Henry Ryan, a noted capitalist of Dublin, Ireland, who has been sojourning here for sometime past, left Friday morning on a side door palace car for parts unknown.

Mrs. A. W. Mott's friends here will be sorry to hear that she is quite ill at her home in Fertile.

An opportunity was given one of our county teachers the other day to learn that most of the ladies in Beltrami were opposed to corporeal punishment. Ladies, we admire your affection for Jane, but we do not think you have had much experience in training that kind of a girl.

HOW OUR GIRLS KISS.

The New York girl bows her stately head,
And she fixes her stylish lips
In a firm hard way and lets them go
In spasmodic little snifs.

The Boston girl removeth her specs
And freezeth her face with a smile,
Then she sticks out her lips like an open book
And cheweth a bean meanwhile.

The St. Louis girl says never a word,
And you'd think she was rather tame
With her practical views of the matter in hand,
But she gets there all the same.

The Baltimore girl, the pride of the South,
In her clinging and soulful way
Absorbs it all with a yearnful yearn
As big as a bale of hay.

The Chicago girl gets a grip on herself,
As she carefully takes off her hat,
Then she grabs up the prize in a frenzied way,
Like a terrier shaking a rat.

The Washington girl, so gentle and sweet,
Lets her lips meet the coming kiss
With a rapturous warmth and the youthful souls
Float away on a sea of bliss.

But the Pawtucket girl with an eye to biz,
And generous as she's always been,
Nearly draws the molars from your mouth,
And sighs "let's do it again!"

The Norwegian girl, with her laughing eyes,
And heart so affectionate and true,
Puts her lips to yours like a turtle dove,
And heaven seems very near to you.

Mentor Locals.

MENTOR, April 30, 1888.

We are still on the turf, "waiting, yes waiting for thee," Jim Hill, to get to work at our prospective railroad, and put on the steam "keers," so we can come to Crookston in proper style as becometh citizens. How much longer are we doomed to wait? is the question all would like answered.

Seeding is well along now; some parties nearly done sowing wheat. A great many of our farmers here use the drill in place of seeders this spring, as grain sown with drill last season was the best by far. McKinnon Bro's live agent, Ole Berg, of Lessor, rustled for the Superior drill, and Stone & Taylor's live man, Mr. Columbus, represented the Van Brunt & Davis. By the way, we are informed that Mr. Berg intends handling a fine line of No. 1 machinery here this summer, and if live work will win he will do well.

A lively deal in real estate occurred here last week. Five farms changed hands, at reasonable figures and taken by actual settlers. Mr. John Van Tuyl bought out the townsite property of D. Overholt and intends surveying and platting soon. Mr. Van Tuyl is a man who will build up a thriving town, if such a thing can be done, and all we lack is the ironing of the railroad.

Harry is still to the front as our merchant. It's wonderful what a display he can make and how many goods he can pack in his little room. His custom is growing and all are pleased, as he has knocked the tar out of high prices.

Johnny Baker has returned from Minneapolis, where he has been to school the past winter, and is waiting on the ladies at Moe & Baker's. We are informed that he has been TAKEN IN as as partner. Is that so, Johnny?

Mr. E. E. Abbott has purchased the Burns place, and now lives on the highway to Duluth, Crookston and all the rest of the centers of trade.

W. W. Attix, acting agent for the Estey organ at this point, has sold several instruments this spring. That's what we like to see, for we would like to have our souls charmed with a dash of music occasionally.

Our school commences to-day with Miss Helen Stoddard at the helm, and one better suited to the general wish of the district could not be found. This makes her fourth term here, which speaks well for her.

We understand that Harry intends building at the track as soon as sure of the railroad. He has been crowded so long it will seem good to him to get into a more roomy building.

Dr. Cable is rushed with business now, devoting his time between here and Fertile. He has a good practice and is well liked.

Tilden boasts of a station agent and operator now, Mr. Browning, of Fargo. This is important to the men who do business with the R. R. Co., as the risk was great and lots of trouble doing business without one.

John Bauman, stage driver, is bound to raise the price of eggs. Last week he had on 120 dozen when his team took it alone across lots, knocking the fur and profits entirely off those eggs.

Ole Hanson is a resident for the time being, having been placed in charge of the goods of the late J. Furran.

Ed. Rutsell has sold out his interest in the French store, at Tilden, gathered up his grip and bid his friends adieu; ditto the girl he left behind him.

Jimmy McAnaulty is doing a good business at Tilden and is constantly increasing his trade, which he deserves.

As soon as the railroad is in running order we think farmers here will ship cream to the Crookston creamery. It will be a good scheme.

Harry has the cutest little pair of mules you ever saw. They make a regular circus rig. Never mind, they make a good combine on taking orders and delivering goods, and when Date's summer boarders come, we can use them with his phaeton for pleasure rides, and it will relax their muscles and give them an appetite while working their passage.

You will hear from us again by first train up from Duluth.

STARR.

Angus Items.

Nice weather, though a little cool, for the past few days.

It is getting dry enough so that a little rain would do the crops good.

J. F. Montgomery and bride arrived at Angus on Wednesday last, and are now occupying rooms over the store.

Fritz Melloh and bride came up from Minneapolis on Friday. Fritz did not hesitate a moment, but opened a box of good cigars for the boys the first thing. A long and happy life for you, Fritz!

There was a meeting of the members of the Presbyterian church here on Thursday evening to make arrangements for the building of a church. It is decided that we are to have a church edifice this summer.

Duncan McLennan died Monday, April 30th, at 2 o'clock p. m., after an illness of about a week. He leaves a wife and three children. The bereaved ones have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

Our depot agent, Mr. Moorhead, and family, who have been with us about a year, have decided to go to Washington Territory. They will start the first of May. The best wishes of his Angus friends go with him.

A democratic caucus for the first ward, will be held in the city hall on Saturday evening, for the purpose of electing three delegates to attend the democratic county convention to be held in this city May 8th and to transact such other business as shall properly come before it.

Does it Pay to Raise Stock?

Mr. E. Lanctot answers that question in the affirmative. This week he brought to the butcher a pair of three-year-old steers that dressed 1,704 lbs. and brought him $115 in nice, clean cash. He claims that this pays him a good fair price for raising the calves, a fair price for summer pasturage, and a better price than $5 per ton for hay (what it was worth in this market during the winter) more than the market price for the barley and oats they consumed and the stuff being consumed on the place saves the cost of marketing. If such results can be obtained now, while the price of cattle, in sympathy with everything else is so low it shows that there is money in stock when prices are at the usual average. Mr. Lanctot says the only mistake he can see that he has made is that he did not have steers enough to turn off.

The following is a list of the republican ward committees appointed at the republican ward caucusses held on Wednesday evening Sept. 22d 1886.

Half Fare Excursion.

We take special pleasure in calling attention to the excursions to points in Minnesota & Dakota via the St. Paul Minneapolis and Manitoba R'y, from St. Paul or Minneapolis and points South and East which have been announced, leaving St. Paul May 9 and 23 and June 6 and 20, and points South one day earlier, when tickets are to be sold at the low rate of one fare for the round trip. These tickets will be limited to thirty days from date of issue, good ten days going and five for return with stop over within limits. This will enable friends or intending settlers to visit this country during the early spring and summer, at a very small cost. Further particulars can be obtained by addressing

Two Bulls For Sale!

The Thoroughbred Shorthorn Bull, "Red River Valley," bred by Sam'l McCreary, Neshannock Falls, Lawrence Co., Pa., by whom he was sold to the late Geo. C. Reis, of Edna, in 1879, and by him brought to the Red River Valley. He was born May 30th, 1878, and his pedigree shows him to be in one of the very best Shorthorn families in existence. As my herd is all akin to him and I have now no further use for him, I will sell him at a bargain or trade for horses or other stock; also a thoroughbred son of his, one year old. These animals are both A 1 as their pedigree, which may be seen at my residence, clearly shows. D. McMILLAN,

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication May 3d, 1888.]

WHEREAS, TERRENCE B. McMANUS and Helen McManus, his wife, of Polk County, Minnesota, as mortgagors, did on the 20th day of January A. D. 1885, duly execute and deliver to The New England Mortgage Security Company, of the County of Windham, and State of Connecticut, as mortgagee, their mortgage, bearing date the said 20th day of January A. D. 1885, whereby they mortgaged to said mortgagee the following described lands, situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: The south half of Section nineteen (19,) and the northwest quarter of Section nineteen (19,) all in Township one hundred and fifty-one (151,) Range forty-seven (47) west, containing four hundred and fifty-seven (457) acres, more or less, to secure the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500) with interest thereon, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note, with interest coupons attached, bearing even date with said mortgage, and made by said mortgagors to said mortgagee, or order, which said mortgage was on the 7th day of February A. D. 1885, at 10:40 o'clock a. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for the said County of Polk, in book "U" of mortgages on pages 241, 242 and 243; and

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the sum of two hundred seventy-four and 75-100 dollars, as interest upon the said mortgage on the 2d day of May A. D. 1888, and the said sum still remains due and unpaid; and

Whereas, it was stipulated by and between the parties to said mortgage, that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained, on the part of the mortgagors to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagee or its assigns to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable, without notice to said mortgagors or any other party; and

Whereas, The New England Mortgage Security Company has exercised its option to consider and declare and does hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable; and

Whereas, there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage, at the date of this notice the sum of twenty-seven hundred seventy-four and 75-100 dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the land therein described, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of the County of Polk, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 15th day of June A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock a. m., at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage, together with taxes, if any, and seventy-five dollars attorney's fees, therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk.—ss.
In Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of Eleanor A. Witherow deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Elizabeth Cooper formerly Elizabeth Norie of Clay County, Minnesota, representing among other things that Eleanor A. Witherow late of Polk County, Minnesota, on the 15th day of February A. D. 1888, at Crookston in said County of Polk died intestate, and being a resident of this county at the time of her death leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a creditor of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to B. Clements, granted.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MAY 3.

Hoard's Dairyman: The feeding of dairy cows in Wigtonshire, Scotland, includes 1½ acre of pasture during summer, 4 tons of turnips during winter, and 2 bushels of beans given as bean-meal at spring time of the year, besides hay and straw in winter. In Fifeshire, the annual feeding of the dairy cow is put at 2½ acres of grass, 9 or 10 tons of turnips, and 30 cwts. of oat straw as fodder, together with 1 ton of wheat straw as litter. Cows give milk of best quality when four or six years old. Cows of that age cost about £14 per head for Ayrshire's, or $66; Short-Horns about one-third more. Nine or ten cows is about as many as one milker is called on to milk. One attendant will clean and feed 25 to 30 cows

What my Experience has Taught me About Dairying.

A correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman sends that paper the following "summing up" of his conclusions concerning dairy practice:

First. A farmer must be adapted to his business. He must like cows and the business or else he will prove a failure.

Second. He must be willing to be tied down to his business 365 days in the year, just the same as a merchant or any other business man. It is not hard work but it is confining.

Third. He must have a dairy cow or else he is fooling away his time. I have learned at dear expense that a dairyman cannot afford to do business with a general purpose cow. He cannot afford to feed 500 pounds of carcass that is not needed for milk for ten years at a cost of $200, to sell it in the end for $15.

Fourth. No dairyman can afford to depend upon hay for his coarse fodder but must raise corn fodder. My plan is to plow the ground in the fall; haul all the manure in the winter and spread in the spring as soon as the ground is fit; work the ground well and thoroughly mix manure and dirt; use good seed that you know is good; plant early and commence to harrow as soon as through planting, with a slanting toothed harrow. Do not husk the corn but run through the feed cutter ears and all.

Fifth. Get a full blood sire of the line you are on, either butter or milk. Look well to the mother, grandmother and great-grandmother of the sire.

Sixth. Keep the stables warm in winter; use warm water in winter, and fence the cows away from all impure stagnant water in summer; the purity of your milk depends on the purity of the water more than any one thing. Feed a grain ration more or less every day in the year.

Seventh. Keep the stables scrupulously clean and sweet; use a plentiful sprinkling of land plaster in them every day. Milk in a clean manner; discharge a dirty milker if he will not reform, for the manufacture of butter commences in the stable.

Eighth. We cannot afford to use the dairy implements of our grandmothers; times have changed even if some do not know it. We cannot afford to sell butter for 15 cents a pound, when by the use of more brains and better implements we can get 25 cents.

Ninth. We cannot afford to run our business in an easy, slipshod-down-at-the-heel sort of way. We can't afford to be stupid; we can't afford not to read; we can't afford to shut our eyes and ears to what well posted men are doing, for these are the men who start all improvements. We can't expect to act like the foolish man and expect the wise man's reward. There is money, good money, in trying to keep posted. For the man who won't keep posted there is nothing left but "Death and Taxes."

Mr. Editor, I've learned this for certain and hope to learn more before I die. Yours,
DAIRYMAN.

Skimmilk versus Buttermilk.

Hoard's Dairyman: Professor Fjord, of the Danish Agricultural Society, has been making trials of these two sorts of milk to ascertain their relative feeding value. He finds one pound of the sweet skim equal to two pounds of the butter-milk, and in that proportion for larger quantities. In other words, it's superior nutritive quality is as one to two. He also found that six pounds of sweet skim-milk were equal to one pound of rye or barley, and that twelve pounds of butter-milk were required to obtain the same result of feeding value. This is useful information to all who have these milks to feed to pigs, or skim-milk alone for calves. But as useful as it may be it is very hard to get average farmers to see the truth and make a practical application of it.

At nearly all the creameries in Wis., whose patrons are as intelligent as any others, fully three-fourths had as lief feed sour milk as sweet. The fact is, they never made any practical experiments to know which is the best way, and they will not believe what those say that have experimented.

The following process of common reasoning ought to convince any man that can read, that to allow skim-milk to sour before feeding is to subject himself to a great loss. Take separator skim-milk for instance. If four pounds of butter have been taken per 100 pounds of milk, there will be left 9 pounds of solids. This is on the basis of 18 pounds of solids and 87 pounds of water in every 100 pounds of milk, which is the average for good milk. Of the 9 pounds of solids left in the skim-milk nearly 5 pounds is milk sugar.

When the milk sours, the milk sugar changes to lactic acid, and so far as we know, it has lost all of its growing and fattening properties. So the farmer has lost nearly 5 pounds out of 9 of the solids in his skim-milk by letting it sour. To illustrate: Suppose we take 1,000 pounds of common sugar and dissolve it in a hogshead of water. At any time before souring we can boil down the water and get our sugar back; but let it become sour and no earthly power can turn it to sugar again.

Besides, if fed while sweet the water would have a fattening tendency on the animal that drank it, but when turned to acid it has just the opposite effect. When a man is too fat, the doctors recommend him to eat lemons and partake of acids to reduce his flesh. All these things the farmer knows but strangely enough he forgets it all when he stands in the presence of his sour swill barrel. No woman would think of feeding a human baby on sour milk, but her husband will drive ahead and feed the calves and pigs on sour milk and even look you full in the face and tell you, as we have had them tell us hundreds of times, that "calves will thrive best on sour milk."

More Beans Wanted.

American Agriculturist: There are two or three counties in Western New York where beans are grown to an enormous extent and the farmers have become rich by their sale. There seems to be no special reason why this crop should have been adopted in this section. We have millions of acres of similar soil and climate where beans are seldom grown. If leguminous crops get their nitrogen from the atmosphere, the farms where beans are grown so largely and the vines fed out to sheep ought to be very rich. We do not learn that such is the case. In fact, it is claimed by some that beans prove to be an exhausting crop, and that the old bean growers are not making as much money as formerly,

Beans are at the present time brought from Europe in bags right into the heart of the bean-growing section of Western New York, where they are put in barrels and shipped as "New York State beans." From this it is evident that our bean growers have an established reputation which the dealers are not slow to utilize. It also indicates that beans can be grown in other places. We have known many farmers undertake to raise beans for the first time who made a failure of it. They generally plant when beans are high, and anticipating large profits put in twice as many acres as they are able to take care of. Beans must be kept clean. But too much hoeing and cultivation does not suit them. In other words, we need clean land to start with, or we must plant on sod turned over with a "jointer" plow immediately before planting. On such land the beans get a good growth before the weeds start, and but little hoeing and cultivating are necessary,

Our Farmer Boys.

American Agriculuist.

There is a frequently recurring complaint from the farm, reached through the agricultual press, of the reluctance of boys to remaim in farming pursuits, indeed sometimes even to enter on such a life. What is the cause of this restless spirit? Are country employments odious in themselves? It is appalling to note the young lives wrecked in cities: youths who strain every nerve and use every means to attain a profession, who just reach the threshold and then succumb, worn out in mind and crushed in body. Of the vast multitudes who year after year leave their country homes to seek fortune in cities, how many succed? The percentage is very small, even of those who find a moderate amount of success. Some lack ability, others endurance, and many do not possess sufficient strength.

From these remarks it must not be inferred that dull and weakly boys are by nature best fitted to remain in the country and become farmers. The ablest men mentally are none too enlightened, none too capable, to cope with the many difficult problems of agriculture. To-day the land question holds the attention of Europe, and with our abundance of territory, as yet sparsely populated, we are not many generations distant from scarcity of land and its inevitable difficulties. The hardest part of farm life is its seeming monotony. We advisedly use the word seeming, because farm life is more varied than is professional or mechanical life. The four seasons bring to the farmer varied occupations and varied pleasures. The journalist, the lawyer, the doctor, in their callings know no seasons: three hundred and sixty-five days annually are the working days of those who toil in the paths of the higher professions. Artisans and mechanics enjoy rest on one day of every week. Railroad employees generally obtain two, sometimes three, Sundays' rest out of ten months of the year. During the fierce heat of summer the public will travel, and the railroad men from the tiny newsboy to the general superintendent, must be at their posts.

Our counsel to boys is, before you decide to leave the farm for other work, seek information, and make as sure as you can that you are more fitted for city than for country life. To the farmers we would say, if your boys are well treated they will recognize it; if your boys are overworked, poorly clothed, badly fed, and boorishly treated, make haste to change and mend your ways. A bad employer gets an unwilling service. The best tempered boy can be made sullen; the most ambitious can be discouraged. When a boy is old enough to work for his father, and when his work is satisfactory, he earns his pay as fully as though he was a hired outsider.

How to Plant Trees.

American Agriculturist: On receipt from the nursery, the trees should be carefully heeled-in. If they are to remain several days, the tops should be shaded. If they are very dry, tops and all should go into the trench, and the covering be made quite damp. The holes should be dug at least four feet in diameter, and deep enough to admit of planting the tree a little deeper than it stood in the nursery. The filling of well pulverized soil having a liberal amount of ground bone and ashes well worked into it is placed beside the hole. Carefully examine each tree for borers, cut back one-half of last year's growth, remove all broken limbs with a sharp knife, and coat with shellac all cuts and chafed places. All broken roots should be cut smoothly with an upward slant, and after all the roots have been dipped in thin mud, the tree is placed in the hole. Spread the roots carefully, drive a strong stake beside the tree, and fill in the soil, working it thoroughly under and among the roots with the hand. Give two or three firm treadings during the process of filling, which should reach the height of the nursery setting, and fill the rest of the hole with a mulch of coarse hay or straw. Place a piece of woolen cloth between the tree and stake, to prevent chafing; tie firmly, and the following day give the tree a thorough watering.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

[First publication April 19th, 1888.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty dollars ($60) installment of interest, which became due and payable on the 24th day of December, 1887, upon a certain mortgage made, executed, and delivered by John N. Ives and Annie Ives, his wife, of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 28th day of June A. D. 1884, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 30th day of June 1884, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 202, 203, 204 and 205.

And whereas a further default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the mortgagors failing and neglecting to pay the taxes assessed against and levied upon the premises covered by said mortgage, prior to the date of the sale of lands for the payment of taxes, and the mortgagee, to protect the lien of its said mortgage, has been compelled to pay, and on the 2d day of May, 1887, did pay in satisfaction of the taxes then due and delinquent on said premises, the sum of twelve and 75-100 dollars ($12.75,) and the said defaults having each continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of such default and declaration aforesaid, there is claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and ninety-two dollars and twenty-nine one hundredths ($692.29,) and no action or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼) of Section thirty-two (32,) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less, according to United States Government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest, taxes and fifty dollars attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on the 2d day of June A. D. 1888, subject to redemption at any time within one year, in manner provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE

BY FAILURE TO PAY INTEREST FOR the years 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886 and 1887 and taxes for the years 1885, 1886 and 1887. Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Octavienne Joly, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Alonzo F. Richardson, mortgagee, dated the fifth day of March A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-three and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the fifth day of March A. D. 1883, at 2:15 o'clock p. m., in book "K" of mortgages, on pages 290, 291 and 292, on which there is declared and claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred four and 72-100 dollars, principal and interest and seventy-one and 66-100 dollars taxes and interest; and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

The said mortgage was duly assigned by an instrument thereof, duly executed and delivered by the said Alonzo F. Richardson, to D. N. Richardson and J. J. Richardson, dated the 26th day of February A. D. 1886, and recorded in said office of the Register of Deeds on the fifth day of March 1886, at 3 o'clock p. m., in book "23" of mortgages, on pages 558 and 559.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or by his deputy, on Saturday the 12th day of May A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The north half (n½) of the southeast quarter (se¼) and the northeast quarter (ne¼) of the southwest quarter (sw¼) and lot three (3) all in Section seven (7) in Township one hundred forty-nine (149) north of Range forty-three (43) west.

Dated this 24th day of March 1888.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

[First publication March 29th 1888.]

BE IT KNOWN, THAT ON THE FIFTEENTH day of February one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, Elisha B. Odell and Marion S. Odell, his wife, made, executed and delivered unto The Farmers' and Mechanics' Savings Bank of Minneapolis, their certain mortgage: That said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the fifteenth day of February A. D. 1881, at 3:20 o'clock in the afternoon, in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 125, 126 and 127: That said mortgage conveyed the hereinafter described premises to secure the payment of six hundred ($600) dollars, in three years from its date, and the interest thereon at the rate of ten per centum, per annum, payable semi annually: That default has been made in the payment of said principal sum and interest thereon: That there is hereby claimed to be due on said mortgage debt the sum of seven hundred and two and forty hundredths ($702.40-100) dollars: That no action, or proceeding, has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof: That said mortgaged premises are situate in Polk County, Minnesota, and are described as follows, viz: The southeast quarter of Section twenty-four (24,) Township one hundred and fifty-two (152,) Range forty-eight (48,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less, according to government survey.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by reason of said default in the conditions of said mortgage, and by virtue of the power of sale therein contained, said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of said described mortgaged premises, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county and state, on the fourteenth day of May A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and fifty dollars, attorney's fees as stipulated in by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption as provided by law.

Dated Minneapolis, March 23d A. D. 1888.

Republican State Convention.

A Republican State Convention for the State of Minnesota will be held on Wednesday, May 16th, 1888, in Market Hall, in the city of St. Paul, at 12 o'clock noon, for the purpose of electing four delegates at large, and four alternates, to the National Republican Convention to be held June 18th, 1888; and also for the nomination of seven Republican presidential electors and an equal number of alternate electors; and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

The Congressional District delegates to the National Convention shall be chosen in the same manner as the nomination of a member of Congress is made is said districts.

All citizens who believe in the principles of the republican party; who desire its success, and who propose to suyport the candidates nominated by the National Republican Convention to be held June 18th, 1988, are invited to co-operate in the election of delegases.

Polk County is entitled to eight delegates and an equal number of alternates.

St. Paul, Minn., March 20th, 1888.

MONTANA SHORT LINE.

When traveling every one should consider well the questions of economy, comfort, safety and speed, these questions being of the same importance in a journey of an hour as in one of several days' ride. An examination of the map will convince anyone that this is the most direct route to and from all the principal points in Central and Northern Minnesota, Dakota and Montana. Our epuipment and time are excellent. Our rates are the lowest, but this fact is something which speaks for itself. Definite figures and maps can be obtained by applying to any Agent of the Company, or the General Passenger Agent.

Protection.

"To protect or not to protect, that is the question" and we presume that in the abstract there is not one person in the United States to-day who does not desire protection. The constitution guarantees to each citizen protection in his life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The high tariff advocate will tell you that the higher the tariff the greater the protection afforded to the manufacturer, the farmer, the business man, the laborer and to all alike. The farmer, and especially our Northwestern farmer, fails to see clearly wherein he is an equal sharer with the manufacturer in the benefits conferred by an excessive tariff ("the higher the better" (?) He is obliged to pay a larger percent on the estimated value of his plant to support this government, a plant that in nine cases out of every ten, he really owes more upon than it would bring if it had to be sold, in addition to this already excessive tax, he, being the largest consumer of those articles protected by the high tariff ("the higher the better" (?)—is obliged to pay another tax fully as large, if not larger to protect his neighbor's, the manufacturer's, business. The manufacturer, as a rule, has his plant all paid for, and is not obliged to pay a greater per cent of taxes than the poor farmer who does not own his plant, and in many instances not as much in proportion for he is generally sharp enough to dodge it. It is said that "comparisons are odious" so we will not attempt a comparison right here in our own country but it is so obvious that it is not necessary being an open secret that every intelligent man can read by going to the court house and examining the records. In the light of the facts as they exist the farmer has the idea that he is paying for all, or at least the lion's share of it and is really receiving, if any, the least of the "grand benefits" of the high tariff (the higher the better (?)—and he naturally desires a proportionate share in those benefits. What is really his share in this partnership? Why, he furnishes the money to carry on the business and gets the "experience" while the "other fellow" pockets the profits of the concern. He takes his pay in brilliant theories and glittering generalities, which are not worth a continental to pay off the mortgage on the farm and support his family withal. He asks for bread and is given the chaff. While he craves the substantials of life he is obliged to get along with "taffy." He is an honest man and believes in "protection," he is also a just man and wants to see that "protection" include himself his wife and his dear little ones equally with all other "protected classes. The high tariff man ("the higher the better" (?)—says to him "why, you fool, WHAT MORE do you want! can't you SEE that you are "protected?" If you can' see it WE assure you that you are fully protected for

cannot be at fault, therefore you MUST be protected and all you have got to do is to keep right along as you are for a few years (if you can stand it that long) to find out that our theory is right and that you are "protected" all you deserve to be. The farmer seems to have an idea his right to pay taxes is the most sacredly "protected" of any of his rights. No matter how low the prices of his commodities may sink his taxes are as high as ever, and when he looks at his neighbor, the manufacturer, to see how the general depression affects him he finds him, bland and smiling, making as great a per cent on his investment as ever, and, if anything, paying less taxes than ever "because the general depression has depreciated the worth of his plant you know!" The position is well illustrated in the story of the Indian and white man who went out for a hunt agreeing to equally divide the spoils. When the hunt was concluded it was found that the Indian had shot a turkey and the white man showed a buzzard as the result of his skill. Of course the white man did not want to cheat the poor untutored red man, (but he kinder wanted that turkey all the same,) so in order to be eminently fair about it he said: "Well, Mr. Lo, it seems that we have one desirable bird and one not so much so, now I propose to be very fair about it so I will give you your choice, (the Indian agreed, and he continued) now, you may take the buzzard and I will take the turkey, or, I will take the turkey and you may have the buzzard!" The Indian understood that nothing could be fairer to him than to have his own choice but it did puzzle him to see how naturally the buzzard fell to his side of the deal every time and while he knew, on the terms of the agreement; it was all right he could not see how it came that, though he had shot the turkey himself, in the division it was the white man's property and there was no way to avoid it. We believe in protection to American industries—universal protection.

Warren Sheaf: Certain republican newspapers of the old bourbon school are not slow to brand every tariff reform republican as a renegade from the party, and such nonsense. If their definition of good republicanism is correct, there are but a few republicans in Minnesota. These old mossbacks do not seem to know that the republicans of Minnesota are loud in their demands for tariff reduction, and they have expressed this desire in their party platforms in unmistakable terms. Our prominent men in congress and out of congress demand tariff reform. Still there are newspapers in this state that raise the high protective banner and flaunt it in the face of our people, and yet call themselves republican. They are no Minnesota republicans. In Pennsylvania they would make good Sam Randall democrats or Pig-Iron-Kelley republicans, either.

Knute Nelson answers all such who are endeavoring to create a false tariff issue so well in his late speech that we quote the following:

"With a surplus of over $90,000,000, taken from the people by taxation, of which over $60,000,000 is being kept and used, without any recompense or revenue, by certain national banks, termed Government depositories, and with this surplus steadily and ever increasing so that by the end of the fiscal year, unless legislative relief from taxation is given, there is certain to be a surplus of upwards of $160,000,000, it seems to me to be idle, uncalled for, and unfair to enter into any more theorizing or platitudes on the advantages or disadvantages of free trade or protection. This seems to me to be too much like Nero holding high carnival while Rome was burning. This is not the practical issue now joined by the logic of events. Neither is it relevant, while the country is in this state of overtaxation, to indulge in epithets or to call every honest friend of tariff tax reduction a free-trader or an enemy to American labor. This style of argument is too much like that of Fagan's pupil when having picked some one's pocket, he lustily shouted "Thief!" to draw attention away from himself, the real culprit.

You men who now practically oppose all form of tariff-tax reduction are not the only friends of American labor, nor have you a monopoly, nor are you the sole guardians of honest, fair and reasonable protection to American industrial enterprises, nor can you set up a man of straw nor raise a false issue. The question of protection or free trade is not fairly involved in this controversy. The real questions are few and simple: Shall we get rid of our surplus by extravagant expenditures or by reducing taxation; and if by the latter method, shall we reduce tariff taxes or internal revenue taxes? This is all there is in it."

Mere Obstruction a Failure.

Minneapolis Evening Journal.

The debate in congress is drawing tediously along. Nobody is paying any attention to the reiteration of political arguments, with which the time of the house is mainly occupied. They will not affect the result in the least. Whether the Mills bill passes the house or not does not matter so far as practical results are concerned. It will never pass the senate. All that the country need expect at this session of congress is a show of hands by both parties—an exhibition to the country of what each party would do with this tariff question if it had full control of the government.

The democrats are making their record. They have drawn up a bill which stands as an administration and party measure. It is impossible to say what would be the effect of such a bill. It is not even certain that it would reduce the revenue. It is certain that for political reasons it fails to reduce duties where their entire abolition is demanded by the best interests of the country, and tends to free trade at the expense of the protection principle where free trade would be disastrous.

The republicans oppose this measure and expose its inconsistencies in a manner which would be very embarrassing to its framers if it were not purely a political venture. At the same time the country recognizes the fact that the democracy have taken a stand in favor of a reduction of the tariff, and that is what the country wants. The country has the evidence before it that the democrats would at least try to afford the desired relief from unnecessary taxation if it only knew how and had full control of the government. It might not do the right thing, but it would at least make an effort. So far as the republicans are concerned they are only making a record as opposed to the democratic bill. They are not offering the country anything in its place. Everybody knows that it is one thing to find fault and another to suggest a substitute for the imperfect measure. The republicans are making a serious mistake; and one which they cannot conceal from the country, in not offering a tariff bill of their own. This has been The Journal's position for over a year. What the St. Louis Globe-Democrat thinks about it is found in the following editorial opinion in a late issue of that paper:

"The republican party throughout the country demand that their representatives in congress frame a wise measure to lower the government's income, and use every honorable resource at their command to pass it. A policy of mere obstruction to the Mills bill will not do. Randall may or may not resort to such tactics this year, but if he does he must have no aid from the republicans. In the opposition to the free-traders the republicans must lead, not follow. A majority of congress are friends of the protective policy. The republican members of the house will secure the suppport of every democratic protectionist in congress if they frame such a bill as the exigencies of the situation demand. They have the ability and the experience requisite to the task, and if they fail to perform it their constituents will hold them to a rigid accountability."

Important Railroad Decision.

Winona Republican.

The decision of the Minnesota Supreme Court in the matter of the State Railway Commission to fix rates of transportation for freight in certain cases—briefly outlined in the Republican of Saturday—is of such far-reaching importance as to justify a more general review of its provisions and of the principle which it establishes. The case in which this decision originated was in and of itself one of comparatively trivial significance. Complaint was made in 1887 to the Railway Commission by persons representing the towns of Northfield, Faribault and Owatonna that the charge for transporting milk on the Milwaukee and St. Paul road from those places to St. Paul and Minneapolis (ranging from 3 to 4 cents per gallon) was excessive and an interference of the commission to effect a reduction was asked for. After hearing the testimony produced and the statements of all the parties, the commission made an order, dated August 3, 1887, that the rates from Owatonna to Minneapolis and St. Paul should not exceed 2½ cents per gallon. As the company neglected and refused to carry out the recommendations made and afterward published by the commission, application was made to the supreme court for a writ of mandamus against the Milwaukee company to compel it to comply with the recommendations of the commission. In its answer the company contended that, so far as the right, power or function of fixing, making or establishing the rates for transportation pertains to the state, the same is vested exclusively in the legislature, and that it is not competent for the legislature to delegate such power to any commission established and organized by the legislature. The answer further contends that the company is the sole owner of the road, and as a consequence of such ownership is entitled to make, fix and establish the rates for transportation of freight and passengers, and that the rates complained of were reasonable, fair and just.

Upon this state of facts, the supreme court—speaking through Justice Mitchell, by whom the opinion was written—admits that the language of the act in question is vague and its meaning obscure, and that if constructed technically it would be at least ineffectual if not unconstitutional. "But," says Justice Mitchell, with the true perception of the duties and responsiblities of a court of last resort, "legislative enactments are not to be defeated by mistakes, omissions or inaccuracies of language any more than other writings, provided the intention of the legislature can be ascertained from the whole act. In constructing a statute we must assume, if its language will admit, that the legislature intended to act within its constitutional power. We must also, if possible, so construe the language as to make it effectual." The railroad company's whole defence, he says, rests in questions of law. There was no fact for the respondent to traverse except violation of the law. If the statute is valid it was bound to obey it, and if it is not obeying it there is no issue of fact to try." The only other question as to the construction of the act is the matter of fixing the rate. The court believes that the intention of the law is that the rates fixed by the commission should be not merely advisory nor merely prima facie equal and reasonable, as is the case in the legislation of most other states that have created like commissions, but final and conclusive as to what are lawful or equal and reasonable charges; the law neither contemplates nor allows any issue to be made or inquiry had as to their equality and reasonableness in fact; the rates published by the commission are the only ones that are lawful, and therefore, in contemplation of law, the only ones that are equal and reasonable.

The question of the validity of the act is considered at length, the court entering upon a comprehensive review of the history of the litigation on the subject. It is shown that the decisions of the celebrated "Granger" cases of eleven years ago, mainly originating in this state, resulted in a thorough establishment of the doctrine of legislative control. The court says: "It was there held that New York companies being incorporated as common carriers for hire and given extraordinary powers and special rights and privileges in order that they might better serve the puplic employment affecting the public interest and therefore, unless protected by their charters, were subject to legislative control as to their rates of fare and freight that for protection against wrong under the form of legislative regulation, they must rely entirely upon the good faith of the people and the wisdom and impartiality of the legislature. This is in accordance with public policy and public necessity, for no modern civilized community could long endure that their public highway system should be in the uncontrolled, exclusive use of private owners. The only alternative was either governmental regulation or governmental ownership." To the objection raised by the company that this is a judicial question—that if absolute power be given the commission to establish rates it might result in the practical confiscation of the railway company's property—the answer is made that its fallacy consists in the failure to distinguish a case like the present from one of mere private contract in which the public has no interest. The controlling fact in such a case as this is the right to regulate at all. This being conceded, it is immaterial, so far as concerns the question now under consideration, whether the legislature fixes the rates directly or indirectly though a commission.

The real vital point in the case—as the respondent was not slow to perceive and to attempt to avail itself of—is the claim set up by the railroad company, that the power to regulate rates is legislative, and that therefore the act is void because it delegates legislative power to a commission. The premise here set up, it is true, is a well established principle of constitutional laws, but the conclusion drawn from it, as the court points out, is erroneous. The supreme court has itself, in a former decision, declared this very principle in a broad sense—except as to municipalities—but, as Justice Mitchell well says, "the authority that makes the laws has large discretion in determining the means through which they shall be executed." He calls attention to the important distinction existing between the law-making and the adminstrative powers of the legislature. The maker of the law may commit something to the discretion of the other departments the government. The principle is recognized by all courts that the legislature may authorize others to do things which it might do itself. All laws are executed by officers appointed for the purpose, and their powers often necessarily involve the exercise of discretion and judgment, investigation and determination. This must be so if the legislature is to be permitted to exercise effectually its constitutional powers. In the specific case under consideration made the law as it stands, and then entrusted the power of executing and administrating it to the commission. In other words the legislature has in effect declared that all rates shall be just and reasonable, but it leaves to the commission discretion to say when the necessity arises what particular rates are just and reasonable. This is not delegating power to make the law but to execute it by giving it particular direction. The legislature might itself fix the rates for any given cause, as it has the undoubted power to do, at whatever it deemed equal and reasonable but what is just and reasonable depends upon an infinate variety of circumstances. What may be such on one road or for one kind of traffic may not be so on another road or for another kind. What are reasonable one month may not be so the next. For a popular legislature that meets only once in two years, and then only for sixty days, to attempt to fix rates would, as Justice Mitchell says, result only in the most ill-advised and hap-hazard action, productive of injustice alike to the railway and the public. Such power can only be exercised satisfactorily by a board or commission constantly in session, which can fix rates with reference to the particular circumstances of each road and each particular kind of business, and which can change and modify these rates to suit the ever varying condition of traffic.

This broad-minded opinion is creditable to the supreme court, not alone because of the sound interpretation of the law which it embodies, but still more so because of the inherent justice and wisdom of the principle declared as it applies to the relations existing between the railroads and the people from whom they derive their existence and support. It is in accord with the doctrine of state supremacy over the roads promulgated in the famous "Granger" decision, and like that it erects another insurmountable barrier between corporate rapacity and the people. If the railroad companies are endowed with ordinary sagacity they will accept the conclusion with such grace as they are capable of calling into action. To resist by an appeal to the United States Supreme Court—even if that be possible, which admits of some question—will be but to still further antagonize the popular interests and welfare—only to end in their own ultimate overthrow.

Hoard's Dairyman: It is the absolute truth, that the cow chronically wintered poorly, no matter how well she may be fed in the summer, will not give as rich milk as she would if uniformly well cared for. Long continued experiments, made on this line, show that cows can be changed into rich milkers thus, that were poor ones when five or six years old. Further, it has been shown that the heifer calves of the same cows, raised to cows from different ages of the mother, took on them the character of the mother at the time she gave birth to the heifer. Many a foolish farmer thinks, if he gets his cow through the winter, on her legs, that he will have just as rich a milker the next summer, as he would if he had fed her more generously in the winter. It "cant be did." The statement made by C. P. Goodrich shows what a little previous building up did for his cows.

Mr. M. P. Losey has indeed experienced great affliction. Not only has he been called upon to give up a beloved son, but he himself has been near unto death's door, and for some time his recovery was very doubtful. Almost every member of his family has also been confined to their beds by sickness, but they are now all convalescent and improving rapidly, we are glad to say.

H. G. Losey, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Losey, died, of congestion of the brain, at his residence at Euclid on Saturday, May 5th, aged twenty-eight years, five months and five days. He leaves a wife and two small children to mourn the loss of a kind parent and a true and faithful husband. Mr. Losey came to this city with his parents, brothers and sisters in the spring of 1879 and lived here several years, removing to his farm at Euclid a few years later. He will be missed, not only by sorrowing relatives, but by many friends also.

The republican club met last Thursday evening and decided to occupy one of the best rooms in the McKinnon block. One of the rear rooms, being cheaper, was talked of, but it was unanimously decided that it would not do as the republican party believes in being at the front always, in everything. The club now has fine, commodious quarters in a conspicuous location where their banners may be seen and known of all men.

Our genial dentist, Dr. Thomas, went up to the farm last week to see to the seeding operations. Found his wheat nearly all sowed, and took a trip up to the new city on Thief River. Found Charlie Kretcschmar hear-over-heels in the work of damming the river (in his mild way and manner) and getting his mill in shape for business. J. W. Howes has his mill nearly ready for operation while jovial Charlie Robbecke was busy as a nailer feeding the busy workers at his new and commodious hotel. Verily, the city on the Thief seems to be forging ahead right bravely and bids fair to be a live factor in the progress of Polk County. If they keep on Jim Hill will be obliged to extend the road to that point, which would not be much of a job, only six miles or so, and then they will be right in town. Well, if they are all such pushers as Charlie Kretzschmar they amply deserve all the success they attain.

Our friend Marcus Johnson figures as a gallant fireman in a little skirmish with the fire-fiend at Atwater. The quill-driver of the Atwater paper eloquently pictures him arising from his downy couch at the ghostly hour of 3 a. m., donning his fiery array (as it were) and Ajax like rushing forth to conquer the devouring elements. We can better imagine him devouring the conquering elements but we cannot imagine how he happened to be caught out so late—or early rather.

On Monday evening the Katie Pearson Company in the French Spy showed a little of their powers of acting, indicating a rich treat for our theatre going people this week. The play did not seem to come up to the expectations of the audience fully, and did not seem to call out the full powers of the actors. The costumes were handsome and appropriate. Charlie Kops furnished excellent music with his little piano, while one of the boys (in the audience) with his little dandelion squawker furnished music and fun on the side.

J. P. Marcum surprised us with a sample of garden sass,—strong and vigorous, (yea, verily, we speak advisedly when we say STRONG) that are the products of his garden this spring. Parsnips, did you say? Nary pars, but onions, man, onions that would draw tears from the heart of stone and great, long, husky fellows they were. We thought at first that they must be too young and tender to be the production of so small a spring as we have had so far but when we sample 'em we were prepared to believe anything of them, as they furnished too strong and convincing an argument for a doubt, and our neighbors, and everybody we've met upon the street since, a mile away do not attempt to gainsay the evidence. With such a healthy youth what must they be when they get old and STRONG?

A Ground Hog Case.

It is not often that an attorney is called upon to try a case on Sunday, but when a woodchuck gets into a hollow-tree on the Sabbath day and won't wait until such a day as the law recognizes a service of papers, and you are out of meat and must have that woodchuck what can you do? Attorney Palmer's little boy, and Register Dickman's boy found a woodchuck in just that kind of a fix last Sunday, and while one watched the "chuck" the other ran to Palmer, who took his revolver and hastened to the scene. He fired once into the hollow but without avail, the "chuck" failed to tumble to the racket. He then got a stick, poked it into the hollow to guide his shot, reached in his revolver and "let 'er go Gallagher," and gee whiz, what a result! The little colt kicked frightfully and in some way managed to fill the hand of the limb of the law with burned powder. The report was deafening, and for a plum week Palmer could not hear anything—not even an invitation to "take a cigar," and he has been busy every day since picking out the powder spots. P. S. The woodchuck accepted the amendment as soon as he heard the full report and surrendered.

All is not peace and harmony in the ranks of the unterrified in Dakota. At their convention at Watertown, last week, a row of large-sized proportions developed, resulting in two conventions. The Day men passed resolutions severely criticising Gov. Church and demanding his impeachment. It would seem that even the democratic reign does not bring on the millenium to any marked extent.

On Thursday morning of last week, Mrs. B. F. McKay departed this life at the age of 39 years and 8 months. She had been suffering from consumption for nearly a year and her death was not quite unexpected though it came very sudden at the last. Mr. McKay had been up with her until one o'clock when she urged him to lie down and get some sleep saying that she thought she could go to sleep. He laid down on the lounge and soon fell asleep. In about an hour he was aroused by a call from her and arose and aided her to change position as she complained of being unable to breath freely. The new position did not seem to relieve her so he placed her back as she was before which seemed to have the desired effect and Mr. McKay again laid down on the lounge and fell asleep. He awoke at 5:30 and arousing the household, built the fire. Mrs. McKay appearing to be quietly sleeping. He then approached the bed and discovered that she was dead. She had not been dead very long apparently. The funeral was largely attended at 2 p. m., on Friday. Mrs. McKay leaves five children, four sons and one daughter to mourn the loss of a true mother and to aid in consoling a bereaved husband.

Dangerous Food Adulteration.

The Fraudulent use of Alum and Lime in Cheap Baking Powders.

If consumers prefer to buy an adulterated article of food because it can be had at a lower price, they undoubtedly have the right to do so, provided the adulterants are not of a character injurious to health. If such articles are not falsely sold as pure, and the customer is not deceived as to their real character, the transaction is not illegitimate.

But the great danger in the traffic in adulterated food arises from the deception that is practised by manufacturers usually classing such goods as pure. This is almost invariably done when the adulterant is one that is injurious to health. For instance, manufacturers of alum and lime baking powders not only fail to inform the public of the real character of their goods, but carefully conceal the fact that they are made from these poisonous articles. Most of these manufacturers also claim that their articles are pure and wholesome, while some go still further and proclaim boldly that they are cream of tartar goods, or even the genuine Royal baking powder itself. No consumer will buy alum baking powders knowingly, for it is well understood that they are detrimental to health. The sale of lime and alum baking powders as pure and wholesome articles is, therefore, criminal, and it is satisfactory to notice that several persons engaged in such sale have already been brought to justice in the courts.

The official analysts have recently been active in the pursuit of these dishonest articles. The baking powders of several States have been carefully and critically examined. The officials are surprised at the large amount of lime and alum goods found. It is a suggestive fact that no baking powder except the Royal has been found without either lime or alum, and many contain both. Dr. Price's baking powder has been found to contain nearly 12 per cent of lime; Cleveland's 11 per cent of impurities; the phosphate powders over 12 per cent of lime.

The chief service of lime is to add weight. It is true that lime, when subjected to heat, gives off a certain amount of carbonic acid gas, but a quick-lime is left—a caustic of most powerful nature. A small quantity of dry lime upon the tongue, or in the eye, produces painful effects; how much more serious must these effects be on the delicate membranes of the stomach, intestines and kidneys, more particularly of infants and children, and especially when the lime is taken into the system day after day, and with almost every meal. This is said by physicians to be one of the causes of indigestion, dyspepsia, and those painful diseases of the kidneys now so prevalent.

Adulteration with lime is quite as much to be dreaded as with alum, which has heretofore received the most emphatic condemnation from food analysts, physicians and chemists, for the reason that while alum may be partially dissolved by the heat of baking it is impossible to destroy or change the nature of the lime so that the entire amount in the baking powder passes, with all its injurious properties, into the stomach.

The large profits from the manufacture of lime and alum baking powders has placed many of them in the market. They are to be found in the stock of almost every retail dealer, and are urged upon customers calling for baking powders upon all occasions. Because of their well-known detrimental character it is desirable that prompt means be taken to suppress their manufacture.

Pure baking powders are one of the chief aids to the cook in preparing perfect and wholesome food. While those are to be obtained of well-established reputation, like the Royal, of whose purity there has never been a question, it is proper to avoid all others.

The New Council.

The report of the council proceedings of Tuesday evening are so voluminous that the clerk has been unable to furnish us with them entire for this issue but they will appear entire in our next issue. The council is looking into the financial condition of our city with a view to as economical administration of city affairs as possible, consistent with the needs of a thrifty young city such as ours.

Opera House Notes.

A coat of paint would add greatly to the appearance of the house and show appreciation of the patronage of a generous public.

The side doors could just as well be opened at the close of the entertainment and would add greatly to the conveniences of egress. The two front doors should be opened at least.

Some companies wonder at such small houses as are sometimes met here but did they have to wade out doors through an inch or two of tobacco juice, or sit and have their ears pierced with the shrill whistles of ungainly boys perhaps they would not wonder much. The opening of the side doors at the close of the entertainment and a little healthy discipline of the unruly members would help much. Monday night the floors were in execrable condition, especially in the rear of the hall.

Henry Steege has purchased of M. R. Brown the stock of horses, buggies &c., &c., and rented the barn. He will give up the idea of going west and content himself with running a first-class livery.

To-day is the last day of grace allowed by the board of health for cleaning up premises. The next thing is the inspection and fine for all owners of premises that do not pass muster. If you have neglected this matter it will be well enough to brace up a bit.

To-night will be presented "The Mountain Pink," by the Katie Pearson Comedy Co. This piece is full of comedy and tragedy, calling out the full powers of the company and is worthy of a liberal patronage. They deserve a full house.

Harry Attix drove those famous mules to the city on Tuesday and when he went back they drew one of those new three-seated light rigs that the McKinnon Bro.'s have on exhibition. Harry says that the little rats only weigh 500 pounds each but they can haul a ton. Well, the mules are not big, (if the story is.)

One would suppose that photographer Francis had a sufficient amount of paraphernalia for all ordinary purposes but he informs THE JOURNAL that he has a lot of accessories now on the way daily expected to arrive, which will enable him to take pictures in all of the new styles of scenery. He can do you up in good shape. Try him.

Mr. R. Johnson returned last week from a winter's sojourn east and resumed his duties in the treasurer's office. He has been visiting friends in Iowa, Ohio and Williamsburgh, Mass. He says he don't know what kind of weather we have been having here but if it has been worse than that he has experienced he thinks we are to be pitied. It seems that the weather has been very severe all over the country during the past winter.

Within the past week a letter has been received by one of our citizens from an official of the Manitoba road saying that the steel rails to iron the graded portion of the B. & N. W., as far as Fosston has been ordered for some time and is expected to arrive shortly when the work of track-laying will commence and be pushed rapidly to completion. We live in hopes to see the promise fulfilled.

The Katie Pearson Comedy Co., presented The Octoroon on Tuesday evening to a rather slim audience. The acting of this company is good and deserves a better patronage. Sam Hunt out darkies the genuine African himself. If there is a fiercer Indian than W. W. Bittner we should not care to meet him alone after dark. The company, as a whole is very painstaking and deserves a liberal patronage.

A bit of a rumpus occurred in a barber shop on Saturday evening last wherein a drummer boy met his fate in the person of an irate husband who proceeded to lather him in good shape. A warrant was issued later for his arrest, doubtless because he did not complete his job, but he was non est. On Monday morning he walked into the justice shop bought $5 worth of forgiveness and went about his business.

Chris Thorson, the man who had his right hand so badly injured in a mill near Fertile last winter, was obliged to suffer amputation of that member on Saturday last, Dr. Dunlop, assisted by Dr. M. Van Dyke, performing that operation. The idea that his injury was a slight one that could easily have been cured, is an error, as it was a serious injury, one that would have left him a cripple at best. He is now able to be around the streets.

John Mikulecky represented the Bohemian settlement in the democratic convention on Tuesday. John has been on the sick list since January and his little boy, a lad of only 13 years has been obliged to superintend the putting in of the crop so far. He has driven the seeder to sow about 75 acres which is quite a remarkable feat for a lad so young. Such a boy as that is worth having and such a man as he bids fair to make will be an honor to his parents and a credit to Polk County.

On Saturday last a train load of young steers arrived at the yards destined for the ranges in Montana. The man in charge, who is a part owner of the stock, says that the cattle business is fast playing out on the great ranches, owing to extremely heavy losses from cold weather and the growing sheep and horse-raising interests. Gradually the business will work into the hands of parties who only attempt to care for a few and who provide shelter and hay for them during the severe weather of winter.

Henry E. Utzinger, who died April 28th at Nordhoff, Cal., was 31 years of age. He was born in Zurich, Switzerland, and came to this city in 1880 where he resided until his failing health induced him to seek the milder climate of California in hopes of recovery, but notwithstanding the unremitting care of his cousin, Miss Louisa Ganz and sympathizing friends that was not to be and he passed from this life to the great hereafter in the prime of life. Although not an Odd Fellow, the members of that order in Nordhoff were unremitting in their efforts to give him aid and relief and won the lasting esteem of all of Henry's friends and relatives by their many acts of kindness. Henry was a member of the Crookston Fire Department, by whom he was highly esteemed as a true friend and faithful brother. He was a carpenter by trade and pursued his calling in this city. He was a quiet unassuming man highly respected by all who knew him.

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

Dr. Talmage Unmasks the Mediumistic Charlatans Who Prey Upon Weak Humanity.

Their Victims Found Among the Troubled, the Bankrupt, the Sick, and the Bereft.

After the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., on the 29th ult., had, in his well-known manner, expounded the scriptures, the multitude of people who thronged the tabernacle and all its entrances, packing every available space of standing and sitting room, united in singing:

Salvation let the echo fly
The spacious earth around,
While all the armies of the sky
Conspire to raise the sound.

Dr. Talmage announced his subject: "Modern Spiritualism." He took for his text:

"Behold there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at Endor. And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiments, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night, and he said, I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee."—I. Samuel xxviii, 7-8.

Following is the sermon in full:

I have recently become a spiritualist. At least so some of the journals of that belief declare. This, together with the fact that "mediums" are now being tried in the criminal courts, setting millions of people to make inquiry in regard to communication between this world and the next, leads me to preach this sermon.

Trouble to the right of him, and trouble to the left of him, Saul knew not what to do. As a last resort he concluded to seek out a spiritual medium, or a witch, or anything that you please to call her—at any rate, a woman who had communication with the spirits of the eternal world. It was a very difficult thing to do, for Saul had either slain all the witches or compelled them to stop business. A servant one day said to King Saul: "I know of a spiritual medium down at the village of En-dor." "Do you?" said the king. Night falls. Saul, putting off his kingly robes and putting on the dress of a plain citizen, with two servants, goes out to hunt up this spiritual medium. It was no easy thing for Saul to disguise himself, for the tallest people in the country only came up to his shoulder, and I think from the strength of the man and the way he bore himself he must have been well proportioned. It must have been a frightful thing to see a man walking along in the night eight or nine feet high. I suppose, as the people saw him pass, they said: "Who is that? He is as tall as the king"—having no idea that in such a plain dress there really was passing the king. Saul and his servants after a while reach the village, and they say: "I wonder if this is the house?" And they look in and see the haggard, weird, and shriveled up spiritual medium sitting by the light, and on the table sculptured images, and divining rods, and poisonous herbs, and bottles, and vases. They say: "Yes, this must be the place." One loud rap brings the woman to the door, and as she stands there holding the candle or lamp above her head and peering out into the darkness, she says: "Who is here?" The tall king informs her that he has come to have his fortune told. When she hears that she trembles and almost drops the light, for she knows there is no chance for a fortune-teller or spiritual medium in all the land. But Saul, having sworn that no harm shall come to her, she says: "Well, who shall I bring up from the dead?" Saul says: "Bring up Samuel." That was the prophet who had died a little while before. I see her waving a wand, or stirring up some poisonous herbs in a caldron, or hear her muttering over some incantations, or stamping her foot as she cries out to the realms of the dead: "Samuel! Samuel!" Lo the freezing horror! The door of the tenement opens and the gray hairs float up, and the forehead, the eyes, the lips, the shoulders, the arms, the feet, the entire body of dead Samuel, wrapped in sepulchral robe, appearing to the astonished group, who stagger back, and hold fast, and catch their breath and shiver with terror. The dead prophet, white and awful from the tomb, begins to move his ashen lips, and he glares upon King Saul, and cries out: "What did you bring me up for? Why did you break my long sleep? What do you mean, King Saul?" Saul, trying to compose and control himself, makes his stammering and affrighted utterance, as he says to the dead prophet: "The Lord is against me and I have come to you for help. What shall I do?" The dead prophet stretched forth his finger to King Saul and said: "Die to-morrow! Come with me into the sepulcher. I am going now. Come, come with me!" And lo! the floor again opens and the feet of the dead prophet disappear, and the arms, and the shoulders, and the forehead. The floor closes. Nothing is left in the room but Saul and the two servants and the spiritual medium, and the sculptured images, and the divining rods, and the bottles, and the vases, and the poisonous herbs. Oh, that was an awful seance!

I learn first from this subject that spiritualism is a very old religion. It is natural that people should want to know the origin and the history of a doctrine which is so widespread in all the villages, towns, and cities of the civilized world, getting new converts every day—a doctrine with which many of you are already tinged.

Spiritualism in America was born in 1847, in Hydesville, Wayne County, N. Y., when one night there was a loud rap heard against the door of Michael Weekman; a rap a second time, a rap a third time, and all three times, when the door was opened, there was nothing found there, the knocking having been made seemingly by invisible knuckles. In that same house there was a young woman who had a cold hand passed over her face and there being seemingly no arm attached to it, ghostly suspicions were excited. After a while Mr. Fox and his family moved into that house, and then every night there was a banging at the door, and one night Mr. Fox said: "Are you a spirit?" Two raps, answering in the affirmative. "Are you an injured spirit?" Two raps, answering in the affirmative. And so they found out, as they say, that it was the ghost or spirit of a peddler, who had been murdered in that house many years before for his $500. Whether the ghost of the dead peddler had been there to collect his $500 or his bones, I cannot say, not being a spiritualist; but there was a great racket at the door, so Mr. Weekman declared, and Mrs. Weekman, and Mr. and Mrs. Fox, and all the little Foxes. The excitement spread. There was a universal rumpus. Hon. Judge Edmonds declared, in a book, that he had actually seen a bell start from the top shelf of a closet, heard it ring over the people that were standing in the closet, then, swung by invisible hands, it rang over the people in the back parlor and floated through the folding-doors to the front parlor, rung over the people there, and then dropped on the floor. N. P. Talmage, senator of the United States, afterward governor of Wisconsin, had his head completely turned with spiritualistic demonstrations. A man as he was passing along the road said that he was lifted up bodily and carried toward his home through the air at such great speed he could not count the posts on the fence as he passed; and as he had a handsaw and a square in his hand they beat, as he passed through the air, most delightful music. And the tables tipped, and the stools tilted, and the bedsteads raised, and the chairs upset, and it seemed as if the spirits everywhere had gone into the furniture business! Well, the people said. "We have got something new in this country; it is a new religion." Oh, no, my friends. Thousands of years ago we find in our text a spiritualistic seance.

Nothing in the spiritualistic circles of our day has been more strange, mysterious, and wonderful than things which have been seen in the past centuries of the world. In all the ages there have been necromancers, those who consult with the spirits of the departed; charmers, those who put their subjects in a mesmeric state; sorcerers, those who by taking poisonous drugs see everything and hear everything and tell everything; dreamers, people who in their sleeping moments can see the future world and hold consultation with spirits; astrologers, who could read a new dispensation in the stars; experts in palmistry, who can tell by the lines in the palm of your hand your origin and your history. From a cave on Mount Parnassus, we are told, there was an exhalation that intoxicated the sheep and the goats that came anywhere near it, and a shepherd approaching it was thrown by that exhalation into an excitement in which he could foretell future events and hold consultation with the spiritual world. Yea, before the time of Christ the Brahmins went through all the table-moving, all the furniture excitement which the spirits have exploited in our day; precisely the same thing over and over again, under the manipulations of the Brahmins. Now, do you say that spiritualism is different from these? I answer, all these delusions I have mentioned belong to the same family. They are exhumations from the unseen world. What does God think of all these delusions? He thinks so severely of them that He never speaks of them but with vivid thunders of indignation. He says: "I will be a swift witness against the sorcerer." He says: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." And lest you might make some important distinction between spiritualism and witchcraft God says in so many words: "There shall not be among you a consulter of familiar spirits, or wizard, or necromancer; for they that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord." And He says again: "The soul of those who seek after such as have familiar spirits, and who go whoring after them, I will set myself against them, and he shall be cut off from among his people." The Lord Almighty, in a score of passages, which I have not now time to quote, utters His indignation against all this great family of delusions. After that be a spiritualist if you dare!

Still further, we learn from this text how it is that people come to fall into spiritualism. Saul had enough trouble to kill ten men. He did not know where to go for relief. After awhile he resolved to go and see the witch of En-dor. He expected that somehow she would afford him relief. It was his trouble that drove him there. And I have to tell you now that spiritualism finds its victims in the troubled, the bankrupt, the sick, the bereft. You lose your watch, and you go to the fortune-teller to find where it is. You lose a friend, you want the spiritual world opened, so that you may have communication with him. In a highly-wrought, nervous, and diseased state of mind, you go and put yourself in that communication. That is why I hate spiritualism. It takes advantage of one in a moment of weakness, which may come upon us at any time. We lose a friend. The trial is keen, sharp, suffocating, almost maddening. If we could marshal a host, and storm the eternal world, and recapture our loved one, the host would soon be marshaled. The house is so lonely. The world is so dark. The separation is so insufferable.

But spiritualism says: "We will open the future world, and your beloved one can come back and talk to you." Though we may not hear his voice, we may hear the rap of his hand. So, clear the table. Sit down. Put your hands on the table. Be very quiet. Five minutes gone. Ten minutes. No motion of the table. No response from the future world. Twenty minutes. Thirty minutes. Nervous excitement all the time increasing. Forty minutes. The table shivers. Two raps from the future world. The letters of the alphabet are called over. The departed friend's name is John. At the pronunciation of the letter "J" two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "O" two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "H" two raps. At the pronunciation of the letter "N" two raps. There you have the whole name spelled out. J-o-h-n, John. Now, the spirit being present, you say: "John, are you happy?" Two raps give an affirmative answer. Pretty soon the hand of the medium begins to twitch and twist, and begins to write out, after paper and ink are furnished, a message from the eternal world. What is remarkable, the departed spirit, although it has been amid the illuminations of heaven, can not spell as well as it used to. It has lost all grammatical accuracy and can not write as distinctly. I received a letter through a medium once. I sent it back. I said: "Just please to tell those ghosts they had better go to school and get improved in their orthography." Now, just think of spirits, that the bible represents as enthroned in glory, coming down to crawl under the table, and break crockery, and ring tea-bells before supper is ready, and rap the window shutter on a gusty night. Is there any consolation in such poor, miserable work compared with the thought that our departed Christian friends got rid of pain and languishing, are in the radiant society of heaven, and that we shall join them there, not in a stifled and mysterious half-utterance which makes the hair stand on end and the cold chills creep down the back, but in an unhindered and illimitable delight.

And none shall murmur or misdoubt,
When God's great sunrise finds us out.

Yes, my friends, spiritualism comes to those who are in trouble and sweeps them into its delusions. Saul, in the midst of his disaster, went to the witch of Endor. The vast majority of those who have gone to spiritual mediums have been sent there through their misfortunes.

I learn still further from this subject that spiritualism and necromancy are affairs of the darkness. Why did not Saul go in the day? He was ashamed to go. Besides that, he knew that this spiritual medium, like all her successors, performed her exploits in the night. The Davenports, the Fowlers, the Foxes, the spiritual mediums of all ages, have chosen the night or a darkened room. Why? The majority of their wonders have been swindles, and deception prospers best in the night.

Some of the performances of spiritual mediums are not to be ascribed to fraud, but to some occult law that after awhile may be demonstrated. But I believe that now nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand achievements on the part of spiritual mediums are arrant and unmitigated humbugs. The mysterious red letters that used to come out on the medium's arm were found to have been made by an iron pencil that went heavily over the flesh; not tearing it, but so disturbing the blood that it came up in great round letters. The witnesses of the seances have locked the door, put the key in their pocket, arrested the operator, and found out, by searching the room, that hidden levers moved the tables. The sealed letters that were mysteriously read without opening have been found to have been cut at the side, and then afterward slyly put together with gum arabic; and the medium who, with a heavy blanket over his head, could read a book, has been found to have had a bottle of phosphoric oil, by the light of which anybody can read a book; and ventriloquism, and legerdemain, and sleight of hand, and optical delusion account for nearly everything. Deception being the main staple of spiritualism, no wonder it chooses the darkness.

You have all seen strange and unaccountable things in the night. Almost every man has at some time had a touch of hallucination. Some time ago, after I had been overtempted to eat something indigestible before retiring at night, after retiring I saw the president of one of the prominent colleges astride the foot of the bed, while he demanded of me a loan of 5 cents. When I awakened I had no idea it was anything supernatural. And I have to advise you, if you hear and see strange things at night, to stop eating hot mince pie and take a dose of bilious medicine. It is an outraged physical organism, enough to deceive the very elect after sundown, and does nearly all its work in the night. The witch of Endor held her seances at night; so do all the witches. Away with this religion of spooks.

Still further: I learn from my text that spiritualism is doom and death to its disciples. King Saul thought that he would get help from the "medium;" but the first thing that he sees makes him swoon away, and no sooner is he resuscitated than he is told he must die. Spiritualism is doom and death to everyone that yields to it. It ruins the body. Look in upon an audience of spiritualists. Cadaverous. Weak. Nervous. Exhausted. Hands clammy and cold. Nothing prospers but long hair—soft marshes, yielding rank grass. Spiritualism destroys the physical health. Its disciples are ever hearing startling news from the other world. Strange beings crossing the room in white. Table fidgety, wanting to get its feet loose as if to dance. Voices sepulchral and ominous. Bewildered with raps. I never knew a confirmed spiritualist who had a healthy nervous system. It is incipient epilepsy and catalepsy. Destroy your nervous system, and you might as well be dead. I have noticed that people who are hearing raps from the future world have but little strength left to bear the raps of this world. It is an awful thing to trifle with one's nervous system. It is so delicate, it is so far-reaching, its derangements are so terrible. Get the nervous system in a jangle, and, so so far as your body and soul are concerned, the whole universe is a jangle. Better in our ignorance experiment with a chemist's retort that may smite us dead, or with an engineer's steam-boiler that may blow us to atoms, than experiment with the nervous system. A man can live with only one lung or with no eyes, and be happy, as men have been under such afflictions, but woe be to the man whose nerves are shattered. Spiritualism smites first of all, and mightily, against the nervous system, and so makes life miserable.

I indict spiritualism, also, because it is a social and marital curse. The worst deeds of licentiousness and the worst orgies of obscenity have been enacted under its patronage. The story is too vile for me to tell. I will not pollute my tongue nor your ears with the recital. Sometimes the civil law has been evoked to stop the outrage. Families innumerable have been broken up by it. It has pushed off hundreds of young women into a life of profligacy. It talks about "elective affinities, and "affinital relations," and "spiritual matches," and adopts the whole vocabulary of free-loveism. In one of its public journals it declares "marriage is the monster curse of civilization." "It is a source of debauchery and intemperance." If spiritualism could have its full swing it would turn this world into a pandemonium of carnality. It is an unclean, adulterous, damnable religion, and the sooner it drops into the hell from which it rose the better both for earth and heaven. For the sake of man's honor and woman's purity I say let the last vestige of it perish forever. I wish I could gather up all the raps it has ever heard from spirits blest or damned, and gather them all on its own head in one thundering rap of annihilation!

I further indict spiritualism for the fact it is the cause of much insanity. There is not an asylum between Bangor and San Francisco which has not the torn and bleeding victims of this delusion. Go into any asylum, I care not where it is, and the presiding doctor, after you have asked him: "What is the matter with that man?" will say: "Spiritualism demented him;" or, "What is the matter with that woman?" he will say: "Spiritualism demented her." It has taken down some of the brightest intellects. It swept off into mental midnight judges, senators, governors, ministers of the gospel, and one time came near capturing one of the presidents of the United States. At Flushing, near this city, a man became absorbed with it, forsook his family, took his only $15,000, surrendered them to a spiritual medium in New York, attempted three times to put an end to his own life, and then was incarcerated in the State lunatic asylum, where he is to-day a raving maniac. Put your hand in the hand of this witch of Endor and she will lead you to bottomless perdition, where she holds her everlasting seance. Many years ago the steamer Atlantic started from Europe for the United States. Getting midocean the machinery broke, and she floundered around day after day and week after week, and for a whole month after she was due people wondered, and finally gave her up. There was great anguish in the cities, for there were many who had friends aboard that vessel. Some of the women, in their distress, went to the spiritual mediums and inquired as to the fate of that vessel. The mediums called up the spirits, and the rappings on the table indicated the steamship lost with all on board. Women went raving mad and were carried to the lunatic asylums.

After a while one day a gun was heard off quarantine. The flags went up on the shipping and the bells of the churches were rung. The boys ran through the streets: "Extra! The Atlantic is safe!" There was the embracing as from the dead, when friends came again to friends; but some of those passengers went up to find their wives in the lunatic asylum where this cheat of infernal spiritualism had put them. A man in Bellevue hospital, dying from wounds made by his own hand, was asked why he tried to commit suicide, he said: "The spirits told me to." Parents have strangled their children, and when asked why they did it, replied: "Spiritualism demanded it." It is the patronizer and forager for the madhouse. Judge Edmonds in Broadway tabernacle, New York, delivering a lecture in behalf of spiritualism, admitted in so many words: "There is a fascination about consultation with the spirits of the dead that has a tendency to lead people off from their right judgment, and to instill into them a fanaticism that is revolting to the natural mind."

It not only ruins its disciples, but it ruins the mediums also—only give it time. The Gadarean swine, on the banks of the Lake of Galilee, no sooner became spiritual mediums than down they went, in an avalanche of pork, to the consternation of all the herdsmen. The office of a medium is bad for a man, bad for a woman, bad for a beast.

I bring against this delusion a more fearful indictment—it ruins the soul immortal. First, it makes a man a quarter of an infidel; then it makes him half an infidel; then it makes him whole infidel. The whole system, as I conceive it, is founded on the insufficiency of the word of God as a revelation. God says the Bible is enough for you to know about the future world. You say it is not enough, and there is where you and the Lord differ. You clear the table, you shove aside the Bible, you put your hand on the table, and say: "Now let spirits of the future world come and tell me something the Bible has not told me." And although the scriptures say: "Add thou not unto His words, lest He reprove thee, and thou be found a liar," you risk it, and say: "Come back, spirit of my departed father; come back, spirit of my departed mother, of my companions, of my little child, and tell me some things I don't know about you and about the unseen world." If God is ever slapped square in the face it is when a spiritual medium puts down her hand on the table, invoking spirits departed to make a revelation. God has told you all you ought to know, and how dare you be prying into that which is none of your business? You can not keep the Bible in one hand and spiritualism in the other. One or the other will slip out of your grasp, depend upon it.

Spiritualism is adverse to the Bible in the fact that it has in these last days called from the future world Christian men to testify against Christianity. Its mediums call back Lorenzo Dow, the celebrated evangelist, and Lorenzo Dow testifies that Christians are idolators. Spiritualism calls back Tom Paine, and he testifies that he is stopping in the same house with John Bunyan. They call back John Wesley, and he testifies against the Christian religion, which all his life he gloriously preached. Andrew Jackson Davis, the greatest of all spiritualists, comes to the front and declares that the New Testament is but "the dismal echo of a barbaric age" and the Bible only "one of the pen-and-ink relics of Christianity." They attempt to substitute the writings of Swedenborg and Andrew Jackson Davis and other religious balderdash in the place of this old Bible. I have in my house a book which was used in this very city in the public service of spiritualism. It is well worn with much service. I open the book, and it says: "What is our baptism? Answer. Frequent ablutions of water. What is our inspiration? Plenty of fresh air and sunlight. What is our prayer? Abundant physical exercise. What is our lovefeast? A clear conscience and sound sleep." And I find from the same book that the chief item in their public worship is gymnastic exercise, and that whenever they want to rouse up their souls to a very high pitch of devotion they sing page 65: "The Night Has Gathered Up Her Moonlit Fringes;" or page 16: "Come to the Woods, Higho!" You say you are not such a fool as that; but you will be if you keep on in the track you have started.

"But," says someone, "wouldn't it be of advantage to hear from the future world? Don't you think it would strengthen Christians? There are a great many materialists who do not believe there are souls; but if spirits from the future world should knock and talk over to us, they would be persuaded." To that I answer, in the ringing words of the Son of God: "If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

Now, I believe, under God, that this sermon will save many from disease, insanity and perdition. I believe these are the days of which the apostle spake when he said: "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits." I think my audience, as well as other audiences in this day, need to have reiterated in their hearing the passages I quoted some minutes ago: "There shall not be among you a consulter of familiar spirits, or wizard, or necromancer; for they that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord," and "The soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, I will set myself against them, and shall be cut off from their people."

But I invite you this morning to a Christian seance. This congregation is only one great family. Here is the church table. Come around the church table, take your seats for this great Christian seance, put your Bible on the table, put your hands on the top of the Bible, and then listen and hear if there are any voices coming from the eternal world. I think there are. Listen! "Secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but things that are revealed belong unto us and to our children." Surely that is a voice from the spirit world! But before you rise from this Christian seance I want you to promise me you will be satisfied with the divine revelation until the light of the eternal throne breaks upon your vision. Do not go after the witch of Endor. Do not sit down at the table-rappings, either in sport or in dead earnest. Have your tables so well made, and their legs so even, that they will not tip and rattle. If the table must move, let it be under the offices of industrious housewifery. Teach your children there are no ghosts to be seen or heard in this world, save those which walk on two feet or four, human or bestial. Remember that spiritualism at the best is a useless thing; for if it tells what the Bible reveals it's a superfluity, if it tells what the Bible does not reveal it is a lie. Instead of going out to get other people to tell your fortune, tell your own fortune by putting your trust in God and doing the best you can. I will tell your fortune: "All things work together for good to them who love God." Insult not your departed friends by asking them to come down and scrabble under an extension table. Remember that there is only one Spirit whose dictation you have a right to invoke, and that is the holy, blessed, and omnipotent spirit of God. Hark! He is rapping now, not on a table or the floor, but rapping on the door of your heart, and every rap is an invitation to Christ and a warning of judgment to come. Oh, grieve Him not away. Quench Him not. He has been all around you this morning. He was all around you last night. He has been around you all your lives. Hark! There comes a voice dropping through the roof, breaking through the window, filling all this house with tender and overmastering intonation, saying: "My spirit shall not always strive."

He Outwitted Them

Philadelphia Record.

About a year ago Jay Gould sailed up the Potomac on his yatch and spent some time at Mount Vernon. Then he discovered that a portion of the Washington estate was not owned by the Mount Vernon association. Going quietly to an attorney at Alexandria he requested him to purchase the additional thirty-two acres from the present owner for as low a price as they could be obtained without permitting it to be known who the purchaser was. The other day the property was transferred to Gould and by him deeded to the regents of the Mount Vernon association upon the condition that it should never be divided from the rest of the estate. The man from whom the land was bought is exceedingly indignant now that he knows who his customer was, for he thinks he might have got a much larger price than the $2,500 paid.

Eggs as Food.

No honest appetite ever rejected an egg in some guise. It is nutriment in the most portable form and in the most concentrated shape. Whole nations of mankind rarely touch any other animal food. Kings eat them plain as readily as do the humble tradesman. After the battle of Muhldorf, when Kaiser Ludwig sat at a meal with his burggrafs and great captains he determined on a piece of luxury—"one egg to every man and two to the excellently valiant Schwepperman." Far more than fish—for it is a watery diet—eggs are the scholar's fare. They contain phosphorus which is brain food, and sulphur, which performs a variety of functions in the economy. And they are the best nutriment for children, for in a compact form they contain everything that is necessary to the growth of the youthful frame.—Eastern Farmer.

Justice to the Country Editor.

It is regarded as something quite smart for metropolitan newspaper scribblers to sneer at country editors. Horace Greeley's old remark is trotted out whenever a city editor wishes to crush his rural brother. It is true that some fools and some knaves edit country journals, but as a rule these "provincial" editors are hard-working, shrewd, fair-minded, and influential men. They come nearer representing public sentiment than their city brethren, because they are closer to the people. The metropolitan press owes its distinction chiefly to men who have been trained in country newspaper offices. In fact, few men are properly equipped to even attempt to represent sentiment in this Republic who have not lived in the country. So much for those who sneer at the "rural rooster." —New York World.

Leave the Dirt Out.

A man has no business to tell to the readers of his newspaper what he would hesitate to tell, if there were need in his own home circle. There is a part of the divorce court record which properly belongs to the newspaper reporter and the public. If adultery is the ground of divorce, report to that effect is legitimate, as is also all else that tends to a clear presentation of the merits of the case. But sensation and dirt lugged in—not because they are essential to an understanding of the legal procedure, but merely because they are sensational and dirty, are not legitimate newsgiving and ought to be suppressed.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Conkling and the Reporters.

The eulogists of the late Roscoe Conkling make mention of his exceedingly genial way of treating newspaper people. And yet the records of Congress bear witness to the fact that he once pointed up the newspaper gallery in the Senate Chamber and referred to that loft as "The Buzzards' Roost."—Boston Herald.

He Kept His Promise.

"How glad you must be that your husband has quit visiting saloons!"

"Yes, indeed. He promise me when he went into business for himself that he would never go inside of a saloon again, and he has kept his word. It must be a struggle for poor George, but he bears up heroically."

"What is his business now?"

"He keeps a drug store."

About Babies.

Harper's Bazaar has collected the following interesting superstitions about babies. Some of them are familiar sayings in every country, others are new. But whatever the origin or the antiquity of these "old woman's notions" we can assure our readers that each one is as true and useful as any other. It is believed by many that if a child cries at its birth and lifts up only one hand, it is born to command. It is thought very unlucky not to weigh the baby before it is dressed. When first dressed the clothes should not be put on over the head, but drawn on over the feet, for luck.

When first taken from the room in which it was born it must be carried up-stairs before going down, so that it will rise in the world. In any case it must be carried up-stairs or up the street, not down stairs or down the street the first time it is taken out. It is also considered in England and Scotland unlucky to cut the baby's nails or hair before it is twelve months old.

Born on Monday, fair in the face;
Born on Tuesday, full of God's grace;
Born on Wednesday, the best to be had;
Born on Thursday, merry and glad;
Born on Friday, worthily given;
Born on Saturday, work hard for a living;
Born on Sunday shall never know want.

The large quantity of yellow shades used in spring millinery makes it becoming to brunets and French blondes.

THE HOME.

The Rag Carpet—Good Suggestions—Kitchen Lore—At Sunset Time—Fault Finding, Etc

At Sunset Time.

The painted shadows fall
From the church windows tall
Its pictured saints look down
Upon the quaint old town,
At sunset time.

No tramp of horses' feet
Disturbs the quiet street;
The distant hill-tops seem
Wrapt in a halcyon dream,
At sunset time.

A bird flits to and fro,
Above the branches low,
And sings in monotone
Of joys forever flown,
At sunset time.

Strange shadows, floating, rise
Across the evening skies,
As daylight wanes apace
In this sequestered place,
At sunset time.

The glowing tints grow dim,
And faintly, like a hymn
Heard through the half-closed gate,
They fade—and it is late,
At sunset time.

Pale watcher! though the night
Shall quench yon rays of light,
Know that all sorrows cease,
And troubling sinks to peace
At sunset time.

We seek the fields where bright
Streams run, and lilies white
And fadeless roses grow—
Where deathless summers glow,
At sunset time.

There is the perfect rest!
In pilgrim's garments drest,
We march, with staff in hand
Straight to the Sunset Land,
At sunset time.

The Rag Carpet.

If you can not afford Axminste carpets and Persian rugs, have rag carpet. The only thing that kills a rag carpet for popularity is its cheapness. If it cost $5 a yard, it would be on the floor of every bond-holder in the land. There is something about a rag carpet that suggests home. It is not so cold and formal to the eye as the handsomely flowered Brussels that you see in a parlor. As soon as you put your foot on a rag carpet, you feel on good terms with the household; and you naturally expect to hear a kettle sing, and see some friendly cat arch her back and rub socially against your shins.

And the man that owns a rag carpet made of articles collected about the house can sit right down with the carpet and talk to it. It is full of the pleasantest reminiscences. He can see in that carpet pieces of all the clothing he has worn during the past ten or twenty years. All his cast off wearing apparel is in that carpet, except what is in the crazy-quilt. Overcoats, suspenders, felt hats, neckties, gloves, and overshoes glow before him in a red, white, and blue sea that would set a statue peddler crazy with delight.

The past comes back to him through the medium of his metamorphosed clothing. Every strip has some association connected with it. There is the soft hat that his hair used to grow through the top of when he was a boy. There is the overcoat that never had a whole lining in the sleeve; there are the tops of the slippers his best girl worked him—gold daisies on a red ground; and there are his wedding suspenders. He can never forget those suspenders; they saw much more active service than General Grant. How many times had he made a button-hole in them with his knife! And when one got too weak to be worn longer, he kept himself together with a solitaire, and converted the other into a razor strop. And when they had both served two or three terms as razor strops, they were put into the rag carpet, where they loom up like two white doves against the background of black velvet, and after all the other pieces in the carpet have lost their color and character, the suspenders will be as tough as railroad sponge cake.—Exchange.

Good Suggestions.

Children's clothes, especially, need a good deal of looking after to keep them in proper order. Where the goods used for the garments are washable it is not so difficult to keep them clean and neat, but even then, if woolens, it is not wise to wash them too often, owing to the shrinkage that is sure to take place. No matter how carefully they are washed, if they are washed often, in a short while they will surely, unless very large at first, be too small for the person for whom they were made, and unless there are smaller children to utilize them they are placed away with the rest of the family's cast-off clothing, and new garments take their places.

In looking over the clothes, when grease spots are found, take a basin of clear, cold water, and put into it a few drops of ammonia. Fifteen drops is enough for an ordinary sized basin, but as this is hardly definite enough, use enough ammonia to make the water feel very soft, and yet will make the hands smart. With a flannel or cotton flannel cloth wet in this water, rub the grease spot briskly until the grease has disappeared, then rinse the spot in clear water, put to dry, and iron while slightly damp.

To remove the shiny look from black coat collars, elbows, seams, etc., where the nap of the cloth is not worn off entirely, ammonia water is excellent; but if the whole coat needs a thoroughly good cleansing use strong black coffee, to which has been added a few drops of ammonia, and sponge with a piece of black woolen cloth.

To make black cashmere look almost as good as new when soiled and faded, wash first in good soapsuds, rinse in clear water, then put in water to which has been added a great deal of blueing. Have the water very blue, so much so that it will have the appearance of being black. Let the goods lie in this for some time, if very much faded letting them lie over night; take from the water without wringing, and hang in a shady place to dry. Press when slightly damp. If a dress is to be treated in this way, and there is much trimming on it, it is the better way to rip the trimmings from the dress and wash them separately, but if it is made up plain or with only a little trimming, it can be washed without taking apart, and if pressed carefully will look as nice as though washed separately. In making a dress over, to be sure it ought to be ripped apart so there will be no varying in shade of the pieces when making them up. Dark blue cashmere can be made to look beautiful if washed and pressed in this way.

Fault Finding.

One of the easiest things in the world to do is to find fault, and in no place are there as many opportunities for indulging in this kind of work as in the home. There are so many little things occurring among its inmates where there is a family of any size, such as the misplacing of a garment, leaving a door ajar, uttering a thoughtless word, in fact, a great many trivial things that to people inclined to find fault will give plenty of cause. It is a disagreeable thing to find fault anyway, to most people, yet there are some who seem to like to do it simply for the sake of finding fault. These people do not mean to be chronic fault-finders, and it never occurs to them that they are. They would not for the world be thought disagreeable, and but for this one trait, would be generally very pleasant companions. They did not acquire this habit at once; any of their friends will tell you that there was a time when they were not so; but they began by noticing every little failing or supposed failing among their acquaintances, and the habit grew with them until it appeared a part of their nature to notice and condemn every little fault supposed or real. They are very far from being perfect themselves; in fact they think so much about other people's imperfections that they have very little time to attend to their own. They would be grieved and hurt should their friends retaliate by noticing every little eccentricity of theirs, and, perhaps, had their friends the courage to do so, it might open their eyes to the unpleasantness of fault-finding. It certainly would be a disagreeable duty, if duty it might be called, and few people would care to do it, unless of the same stamp as the fault-finders, in which case it would do very little good.

The Difference.

Nebraska State Journal.

A newspaper man who grinds out several columns of drivelings every day in the year and many years in the decade was conversing fluently and intelligently with a minister of the gospel the other day. The good man preaches to a cultivated audience in a small Nebraska town every Sunday and the newspaper man accused him of having a soft snap.

"One of your sermons," remarked the man who moulds public opinion, "wouldn't make over two columns in a newspaper. It is a cold, disagreeable day when the average writer doesn't do that much and you have a week in which to achieve it." "True," observed the pastor, smiling through his tears, "but you have all the world to draw from. You have all seasons and all countries for your own, I must write and preach on the same theme week after week and year after year, until this poor, lispering, stammering tongue lies silent in the grave. You try to write a two column article on any one subject every week for several years, or select a text and write a sermon for me. Then you will think that a turtle has a much greater snap than a clergyman." The good man was probably correct. An effort on the part of the newspaper man to write a sermon proved to be such a dismal failure that the author of it has been gloomy and morose ever since.

Idiotically Funny.

Nebraska State Journal.

The Topics department, which isn't much on hearing things, couldn't help overhearing the following the other day: "Poor little fellow, he passed away very peacefully." "How funny!" "I heard him crying in the night, but I did not suppose he was sick. I went to look at him a while later, however, and he was dead." "Dear me! isn't it funny." "I'll never cease to reproach myself for a harsh word I said to him yesterday. I was going out driving and he begged to accompany me most piteously, but I ordered him into the house. Ah, Miss X—, I would give worlds to recall that now." "Its really shocking. Isn't it funny how we recall every unkind word under such circumstances? I'm awfully sorry, I'm sure." "Yesterday was his birthday, you know, and it seems so strange that he should die on that day." "It is funny." "How are all your folks?" "O, pa has a horrid fever." "That's funny, so has mine." This is an extremely funny world, Horatio, if we are to believe all we hear.

Prohibition Cider.

An old farmer from Wayback County, who was brought before the court for breaking the peace in a prohibition county, told the following pathetic story:

"You see, Jedge, the whole trouble came of my drinkin' some of that new-fangled temp'rance cider that I ain't use to, and which I don't believe I'd ever get used to afore the horn toots for the general jedgment.

"I war born and bred on a farm, Jedge, an' I've knowed apple juice sence I war knee-high to a grasshopper. I've tampered with cider when it war sweet, and I've tampered with it when it war hard; I've drunk it just from the press, an' drunk it when it carried a good strong bead; I've laid across a barrel under the wagon-shed and sucked it through a rye-straw from the bunghole when it war jest guilt-edged, and I've swigged it when it was es hard es an an iron wedge an' sour 'nough to make a man cross-eyed fur life; but, Jedge, upon my sacred word, I never had no cider to unnerve me like that they sell in this town. Jedge, it can't be the cider of long ago; it can't be the cider of me boyhood's happy days.

"You see, Jedge, I druv inter town with a load of sweet pertaters, an' after I'd sold out I jest thought es they don't sell anything stronger'n cider in this here temp'rance town I'd try a little of the good old drink of me youth. An', Jedge, I tried it!

"There war a crowd of old friends about the tavern, an' I asked 'em up to the apple juice, an' then somebody sed: "Come up ag'in; an' then another sed: 'Fill 'em up at my expense;' an' still another sed: 'Have one with me afore you go'; an' that's jest the way it happened.

"Somehow, Jedge, it didn't taste like the cider I war brought up on, but the bottle had 'cider' printed onto it in gold letters, an' they sed it war cider, an' es long es the flavor of it war agreeable I war'n't cur'ous about it. I only took five drinks, Jedge, only five common tumblers full, an' then I begun to feel sort of queer, Jedge.

"I never had no cider to make me feel that way afore. I war furst weak es a new-born calf, an' then I war es strong as old Sampson afore his head war shaved. I thought I could lift the tavern, an', I think I tried to. My mind's not clear, Jedge but they say I made a sort of hubbub. They say I throwed a man over the bar an' broke a big looking-glass with him, an' scattered the whole congregation, an' went a howlin' down the main street askin' for a man of my strength, an' at last walked plumb through a show-winder that they sed cost $180. Then I war taken away to the prison cell. I disremember all the little partic'lars, Jedge, but I suspect thet all they say about me is too true. I think I war drunk, Jedge—I am a'most certain sure I war drunk, an' the new-fangled temp'rance cider they sell in this here town is to blame for it all.

"I kin drink a'most anything with impunerty, an' a little sugar, Jedge, an' stand up under it es straight as the steeple of a meetin'-house; I kin drink peach brandy, and apple-jack, an' plain, humble old corn-juice half a day, with the usuool intermissions, an' still be a peaceable, law-abiding citizen, but this here temp'rence cider is too much fur me, Jedge; it's too much fur the old man. Make it easy on me, fur I'm done with temp'rance drinks jest es long es I live, Jedge."

And the Judge, who is very well acquainted with the ways of town cider in Wayback County, made it very easy on the old man.—Detroit Free Press.

Washington Colored Aristocracy.

"There is an aristocracy among the colored people of Washington as well as among the white, and it is quite as exclusive," writes a correspondent to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "The caste is very strictly marked, and it is as difficult for a camel to go through the eye of a needle as for a member of the class denoted as 'trash' to gain admission to the circle of the 'quality' negroes. The focus or pole around which the high-toned colored society revolves is the Fifteenth Presbyterian church, which stands in an aristocratic section of the city—McPherson square—beside the residence of Associate Justice Blatchford of the supreme court and within a stone's throw of the palace Senator Palmer of Michigan has just completed. Fred Douglas does not worship here, but lives in a suburban village called Uniontown, and belongs to the Baptist denomination. Since he married a white woman he has not been received as cordially as before in the aristocratic circles of his race, who thought he might have found a spouse of his own color in better taste. Mrs. O'Hara is one of the lovliest ladies in Washington, and were it not for the slight trace of negro blood in her veins she would be a leader in white society. Like Mrs. Bruce, who is also beautiful, she is a highly educated and accomplished woman, speaks French, plays Beethoven, paints plaques, and is up in art and literature to a degree that would make some of her white sisters blush for envy. Both Mrs. Bruce and Mrs. O'Hara are very nearly white, and it would be difficult for a stranger to detect their relation to the African race. Mrs. O'Hara has a white governess for her children, and intends that they shall be as accomplished as herself."

Boom in American Novels.

A publisher with whom I was chatting the other day—one who publishes some very successful novels, though he has not very many novelists on the list—remarked rather gleefully that he had five American novels in the press. "I have heard almost the same stories from other publishers," I observed; "what is the occasion of this 'boom' in American novels?" "The reason is a simple one," the publisher replied. "It doesn't pay to publish foreign novels. We want something that can be copyrighted." "Then the American novelist will, of course, make his everlasting fortune?" I suggested. "Well, hardly that, for the American public are not buying American novels with the avidity that one would like to see. We sell 5,000 copies of a story now as against 25,000 and 50,000 before these cheap reprints flooded the market." From these figures I concluded that to be an American novelist is an expensive luxury. A novelist can hardly write more than one book a year—certainly not without having the finger of scorn pointed at him. If he sells 5,000 copies of his book—and this is a good sale—he will make only $500 by his year's work! Breaking stones on the highway is almost as remunerative an occupation.

The incessant use of the trawl has depleted the fisheries on the east coast of England to such an extent that the fishermen are in distress, and the government is urged to place restrictions on this mode of fishing.

In the United States Senate a bill has been introduced to prevent the use of cigarettes by boys in the District of Columbia. Senator Stewart of Nevada states that the use of cigarettes is destroying the rising generation and affecting the prosperity of the country.

It is singular that in the regular semi-annual black list published by the railroad officials of those who loan or sell their passes no names appear this time but those of clergymen, judges and legislators, the very men who of all persons should not be guilty of such acts.

A German newspaper tells of an old gypsy fiddler who awoke one night to find his hut flooded with water, and who, having no movable goods except an old bedstead, a stool and a bass viol, seated himself on the latter and paddled to dry land, using one of the slats of his bed as an oar.

The report of the census of 1880, taken eight years ago, now lacks four volumes of completion, yet two years hence a new census will be taken. It would seem that to be of the greatest value, the census of 1880 ought to be completed before the year 1890, but then the government has its own peculiar way of managing such affairs.

The emancipation of slaves is progressing rapidly in Brazil. There still remain about 3,500 black bondmen in Rio Janeiro, but it is proposed to liberate these on the 20th of June, in connection with the celebration of the emperor's return from his protracted tour abroad. In other parts of the Brazilian empire the planters are setting free their slaves in large numbers and paying them wages for the work performed.

According to Mr. Blavier's theory the great earthquake disturbances of 1755, 1884 and 1887 are to be associated with the abnormal accumulations of ice about the north pole. He supposes such accumulations to have caused a deflection of the Gulf stream away from Europe, producing great climatic changes and a slight disturbance of equilibrium in the sea bottom, followed by a possible local fracture along the line of least resistance.

Written language has always been a very mysterious thing to the savages since they first became aware of its existence. Sir John Lubbock, in writing of the savages of South America, says that on one occasion a native was sent by a missionary to a friend with a note and four loaves of bread. The native ate one on the way, and was amazed to find that the note discovered his theft. On the next occasion that he was sent with four he sat on the note while eating one of them.

A West Point cadet who bombarded his superior officer with a big baked potato was sentenced to dismissal from the service, but the president, in view of his previous good record and excellent scholarship, has commuted his punishment to the loss of all privileges during the coming summer and imprisonment within the police limits of the summer encampment. The young potato hurler thus forfeits his three month's summer vacation and will become well acquainted with his solitary little military tent.

There comes a story from Clinton, Ia., to the effect that Franklin K. Peck, an aged citizen of that place, had prayed that his life might be prolonged until the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage, which occurred on March 20. Though the end was thought to have been near many times, the old man rallied, and when the day arrived he seemed overjoyed to know that the looked for time had come. He clasped his aged wife's hand. Soon after his strength failed, and he passed away at 9:30 in the morning. He had lived in the vicinity of Clinton since 1837.

A good story is told of a Boston lady who was informed by her servant that a box of flowers had been left at the door for her. She was occupied at the time and simply told the servant to open the box, sprinkle the flowers with water and put them on ice, adding that she would attend to them later herself. The box really contained a new spring hat, but when opened only showed the flowers with which it was trimmed. The servant of course followed the orders that had been given her and when the lady went to open the box, she found her love of a hat so drenched with water that it was merely a worthless mass of discolored ribbons and straw.

PITH OF THE NEWS.

News from Washington.

Alvah W. Jones has been appointed special examiner of the pension office at a salary of $1,400. He is credited to Minnesota, and was appointed under the civil service rules.

Land Commissioner Stockslager has rejected the surveys of 13 townships in the State of Nevada. This action was based upon reports made to the office which tend to show that the surveys were fraudulent in character.

Surgeon-General Hamilton has officially published the full text of the reports on file in the Marine hospital bureau on which was based his statement that "a late inspection at Micanopy, Plant City and Bartwo, Fla., has proved the recent existence of yellow fever there, and that several other points in the southern and western portions of the state are to be looked upon as suspicious."

The senate committee on public buildings considered and authorized reports upon about twenty public building bills, among them one appropriating $150,000 for a public building at Duluth. This is a house bill, and no report beyond the report made in the house was filed with it. It will pass the senate at an early date without opposition. It also acted favorably upon the bill providing for the erection of a new public building at St. Paul, the limit of cost being placed at $1,000,000.

The announcement which was made in congress early in the session that there was to be a reform in the matter of delegates to the national conventions this year, and that no congressmen in either party would be chosen as delegates, is not borne out by facts. So many will go as delegates, observers and manipulators, that their absence will result in serious interference with congressional business. Excursions of various sorts have been already planned for both conventions, and several special trains will leave Washington for St. Louis and Chicago. Mr. Edmunds has ventured the opinion that congress may be in session in September.

Items About People.

George H. Marsh, a prominent banker of Des Moines and president of the state insurance company, died, aged fifty-two. He was a prominent member of the Knights Templar and other orders.

Charles A. Howard, of Milwaukee, a widely known Mason, whose financial circumstances have heretofore been only moderately comfortable, has been notified by a Chicago lawyer of a bequest left him of over $1,000,000 by an aunt, Mrs. Mary Howard, of Kent, Yorkshire, Eng., who Howard supposed had disinherited him.

A large number of literary and political personages assembled in the Jerusalem chamber of Westminster Abbey in London to consider the best means of honoring the memory of Matthew Arnold. The speakers were Lord Derby, Lord Coleridge, Lord Rosebery and Robert Browning, who all concurred in the proposal to raise a memorial to Mr. Arnold in the abbey, and to found a scholarship in his name in Oxford University. The proposal was afterward agreed to by all present.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, the highest in rank of living officers of the Confederate army, has been unanimously elected an honorary member of E. D. Decker post, G. A. R., of Philadelphia. The election was brought about by a letter reading: "For the purpose of enabling me to participate in the noble work of charity performed by the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, I hereby make application for contributing membership in your post. Inclosed please find $10 for one year's dues." The petition when presented to the post went through with a rush amid cheers. Gen. Johnston is the only ex-Confederate soldier who has ever been received into the ranks of a Grand Army post.

Samuel Hill of Minnesota, who has just returned from Europe, brings some corroborative information in regard to the physical condition of James G. Blaine, gathered principally during his sojourn at Paris and Florence. He saw him quite frequently walking on the boulevards of Paris and afterward at Florence, Italy, where the Hill party remained for two months. While in Florence Mr. Hill conversed with intimate friends of Mr. Blaine who had traveled with him during last summer in England and Ireland, and both from personal appearance and the unvarying testimony of these friends, Mr. Hill was fully convinced that he was then anything but a well man. Mr. Hill added that from all he could learn from Mr. Blaine's friends at Florence his disease was believed to be incurable.

Crimes and Criminals.

Burglars entered "Mark Twain's" house at Hartford, Conn., and stole his shoes, two overcoats, some napkin rings and other small articles.

The dead body of Edward Jackson, a young man of Beloit, Wis., was found in a freight car in the yard of the Chicago & Northwestern road in that city. He had been associating with tramps and there were some evidences of foul play.

Frank Hart, aged twenty-eight, a mechanic, while drunk went into Pat Mitchell's saloon in Cincinnati and locked the door after him. He declared his intention to whip the whole crowd. Mitchell ordered him out, but Hart became so belligerent that Mitchell drew his revolver and fired twice with fatal effect. The wounded man died shortly after. Mitchell was arrested.

Gen. Wirt Adams, postmaster of Jackson, Miss., and John Martin, editor of the New Mississippian, fought a street duel and both were killed. Gen. Adams was hit in the head, and Martin was hit twice. An abusive article published in the New Mississippian, was the immediate cause of the tragedy, though a breach has long existed between the two men.

Two masked men halted the Lakeport stage near Cloverdale, Cal., and stole the box of Wells, Fargo & Co. Constable Abraham Crigler and Samuel Allen left Cloverdale on receipt of the news and overtook the robbers at Profile Rock in the mountains. One of them shot Crigler through the heart, killing him. Allen fired, but both the robbers slid down a steep precipice and escaped. A posse has started after them from Cloverdale. The amount stolen is not known.

H. Bowdrie, industrial instructor of the government school at Sisseton agency, Dakota, became enraged at an Indian who refused to do his bidding and threw a stone, which struck the Indian on the back of the head, since which time he has laid in a semi-comatose condition. The agency physician says the man's chances for life or death are about even. Bowdrie was arrested and tried for the assault at the agency, but the only punishment he received was that Indian Agent Jenkins called for his resignation, which Bowdrie refused to give. The agent has reported the matter to the department.

The Rev. Edgar L. Heermance, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church in the village of White Plains, New York, shot himself while in his church. Mr. Heermance's resignation was asked for some months ago in consequence of dissatisfaction arising between himself and the church members over his salary. At the time of his suicide he was sitting within the chancel in conversation with the gray-haired sexton and was perfectly rational. Mr. Heermance was a man of great learning, but was somewhat eccentric in his ideas. At New Haven he formed the acquaintance of ex-President Woolsey's daughter, whom he married some twenty years ago.

The New York Times says that while the body of the venerable George H. Potts lay in its coffin awaiting burial, rumor began to toy with the affairs of the National Park Bank (of which he was president) for the first time in the history of that institution. Later investigation showed the rumors to be correct. An official whose twenty years of service in the bank had led to implicit confidence in his honesty had taken from its funds nearly $100,000 by an ingenious system of falsifying the books over which he had control. None of the bank officials would say who the guilty party is, but suspicion points to Charles De Baun, assistant cashier of the bank, who had been absent during the day, and there was no certainty in regard to his coming back.

The Emin Bey relief committee are confident that Stanley is safe, and that he is pushing his way to the region between the Congo river and Albert Nyanza. A dispatch from Zanzibar confirms the story that Stanley has bent his steps toward Wadelai, via Makuna Wells to avoid some swamps, and therefore Emin Bey's party would fail to hear of him.

Advices have been received at Zanzibar from Emin Bey, dated Nov. 2, stating that he had been reconnoitering for Stanley, but had heard nothing of him up to that time. Emin himself was well, and his relations with the chiefs and the people in the vicinity of his station were satisfactory. Stanley's relief stores had reached Usambiro. His mails were at Uganda, where the Arabs were hostile and treacherous.

The trial at Loughrea of Mr. William O'Brien, M. P., and editor of United Ireland, of Dublin, was concluded and Mr. O'Brien was convicted and sentenced to three month's imprisonment. Mr. O'Brien was charged with violating the crimes act by advising people in a proclaimed district to join the league. On the second charge, that of holding a league meeting, Mr. O'Brien was acquitted. On the third charge, that he had incited the people to hold a league meeting, his trial was begun, but was adjourned before any conclusion had been reached.

The New York Sun has a cablegram from London, saying that the Sun's Berlin correspondent, Blakely Hall, is unable to send telegrams and letters from Berlin, describing the real situation there, on account of the rigid censorship maintained by the government. He has conveyed to London secretly the following information: There are grave fears of a social uprising. The crown prince is protected by extraordinary police precautions whenever he appears in public. The social democratic party is alarmingly active, and is flooding Germany with seditious documents, which the police are busy in confiscating. Some of the pamphlets issued revile the crown prince and accuse him of ruining daughters of the people.

Record of Casualties.

Fire was discovered in the lumber yard of the Chippewa Lumber Company at Chippewa Lake, 10 miles from Big Rapids, Mich. Hundreds of men from the village and camps turned out and directed their efforts to the saving of the two mills. A strong wind prevailed and in two hours the most extensive private lumber yard in the state was a sea of fire. By hard work the mills were saved, but from 10,000,000 to 13,000,000 feet of lumber were destroyed. The loss is estimated at not less than $120,000, and the insurance $100,000.

A terrible accident occurred at Rushylvania, Ohio. A school exhibition was in progress in a hall situated in the second story of a brick building. The hall seats about four hundred people, and was crowded. Suddenly the floor gave way with a frightful crash. It sank in the center, funnel shape, and the entire audience went down in a surging mass a distance of twenty feet. Two persons were killed, ten or twelve dangerously hurt, and probably fifty others are more or less seriously injured. A number of ladies and children were taken out, some of them unhurt, with their clothing torn completely off.

The Iowa Pharmaceutical Association resolved that all members should let their permits lapse and not renew them.

Will Hubbard Kernan, the former editor of the Okolona States, has started a paper called the Free Lance at Kansas City.

The great strike at the Edgar Thompson steel works was declared off by District Master Workman Doyle, of the Knights of Labor.

The committee on admission of delegates to the Methodist conference, decided against the admission of women delegates and declared their seats vacant.

All the boys employed as "off-helpers" in the brick yards of Kansas struck for an advance from $1 to $1.25. Their demands were acceded to in all but two yards, leaving 60 of the strikers.

The city of St. Paul, for the first time in about twenty years, has elected a republican city council. Out of seventeen members, eleven are republican. About nineteen thousand votes were polled, but there was only two-thirds of the voters registered.

The first Sunday under the operation of the new Ohio liquor law found a few defiant saloonkeepers in the outskirts of Cincinnati and on the hilltops selling liquor, but as a general thing the law was observed, and the effect was noticeable in the absence of drunken people on the streets. Out of 2,200 saloons about fifty were reported by the police as being open in violation of the law.

The directors of the Minneapolis & Pacific, Minneapolis, Sault Ste. Marie & Atlantic, Minneapolis & St. Croix and Aberdeen, Bismarck & Northwestern roads have formally approved the articles of consolidation of the four companies. The action of the directors will now be submitted for the approval of the stockholders of the several lines. When the consolidation is approved by the stockholders the names of the four lines will be changed to the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie.

The celebrated case between the Pullman and Wagner Car companies in regard to the vestibule trains was decided by Judges Gresham and Blodgett in favor of the Pullman company and enjoining the Wagner company from a further use of these trains. The decision is based on the validity of the Pullman patents, completely refuting the claim of the Wagners that the vestibule cars have been long in use in other countries before Pullman obtained his patents. The decision gives the Pullman company the monopoly of the manufacture of vestibule cars in this country.

There have been whisperings in Albany, N. Y., of a possible effort to impeach the governor on the grounds already developed by the Fassett investigation committee. Senator Fassett's absence gave some color to the suggestion that he was preparing articles of impeachment. While the Fassett committee will continue its investigations after the legislature has adjourned any steps toward impeachment must be taken within ten days before the legislature has dissolved. It is doubtful whether there is enough developed in the testimony upon which to successfully inaugurate impeachment proceedings.

A sensation has been caused in the divorce suit of S. W. Rawson, the Chicago banker, by the arrest of a colored servant girl named Sarah Deneat, who some days ago gave testimony before Examiner Hine as a witness for the banker. The warrant was sworn out by Mrs. Rawson at the suggestion of her counsel. The warrant charges that said witness' testimony regarding alleged criminal intimacy with Judge Lochrane was false in every particular and that the witness did commit wilful and corrupt perjury. Mrs. Rawson says that all reports to prove that she was or is a bad woman, have failed, and expects to establish the charge of perjury in this case and trace it back to the persons who she says induced the woman Deneat to make statements that she did.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Senate and House.

SENATE.

The resolution offered last week by Mr. Hale calling on the secretary of the interior for information as to appointments in his department below the civil service grade since March, '85, was taken up and adopted.

The following Senate bills were taken from the calendar and passed.

For public buildings at Youngstown, O., $100,000, and Akron, O., $75,000. To authorize the secretary of the treasury to re-examine and reaudit the claim of the state of Pennsylvania for advances made and money advanced to pay the militia called in the service under the President's proclamation of the 15th of June, 1863.

The senate then proceeded to the consideration of the railroad and forfeiture bill.

HOUSE.

The tariff debate in the house was opened by Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, who attacked the bill. Discussing the speech of Mr. Nelson of Minnesota, he quoted that portion of the speech in which the gentleman put free wool and free lumber against free whisky and free tobacco. When the gentleman undertook to put the Republicans who urged the appeal of the internal revenue law in the position of favoring free whisky and free tobacco he made a great mistake. The proposition to repeal the tax on whisky was to remit the power of taxation to the states, and to permit the states to take the place of the general government. Mr. Rayner of Maryland criticised severely the trusts of the country, especially the Standard Oil, which he pronounced as one of fraud, corruption and oppression.

Mr. Lind presented resolutions adopted by the board of railroad commissioners of Minnesota asking congress to authorize the interstate commerce committee to require the adoption of safety appliances on trains; also a petition from the Grand Army of Minnesota asking an appropriation of $200,000 for headstones for graves of soldiers.

SENATE.

The day was given up to the speech of Ingalls of Kansas in reply to Senator Voorhees of Indiana which is said to have been one of the savagest personal philippics ever heard in the Senate. The situation is thus related by a reporter. Mr. Voorhees is left by the speech in a peculiar position. Mr. Ingalls, invited by Voorhees' attack upon himself to assume that Voorhees was one of the noted Union leaders of the war, looked into his military record, and unearthed the famous speech of Voorhees, reported to have been delivered at Greencastle, Ind., in 1864. In that speech Abraham Lincoln was called by the most infamous names. Voorhees simply denies that the speech is his own. It happens that the speech was reported by Joseph S. McCulloch, now editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The friends of Mr. McCulloch state that his accuracy and honor being impeached, he will put Mr. Voorhees to his proofs. Mr. Voorhees made the mistake after uttering his denial of Mr. Ingalls' charges of wandering off into a long eulogy of himself and his services. When he sat down the senator from Kansas again rose and with a merciless hand showered upon the Indianian letters, reprints of speeches, pamphlets, documentary evidence and letters in Voorhees' own handwriting, going to prove the dallying with treason which the Tall Sycamore of the Wabash had indulged in through the war. At each fresh charge Voorhees would spring up and shout that it was false. But his protests became more and more feeble until Ingalls sat down, and then he rose. In a voice mellow with suppressed tears, he struck out at Ingalls, but he could only repeat, "It's a lie; it has been answered by my people." Finally Ingalls rose and asked, "Did not the soldiers on a train in Indiana threaten to hang you with the bell cord at one time?" Voorhees in wild rage yelled, "When the senator from Kansas states that he is a liar. I repeat it, a liar, and he can pass it on to the man behind him (Johnson of Indiana) who informed." There was a sensation in the galleries, but Ingalls simply smiled and Voorhees set down trembling like a leaf. During the cross fire of words Voorhees called Ingalls "a great liar and a dirty dog" and compared him to a peacock on a barnyard fence. Voorhees insisted that he had always been the true friend of the Union soldier.

HOUSE.

No business transacted.

SENATE.

After the transaction of routine business the Senate went into executive session. This being the first secret session for several days, the accumulation of nominations by the President, among them that of Mr. Fuller to be chief justice, were referred to committees and a number of reports, mostly upon postmasters, were made by committees.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the railroad land grant forfeiture bill. Mr. Dawes offered an amendment providing that the act shall not be considered to impair any rights, legal or equitable, now vested in any person or corporation to any of the lands declared forfeited.

After further discussion, participated in by Senator Dawes, Hoar, Palmer and Berry, an amendment was offered by Mr. Hoar (as a substitute for that of Mr. Dawes, which was withdrawn) providing that the act shall not be construed to prejudice the right of the Portage Lake Canal Company or any person claiming under it to apply hereafter to the courts or to Congress for any legal or equitable relief to which they may be now entitled.

After further discussion the bill went over. The senate then resumed consideration of the bill for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry.

Mr. Paddock made a speech in support of it, defending it both on constitutional and economical grounds. The bill was then temporarily laid aside.

The Duluth public building bill was passed.

HOUSE.

The House went into committee of the whole (Mr. Springer, of Illinois, in the chair) on the tariff bill. Mr. Wilson, of Minnesota, denounced the protective system. He was opposed to the present tariff because, while it enriched the few, it prevented the expansion of our industries, and because it was especially unjust to the agricultural interest.

Speeches were also made by Messrs. McComas, Lanham, Allen and Caruth.

The committee then rose.

A Senate bill was passed to establish an additional land district in Oregon.

There were but a half dozen members present at the House evening session. Mr. Stewart of Georgia, spoke against protection, and Mr. Davis, of Massachusetts, in its favor.

SENATE.

The Senate resumed consideration of the railroad land grant forfeiture bill, the question being on the amendment offered yesterday by Mr. Hoar.

Mr. Hoar withdrew his amendment, with the explanation that Mr. Palmer desired to offer one which accomplished what he (Hoar) intended to accomplish and something else.

After a long discussion, participated in by Senators Spooner, Berry, Palmer, Dolph, Teller and Call, the bill went over without action on the amendment.

The Senate then resumed consideration of the bill for the establishment of the bureau of animal industry and to facilitate the exportation of livestock and their products.

Mr. Palmer addressed the Senate in support of the bill.

HOUSE.

The house went into committee of the whole (Mr. Springer, of Illinois, in the chair) on the tariff bill. Mr. Wilson of West Virginia, (a member of the ways and means committee) made a speech in support of the measure.

As Mr. Wilson concluded he was rapturously applauded by his party friends, while many republicans joined in the compliment, and amid cries of "vote," members crowded around Mr. Wilson and warmly congratulated him upon his speech.

Mr. Dingley of Maine spoke against the bill and Mr. McKinney of New Hampshire in its favor. The committee then rose.

The bill was passed authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri river at or near Omaha, Neb. An amendment was agreed to providing that the bridge should not be located less than a third of a mile from any other bridge now built or in process of construction.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

The tariff bill occupied the day, Congressman McDonald of Minnesota, Guenther, of Wisconsin and Henderson, of Illinois, getting in their speeches to empty seats.

Mr. Cox, of New York, presented for appropriate references a memorial from Gens. Schofield and Slocum and other members of the army of the Potomac asking for an appropriation of $25,000 to aid in meeting the expenses of the fraternal reunion of the survivors of the Army of the Potomac and the Armies of Northern Virginia, to be held on the battlefield of Gettysburg in July next, to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the conflict.

The Chirombo.

My introduction to them occurred on the borders of Lake Shirwa—one of the smaller and less known of the great African lakes—and I shall record the incident exactly as I find it in my notes. I had stopped one day among some tall, dry grass to mark a reading of the aneroid, when one of my men suddenly shouted, "Chirombo!" "Chirombo" means an inedible beast of any kind, and I turned around to see where the animal was. The native pointed straight at myself. I could see nothing, but he approached, and pointing close to a wisp of hay which had fallen upon my coat, repeated, "Chirombo." Believing it must be some insect among the hay, I took it in my fingers, looked over it, and told him pointedly there was no "Chirombo" there. He smiled, and, pointing again to the hay, exclaimed, "Moio!" "It's alive!" The hay itself was the Chirombo. I do not exaggerate when I say that that wisp of hay was no more like an insect than my aneroid barometer. I had mentally resolved never to be taken in by any of these mimetic frauds; I was incredulous enough to suspect that the descriptions of Wallace and the others were somewhat highly colored; but I confess to have been completely stultified and beaten by the very first mimetic form I met. It was one of that very remarkable family, the Phasmidæ, but surely nowhere else in nature could there be such another creature. Take two inches of dried yellow grass stalk, such as one might pluck to run through the stem of a pipe; then take six other pieces nearly as long and a quarter as thick, bend each in the middle at any angle you like, stick them in three opposite pairs, and again at any angle you like upon the first grass stalk, and you have my Chirombo. When you catch him, his limbs are twisted about at every angle, as if the whole were made of one long stalk of the most delicate grass, hinged in a dozen places, and then gently crushed up into a disheveled heap. Having once assumed a position, by a wonderful instinct, he never moves or varies one of his many angles by half a degree. The way this instinct keeps up the delusion is indeed almost as wonderful as the mimicry itself; you may turn him about, and over and over, but he is mere dried grass, and nothing will induce him to acknowledge the animal kingdom, by the faintest suspicion of spontaneous movement. All the members of this family have this power of shamming death; but how such emaciated and juiceless skeletons should ever presume to be alive is the real mystery. These Phasmidæ look more like ghosts than living creatures, and so slim are they that, in trying to kill them for the collection box, the strongest squeeze between the finger and thumb makes no more impression upon them than it would upon fine steel wire, and one has to half guillotine them against some hard substance before any little life they have is sacrificed to science.—Good Words.

Decidedly Queer

From the Atlanta Constitution.

When an exceptionally warm day comes along, our Northern visitors are loud in their expressions of delight. On the other hand, when we have a touch of cold weather, they shiver under their heavy wrappings and utter vigorous complaints.

This is strange. One would naturally suppose that the Northerner in the South would object to the heat, and feel braced up on a cold day. Southerners, however, are just as peculiar. When they find themselves in Chicago in the dead of winter, with the thermometer 20 deg. below zero, they take the streets and enjoy themselves. Old Chicagoans walking with them have their noses frozen and are ready to succumb, but the tourists from the Sunny South are at their best. But, when the summer comes, the Southerners who are caught in the Northern cities pant and blow, and declare that the heat is killing them.

But it does not pan out this way all the time. In his second winter in the North the Southerner yields to the rigorous climate, and the Northerner down South begins to enter his protest against the long summers.

Perhaps the explanation is to be found in the fact that the change of climate is at first a tonic. Later, the tourist, whether North or South, relapses into his normal condition, and what pleased him at first worries him. Of course there is still another stage with most people. They become acclimated, and then they are all right. Men from the far North have led an active life in the South for fifty years, and Southerners transplanted to the North have thoroughly accustomed themselves to the climate.

Generally, however, the Southerner who goes North, and the Northerner who comes South, feel braced up at first, and then suffer a relapse. It is only after acclimatization that they are affected by the climate in their new homes just as their neighbors are affected.

Crimp Sister Crimp.

My child, do you know why your hair curls when you run a hot poker or slate-pencil wearily through your bangs? No, you do not. But every school girl ought to know the reason of this familiar phenomenon. It is because the moisture on the side next the iron being evaporated by the heat the cells in that part approach each other more closely, and this shrinking of one side causes a bend or curve. Crimp, sister, crimp with care; if your poker is too hot you will lose your hair.—Ex.

Senator Ingalls Shows Up the War Record of Voorhees of Indiana.

He Accuses the Hoosier of Sympathy With Secession and Proves His Charge.

One of the Bitterest Attacks Upon the South Ever Heard in the Senate.

LAYS OUT VOORHEES.

The Recent Speech of the Indiana Senator Receives From Mr. Ingalls a Most Scathing Reply.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, May 1.—If any one has any doubts as to the position of Senator Ingalls with respect to the Union soldiers and the war issues after his notable speech in the senate to-day, he must, as Mr. Ingalis puts it, be either stupid or disingenuous, or both. It is the lot of few men in congress to have such an audience as Mr. Ingalls had to-day. It was an audience such as none of his opponents can command. The tariff debate was proceeding in the house; but most of the afternoon there were present in the hall of the house only the chairman of the committee of the whole and the speaker who was addressing the chair. The rest of the representatives were for the most part present in the senate chamber. Every vacant bench in the senate chamber was occupied. In the galleries the diplomatic gallery was so packed that the stairs were used as seats, and all of them were occupied, while in the other galleries there was not a vacant inch. The seat which is reserved for the family of the president was occupied by the wives of two of the cabinet officers. If they came to hear what the greatest master of sarcasm and vituperation in the senate had to say of the president, they went away disappointed, for Mr. Ingalls had little to say of Mr. Cleveland. He paid his respects to his accusers, and gave them something to think of.

MR. INGALLS' WORDS.

Senator Ingalls said:

On July 11 last, Maj. Gen. Fitz John Porter, now on the retired list, wrote a letter in which he thanked his friends, and said that his heart was always with them, although at one time his hand and heart had worked the best that they knew how against them. The senator from Indiana had complained last Wednesday that an attempt had been made to blacken the names of the military leaders in the last war who remained true to the Democratic party. Fitz John Porter had been one of these. Mr. Ingalls spoke of Gen. McClellan's education at West Point, with his business connection with Beauregard, and with his attempt to continue and extend human slavery by the acquisition of Cuba. He began his military career by disobeying the orders of Gen. Scott, he abandoned Pope at Centerville, failed to put the rebels to the sword at Antietam, refused to obey the orders of the president and follow the rebels to Winchester; and as fatally controlled the destiny of the army until the battle of Fredericksburg. History has pronounced its verdict upon him as a soldier, and Voorhees would not be able to place him on the category with Napoleon, Hannibal and Cæsar. Gen. Hancock also was one of the military leaders who were true to the Democracy. His martial career was one of the imperishable heritages of American glory. He marched and triumphed. He filled the abyss of fame with names which would be eternal, luminous—the peninsula, Antietam, Gettysburg, Chancellorsville, Cold Harbor and Petersburg. Had he been a soldier under Napoleon, he would have been a prince and marshal of the empire. He had been well called Hancock "the superb." But after the war closed he (like McClellan) had become tainted with the fatal virus of an ambition for the presidential nomination. But notwithstanding his magnificent and unapproachable career, the American people recognized his hostility to the reconstruction measures, and in the presidential election of 1880 he carried but three Northern states—California, Nevada and New Jersey—and the first two of them had been stolen by the forgery and fraud of the Morey letter issued by Democratic politicians. He had also received the 138 electoral votes of the solid South, which had been promised him in his speech at Cincinnati by the senator from South Carolina (Mr. Hampton). If Voorhees and Blackburn did not know that he (Ingalls) had spoken of these Union generals not as soldiers, but as politicians, and as Democratic candidates for the presidency, they were dull, stupid and ignorant, indeed. If they did know it, and persisted in their assertions, they were disingenuous, and he suspected that they were both.

HE IS DOUBTFUL.

I began to have some doubt who it was that really put down the Rebellion. I was driven curiously to inquire what was the attitude of the Democratic party in the North and of the senator from Indiana as one of its great leaders in 1862, when McClellan, the ideal Democrat, was fighting the battle of Antietam; in 1863, when Hancock was creating confusion and dismay among the scattered squadrons of the Confederacy. I was really, for the moment, inclined to believe that the Democratic party, and the senator from Indiana and those other great patriots, whom he eulogizes as immovable bulwarks of liberty, of the constitution and the Union, Mr. Thomas Hendricks and Mr. Horatio Seymour, and Mr. William A. Richardson, were in full panoply of battle, assisting McClellan, assisting Hancock, doing what they could to make the success of the armies possible. And, it seems like the very climax of effrontery for these men, whose history is so well known, who were from the beginning the avowed enemies of the cause of the Union at every step of its progress, and who, like the senator from Indiana, were avowedly in sympathy with the South at the outset and were advocates and apologists for slavery and secession, who gave aid and comfort to the rebellion in every possible way—the "copperheads," the "butternuts," the "Knights of the Golden Circle," with all their brutal, degraded lies, appearing here as the advocates and champions of the Union cause and of the cause of human liberty. During the very year when McClellan was fighting the battle of Antietam, the senator from Indiana, speaking at Sullivan, Ind., on Aug. 5, 1862, said, in reference to Union soldiers, that they should go to the nearest blacksmith shop and have iron collars made and placed around their necks, inscribed thereon in large letters, 'My dog. A. Lincoln.' And, at the same time, he referred to Union soldiers as Lincoln's dogs and hirelings, without excepting McClellan or Hancock." Mr. Ingalls read extracts from a speech made by Voorhees Aug. 7, 1864, which declared the war a failure and spoke of Lincoln as a monster and an unhappy felon. The title of Mr. Hayes to the presidency, said Mr. Ingalls, was the most absolutely irrefragable of any in the whole list of American presidents, because it was the only one which was ever passed upon by a constitutional tribunal properly organized for that purpose. Hon. Henry Watterson issued his celebrated proclamation, calling on 100,000 "unarmed Kentuckians" to visit Washington on the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, for the purpose of superintending the electoral count. He (Ingalls) had had a conversation with President Grant shortly after the issuing of that proclamation, and had asked him if he thought there was going to be any trouble. Gen. Grant had paused a moment and, with that deliberate method which characterized his utterances, replied: "No, I don't think there is going to be any trouble; but it has been one rule of my life to be always ready." And he was ready. In obedience to some mysterious impulse, troops, parks of artillery and munitions of war had begun to come to the capital.

CLEVELAND AND LAMAR.

Mr. Cleveland had apparently a warranty deed for the seat which he occupied, and yet compared with the title which Mr. Hayes had to his seat, he was in possession of stolen goods, and the receiver was as bad as the thief. In the court of justice and fair conscience he had never been elected at all. He had been counted in to office by a partnership between Dick Turpin and Uriah Heep, footpads and sneak thieves, Cartouche and Pecksniff; and it was some consolation to know that in that partnership, the apostates and renegades had lost their snare of the swag. The country had still against it the Southern Confederacy. Who was Lucius Quintus Curtius Lamar? He never was suspected of being a lawyer. It was an open secret that the president at one time peremptorily refused to appoint him. He asked what necessity there had been for the president to affront the loyal sentiment of the country by placing on the bench of the supreme court a man who was not a lawyer and never had been, and who had called Abraham Lincoln a buffoon. It was because Mr. Lamar was the nearest and dearest friend and representative of Jefferson Davis. There was no other explanation of it. If that was not true, then his nomination was a farce and a burlesque, without excuse and without explanation. Mr. Ingalls then referred to a speech made in the house of representatives in 1870 by Mr Blackburn, declaring it to be the purpose and intention of the Democratic party to keep on until it wiped out from the statute book the last vestige of war legislation. He said that within the next few years the supreme court would be entirely reconstructed, and if that tribunal was to pass hereafter on the war legislation, all know what the result would be. The Republican party would have no right to complain if the South were kept solid by fair means. But the Democratic party had been playing the political game with loaded dice; had been "throwing sixes" all the time; had held "stacked cards;" played with a "cold deck," had a revolver in its boot and a bowie knife down the back of its neck. There were every day wrongs inflicted on thousands and hundreds of thousands of men in the Southern states, which, if inflicted by a foreign power on a single American citizen, even the least of one of them, my little ones, there would be a declaration of war within ninety days—even with the present secretary of state in office. The Democratic party in the South have learned the art not only of making elections unanimous, but of making them more than unanimous. It had learned the art of returning a larger Democratic majority than the registered vote. He read letters and statements from Republican sources detailing acts of outrage and cheating at the recent Louisian election, and declared his belief that fair counts would have shown Warmoth elected by a majority of 83,000 or 84,000.

He closed with an eloquent peroration on liberty and constitutional government.

MR. VOORHEES' PREDICAMENT.

Mr. Voorhees is left by the speech in a peculiar position. Mr. Ingalls, invited by Voorhees attack upon himself to assume that Voorhees was one of the noted Union leaders of the war, looked into his military record and, as above noted, unearthed the famous speech of Voorhees, reported to have been delivered at Greencastle, Ind., in 1864. In that speech Abraham Lincoln was called by the most infamous names. Voorhees simply denies that the speech is his own. It happens that the speech was reported by Joseph S. McCulloch, now editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The friends of Mr. McCulloch state that his accuracy and honor being impeached, he will put Mr. Voorhees to his proofs. Mr. Voorhees made the mistake after uttering his denial of Mr. Ingalls' charges of wandering off into a long eulogy of himself and his services. When he sat down the senator from Kansas again rose and with a merciless hand showered upon the unfortunate Indianian letters, reprints of speeches, pamphlets, documentary evidence and letters in Voorhees' own handwriting, going to prove the dallying with treason which the Tall Sycamore of the Wabash had indulged in through the war. At each fresh charge Voorhees would spring up and shout that it was false. But his protests became more and more feeble until Ingalls sat down, and then he rose. In a voice he struck out at Ingalls, but he could only repeat, "It's a lie; it has been answered by my people." Finally Ingalls rose and asked, "Did not the soldiers on a train in Indiana threaten to hang you with the bell cord at one time?" Voorhees in wild rage yelled, "When the senator from Kansas states that he is a liar. I repeat it, a liar, and he can pass it on to the man behind him (Johnson of Indiana) who informed." There was a sensation in the galleries, but Ingalls simply smiled contemptuously and Voorhees sat down trembling like a leaf. During the cross fire of words Voorhees called Ingalls "a great liar and a dirty dog" and compared him to a peacock on a barnyard fence. Voorhees insisted that he had always been the true friend of the Union soldier. Eustis of Louisiana indignantly repelled some of Mr. Ingalls' offensive allusions to the people of that state, and Gibson accused the Kansas senator of maligning the Southern people.

MELLOW WITH SUPPRESSED TEARS,

Light on Lucerne.

I was told at Greely and elsewhere in Colorado, that while green lucerne (alfalfa) was not fit food for horses doing hard and fast work, because it kept the bowels too loose (after the manner of timothy cut and cured at or before the blossoming period), for other horses doing slow work, and for farm teams, there was no objection to it. After a trial of several months the street-car companies of Denver, the superintendent said, rejected alfalfa hay for the reason stated; but when a horse was turned out for recuperation and rest, his rations were green and dry alfalfa. In Continental Europe, especially in the Southern portions where the main dependence for late summer green forage is alfalfa, the authorities say it is less liable to cause bloat than common red clover. It is easy to understand how in Colorado and Utah, where the ranch ranges do not bear grass enough; if mown to yield 200 pounds of hay per acre, and where cattle have to be on the pasture and feeding from sun up to sun down and then lie down on half filled stomachs, how the half starved creatures when turned upon a field of alfalfa would eat so fast and so much as to produce fatal bloating.

But where cattle (as in the best pastures of Illinois) in timothy, blue grass and clover up to their knees, spend one hour's feeding and sauntering, to six hours of the day lying down and ruminating, there would be no more danger in a rank growth of alfalfa than if it were clover, and none in either case. The cattle would be too full of green forage to eat enough to hurt them. As green forage or hay, alfalfa is inferior to timothy, and the clovers white and red and far inferior to blue grass for pasture, and where the grasses and clovers named are certain to be abundant, there is little call for alfalfa; but in these vast sections of the West, subject to annual drouth, and other sections East liable to periodic visitations of the same character, the value of alfalfa as a forage crop cannot be overestimated. All of the soils east or west of the mountains, where irrigation makes the crops, are good soils and rich compared with Eastern soils, and they will, therefore, yield large crops of alfalfa, but in the Valley of the Mississippi and further East, where the annual rainfall makes the crops, only such soils as in wet or dry seasons produce good crops of wheat, oats, corn and red clover will grow it successfully, and on such soils the crop will be all the more luxuriant if the land be biennially treated to a liberal dose of the potash and phosphate fertilizers.—B. F. Johnson.

A HUSBAND'S REPENTANCE.

"You do not mean it, Frank. You cannot mean it."

Merle Arlington stood before her husband, her small hands clasped tightly together and her large blue eyes filled to over-flowing with tears.

"Indeed I do mean it, and I deny your right to question me so closely. Merle, if I had as little confidence in you as you appear to have in me, I would not live with you another day."

"Oh! Frank! what do you mean?"

"Just what I say. Sometimes I think it would have been better if you and I had never met."

And saying this Frank Arlington took up his coat and turned his back upon upon his young wife.

Poor Merle! she drew in her breath with a sob and the tears coursed down her pale, thin cheeks that once were so plump and rosy.

Frank Arlington took no notice of this. He had allowed his temper to get the better of him, and when once angry he never hesitated what to say or do.

Pausing, with his hand upon his head, he said coldly: "Well, I am going now, I was coming home early to night, but I have changed my mind and will not be home until late."

"Ah! Frank don't say that, do come home early. It is my great love for you that makes me so anxious, and I worry so much about you, if you only would listen to me Frank. If you would only give up going with Jack Caulton and others of his set and——"

"There, begin that again, and I'll promise you I'll never come home,' he interrupted angrily, and closing the door behind him with no gentle force he was gone.

Merle Arlington stood motionless where her husband had left her trying to realize what had happened.

They had been married nearly four years, and this was not their first quarrel, for the past six months they had been very unhappy, but Frank had never spoken quite so rudely to her before.

Frank Arlington was not at heart a bad man, but he was inclined to spend his time playing cards, and of late had lost considerable money. He was easily led, and his companions were not such as would tend to arouse the good in him; on the contrary, Jack Caulton and his followers spent their time in gambling and Frank Arlington was completely in their influence.

The evening before our story opens he had not reached home until past two o'clock and it was when his young wife had remonstrated with him that he had lost his temper and spoken words any man might well be ashamed of having uttered.

Poor Merle! she had married Frank Arlington against the wishes of her parents and friends and now she was made to suffer for it.

Turning, she went slowly upstairs to their little sitting room and softly opened the door, as if afraid of disturbing some one.

Crossing the room she lifted the heavy drapery that divided the sitting room from their sleeping department and softly approached a little crib.

Here she sank down upon her knees and gazed with loving tear-dimmed eyes at the little golden head nestling among the lace covered pillows; evidently baby's dream was a happy one, for the red lips were parted in a sweet smile.

At last the sleepy blue eyes opened and baby laughed aloud and put up one dimpled hand to pat her mother's face.

Merle clasped the little form in her arms, and kissed the sweet baby face as she murmured:

"Oh! my little innocent darling, papa does not love us any more; he has gone without kissing you good-by. Oh! baby, my heart is breaking," and, laying her head down on baby's pillow, Merle cried until she was exhausted

When she grew calmer she sat up and tried to think. The tears still glistened on her long lashes, and her face was deathly pale.

She would go away, of that she was quite certain, but where—that was the question, where could she go?

Her husband had ceased to love her had spoken words she could not forget, and she could not remain with him longer. Yes, she would go away.

She packed a small satchel with a few necessary articles for little Daisy and herself, and taking a photograph of her husband (taken in the dear old days when they were so happy) from a little case on the table, she looked at it long and earnestly, then brushing away the tears that blinded her eyes, she quickly placed it in the satchel, and taking baby in her arms she put on its little cloak and bonnet. How sweet she looked, dear little pet, as she ran up and down the room calling for "Papa" and trying to catch the pretty sunshine that made a golden patch across the carpet.

Happy baby, too young to realize her mother's sufferings, too young to know that she was leaving home forever.

Merle clasped her child in her arms and kissed the laughing face, then she closed the door behind them and started in the direction of the depot.

* * * * * * * *

"Come on, Arlington, over to the club rooms and let's have a game of cards, perhaps you can square yourself to-night, old fellow," said Jack Caulton, as he linked his arm in that of Frank Arlington and offered him a cigar.

"Not to-night, Jack, I—"

"There, no refusal, Arlington. I am going to New York to-morrow and this is your last chance to get even," interrupted Jack Caulton, as he led the way the club rooms.

Frank Arlington gave just one hasty thought to Merle, his wife, waiting for him through all the long, weary evening. But, alas! the thought of her was not strong enough to make him refuse to play. He felt ashamed when he recalled the events of the morning, and he made up his mind he would not stay late, but he must get even with Caulton, now he had the chance.

The hours passed on swiftly, Frank Arlington was still unlucky, still the loser.

Just as the clock chimed out eleven the door opened and a voice called out: "A telegram for Frank Arlington; is he here?"

And when it was handed to him he took it mechanically, glanced carelessly at the subscription and laid it unopened on the table. The room was ghostly still, the sharp click of the chips as they were pushed to the center of the table by nervous fingers, only to make the silence more pronounced.

Now and then a half muttered curse forced its way through tightly compressed lips and shot across the almost deserted room like an invisible missile of death.

The pile of red and white ivory chips in the center of the table grew higher, and the white faces about the table grew whiter, and harsher and less human.

The hands were called and Arlington slowly rose to his feet, his last dollar gone to swell the purse of his pretended friend, Jack Caulton. He leaned against the table, and his hand fell upon the telegram. He took it up and slowly broke the seal. It read as follows:

"To Frank Arlington—Come at once. Railroad accident at Poltonsville. Your wife is dangerously hurt; little child killed.
Signed R. J. POLTON, Supt."

Frank Arlington's face was as white as death. "My God, boys, what does this mean. My wife hurt in a railroad accident, little child killed. Merciful God, am I dreaming? It cannot be true."

Snatching up his hat, he dashed out the door, not before a hand grasped his arm, and a young man, almost a stranger to Frank Arlington, said in a firm voice, "Let me go with you, you may need help."

And so together they hurried on until they came to Frank Arlington's home. The home he had left that morning with words of anger on his lips, and angry thoughts in his heart.

The house was shrouded in darkness; no light glimmered from the window to welcome his return. All was silent as the grave.

To open the door and strike a match was the work of a moment. Then Frank hurried up stair to their sleeping room. It was silent and empty—no wife, no baby; both gone.

It was true then, the telegram, his baby dead, his wife dangerously hurt, perhaps dying. Oh, God! what should he do! He was justly punished, for he had not appreciated them, and now God had taken one, perhaps both, from him forever.

A little note fastened to baby's pillow caught his eye, only a few lines.

"I have gone away forever, Frank, my husband. I could not stay, knowing that you have ceased to love us—baby and I. Farewell forever, and may God bless you.
MERLE."

I cannot say if Frank Arlington would ever have reached the depot if he had been alone. As it was, his kind friend, Neil Franklin, helped him down stairs, called a cab and gave the directions to the driver: "As fast as you can to the Central depot and you shall have double fare."

They were just in time, and when the second extra pulled out for the scene of the accident Frank Arlington and Neil Franklin were among the passengers.

What a sight met their gaze on arriving at Poltonville.

The wrecked coaches were piled one upon another, while shrieks of the most intense agony and deep groans filled the air.

Making their way with great difficulty through the crowd they soon found Superintendent Polton and were directed by him were to find the injured passengers.

"This way, sir," said an elderly man in the uniform of a conductor, and very soon Frank Arlington was bending over a woman's form. A form covered with a sheet and still in the last long sleep of death.

A vision of Merle, as he had seen her, arose before him, her small hands clasped together, her blue eyes filled with tears, and he fancied he could hear her pleading voice calling his name.

He shook as with ague and grasped the hand of his faithful friend for support.

Neil Franklin bent forward and lifted the sheet from the dead face. As he did so Frank Arlington started back, exclaiming: "My God, this is not my wife!"

"Not your wife?" said the elderly conductor.

"This satchel was found grasped tightly in her hand and in it garments marked "Arlington," and several cards and a picture, a photograph, which I am sure, now I have seen your face, is of yourself. This is very strange."

"Where is the child?" gasped Frank Arlington.

Here, by its mother's side," said Conductor Reynolds, pulling the sheet farther down and exposing to view the body of a little boy apparently about two years old, its dark curly hair brushed back from the baby brow, the bright eyes closed forever.

"My God, this is awful!" said Frank Arlington. "The satchel I recognize, but this lady is a stranger to me, and my child is a little girl. Oh, God! where are they? This suspense is killing me."

"All those able to be moved, have been taken to the hospital in Poltonsville. Perhaps you may find your wife there," said Conductor Reynolds kindly.

Leaving the scene of the accident, they soon reached the hospital.

As they entered the door, a Sister of Mercy passed them with a child in her arms.

As soon as the little one caught sight of Frank Arlington, she held out her pretty hands and called:

"Papa! Papa! take Daisy!"

Frank Arlington turned with a glad cry and caught the child in his arms.

"Tell me, for God's sake, is my child's mother alive?" he said, grasping the sister's hand in his great excitement.

"Yes, sir; and she is not seriously injured. I will take you to her," said the sister, with tears in her soft, brown eyes. "This way, sir."

A little later Frank Arlington was kneeling by a small white cot, pressing kisses of repentance on the sweet face of his wife.

"Oh, Merle, Merle, my darling, forgive me," he murmured in broken tones. Thank God you are alive and I may prove my love for you and our dear baby by future devotion."

As for Merle, with her arms clasped around her husband's neck she whispered, "Only love me, Frank, and I will forgive you everything."

"Love you, my darling wife; if I had lost you it would have killed me."

"Let us forget it all, dear Frank, and begin life again, only remember no one can love you as baby and I do."

"And the satchel, my darling, your satchel that was clasped in the hand of that other, the poor woman who was killed, tell me——"

"Is she dead? oh, poor lady!" and Merle's eyes filled with tears. "She sat in front of me and her little boy reached out for my satchel; the bright clasp caught his attention. So I put the satchel on the seat side of the mother and let him play with it to keep him quiet," and at the remembrance Merle sobbed aloud.

Merle Arlington was not severely injured; the shock had been very great, but with good care she was soon able to be conveyed home, and it was a happy day for Frank Arlington when he had his little family safely at home once again.

He loved his young wife truly, but he was easily led, and his ill-luck at cards had made him unjust and unkind when at home. But all that is over now. Years have passed since that terrible railroad accident, the details of which will remain fresh in Frank Arlington's memory forever.

Their home is now a happy one, which proves without a doubt that whatever rain may fall into each life, God always sends some sunshine to dry the tears.

Couldn't Tell Water from Whiskey.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

A novel bet was won and lost in a Vine street resort the other evening. A party of gentlemen were indulging in a social glass, and finally the conversation turned upon the quality of liquors and the ability of certain persons to judge them by the senses of smell and taste. One man in the party claimed that the best judges could be fooled by the compounders, and, after the argument became quite warm, made the astounding assertion that a large percentage of bar patrons did not know what they were drinking.

The debate grew hotter and hotter, and finally the man who had advanced such outrageous ideas offered to bet a basket of wine that he could confound any one of the party so that he could not tell water from whiskey. John Hummel, the circus man, who has had a varied experience in the drinking line, accepted the wager, and the preliminaries began. John was first heavily blindfolded, and then a number of glasses, containing water, milk, whiskey, sherry, claret, Rhine wine, and gin were set out on the bar. They were handed to the blindfolded man one at a time, and he was told to name the liquor after tasting it. He got through the list bravely until he came to the gin, which he called port wine. Then the man started him back, but it was soon very evident that Hummel's palate had lost its power. He called milk water, and finally was forced to admit that all the liquors tasted alike, and that he had lost his bet. It was some time before he was able to enjoy the wine he had lost.

English Tribute to this Country.

Sir Lyon Playfair in Contemporary Review.

At the present moment the United States has 250,000 inventions protected by the patent law. This activity of invention shows ability and intelligence among her people, who are always ready to turn to account the forces of nature for the benefit of man. This country in her workingmen is rich in producers, and if their intelligence were trained in connection with their work, we need not fear the industrial competition of any European nation. All great foreign nations, except the United States, are terribly handicapped in the industrial race by excessive armaments. England is also weighted, but not to an equal extent. The strength of nations consists in peace, but they made a sad error by not knowing that the weakness of nations is in active war, or excessive preparedness for it. France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Belgium and Great Britain have 2,200,000 men withdrawn from being productive citizens in order to be productive militants, at a cost for each man of £45. If we take all the civilized nations, adding the reserves to the permanent forces, fourteen and a half millions of the strongest men are or may be withdrawn from protection. This is one man for twenty-four of the population, or, if we exclude the reserves, one out of eighty-one. That is the reason why I point to the United States as the great industrial nation of the future, for her armed forces represent only one man in 1,010 of the population.

Effect of Glare Upon Eyesight.

It appears that Professor Plateau, of the University of Ghent, while trying to observe the effects of the irritation of the retina gazed steadily at the sun for twenty seconds, the result being that chronic irido-choroiditis developed, ending eventually in a total blindness. A number of cases are known in which choroiditis and retinitis occurred in persons who had observed an eclipse of the sun. The single flash of a sun reflector has been known to cause retinitis, and other temporary visual disturbances of a functional character have been frequently noted.

M. Reich has described a curious epidemic of snow blindness, which occurred among a body of laborers engaged in cleaning a way through the masses of snow which obstructed the road between Passanaur and Mteti, in the Caucasus; the rays of the sun reflected from the vast stretches of snow on every side, produced an intense glare of light, which the unaccustomed eye could not support without dark glasses. A few of the sturdiest among the laborers were able to work with impunity, but the majority suffered so much that among seventy strongly marked cases, thirty were unable to continue work or find their way home, and lay prone on their faces, striving to hide their faces from the light and crying out from pain. Recovery was gradual but complete.—New York Tribune.

Hymen's Car Drawn by Oxen.

From the Chicago News.

After Clifford Robinson and Jennie L. Leonard were married at her home in Hebron, Conn., the other day, her pa started the young couple on their wedding tour to their future home, twelve miles away, on a sled drawn by two yoke of oxen. The same sled performed a like service for the bride's great-grandmother, and was made by the bride's great-grandfather. Mr. Leonard evidently has faith in oxen, for he insisted upon sending ox teams for the eighty guests whom he invited to his daughter's wedding.

What's the Matter With Your Blood?

Cleveland Press.

As much blood goes through the kidneys as goes through the heart.

There is nothing startling about this fact except it be a revelation. Many people have but a dim idea of the real work of the kidneys. They not only drain the water from the system, but also the poisonous matter which that water holds in solution to carry out of the system. Over half the time, however, the kidneys fail to do this work!

What is the result?

Gradual failure of strength and health and eventually death by Bright's Disease or some unsuspected kidney disease.

But particularly in the spring of the year, when one's blood is filled with poisonous waste, as it invariably is at that time, you feel depressed, tired, languid, do not seem to have any disease, but your system does not respond to the genial warmth of summer and spring as formerly.

You had better look out!

The kidney poison is accumulating in the blood. Tonics won't do any good they simply treat effects. You can only secure a radical, thorough renovation of the system by the prompt use of Warner's safe Cure, which is the only reliable, scientific specific for the blood, because it is the only known specific in the world for the kidneys, which are the only great blood purifiers.

GEO. F. RIDGEWAY, 98 Murison St. Cleveland, O., Ex-Deputy Sheriff, from uric acid poisoning of the blood became, at times, totally blind, and was troubled with great giddiness. In 1882, after suffering for many years, and being distressed beyond measure, he thoroughly purified his blood by means of Warner's Safe Cure, and says: "I have never had a day's trouble since, and have fully recovered my health. Warner's Safe Cure saved my life."

REV. J. P. ARNOLD, of Camden, Tenn., in '78 and '81 was greviously afflicted with many abscesses, caused by kidney poisoned blood. The abscesses were alive for many months and caused great distress. After thoroughly purifying his blood with Warner's Safe Cure in 1882, he reported that in 1888 he was strong and well, over 71 years of age, and able to preach regularly.

CAPT. W. D. ROBINSON, United States Marine Inspector for the chain of lakes, residence Buffalo, N. Y., in 1881 had a slight eruption on his hands. It soon spread to his face and he was almost blind. His body was covered with light, flaky scales. His skin itched excruciatingly. For two years he gradually grew worse, trying almost everything imaginable. In 1883, after giving up hope of recovery, he began using Warner's Safe Cure. "Twenty bottles," he says, "completely cured me, and to-day I am strong and well as ever."

JAMES WIGHT, 296 Fifth Ave., N. Y., suffered for years from inflammatory rheumatism—a blood disorder—but in 1883 was fully restored to health by Warner's Safe Cure and remains well to-day.

The four above cases are as good as a million. They prove what is stated, that the organ that removes the impurity from the blood most effectually is the kidney, and for this when impaired there is but one sound, rational method of treatment.

Dr. Dio Lewis, who was opposed to the use of medicines in general, thought so highly of this remedy that he said if he had a serious kidney disease, he should use it.

Ask your friends and neighbors what they think of it.

In the spring of the year, when debility is so prevalent, and the seeds of disease are sown that may have a fatal blossoming before the fall, the prudent man and woman will give the system a thorough cleansing and purification.

Although the cold weather and rain of the past week has materially set back the farmers in seeding, still there is a great deal of rejoicing among them, as millions of chinch bugs which had already put in an appearance have been killed.

It was reported that Senator Voorhees had gone to Indiana. He didn't go at all, but is confined to his apartments in Washington under the sufferings of a painful carbuncle.

Girlish actions are suggestive of buoyant spirits.

Now that the heated term is upon us, people should pay particular attention to their diet, above all things avoiding unripen fruit and stale vegetables, which invariably bring on cramps, cholera morbus, or diarrhœa. Children are particularly subject to complaints of this kind, and no mother can feel safe without having a bottle of PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER within easy reach.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost every one at this season, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is proven to be so vastly superior to any other Sarsaparilla, or blood purifier, that one has well said: "Its health-giving effects upon the blood and entire human organism are as much more positive than the remedies of a quarter of a century ago as the steam power of to-day is in advance of the slow and laborious drudgery of years ago."

Nearly everybody needs a good spring medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla to expel impurities which accumulate in the blood during the winter, keep up strength as warm weather comes on, create an appetite, and promote healthy digestion. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla and you will be convinced of its peculiar merits. It is the ideal spring medicine—reliable, beneficial, pleasant to take, and gives full value for the money.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla as a spring tonic, and I recommend it to all who have that miserable tired feeling." C. PARMELEE, 349 Bridge street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ARM AND HAMMER

To Housekeepers and Farmers.—It is important that the Soda you use should be White and Pure same as all similar substances used for food. To insure obtaining only the "Arm & Hammer" brand Soda, buy it in "pound or half pound" cartoons, which bear our name and trade-mark, as inferior goods are sometimes substituted for the "Arm & Hammer" brand when bought in bulk. Parties using Baking Powder should remember that its sole rising property consists of bicarbonate of soda. One teaspoonful of the "Arm & Hammer" brand of Soda mixed with sour milk equals four teaspoonfuls of the best Baking Powder, saving twenty times its cost, besides being much healthier, because it does not contain any injurious substances, such as alum, terra alba etc., of which many Baking Powders are made. Dairymen and Farmers should use only the "Arm & Hammer" brand for cleaning and keeping Milk Pans Sweet and Clean.

A SPLENDID FELLOW.

Delmonico's is where he dines
On quail on toast, washed down with wines;
Then lights a 20-cent cigar
With quite a flourish at the bar.

He throws his money down, so proud,
And "sets 'em up" for all the crowd;
A dozen games of billiards, too,
He gayly loses ere he's through.

Oh, he's a splendid fellow, quite;
He pays his debts with such delight,
And often boasts of—to his clan—
His honor as a gentleman.

But, when this splendid fellow's wife,
Who leads at home a frugal life,
Begs for a little change to buy
A dress, he looks at her so wry

That she, alarmed at his distress,
Gives him a kiss and sweet caress,
And says:, "Don't worry so, my dear,
I'll turn the dress I made last year."

MY DAY.

How long is that of most people, I wonder? Some perhaps can number the full six hundred and thirteen thousand six hundred and eight hours of the allotted threescore years and ten, while others outlast the pre-Adamic day of the geologist, and cover all eternity. But mine was just the ordinary daylight one, the shortest of the year, too, for it was the 21st of December.

And even short as it was, I had already wasted some hours of it. Had I thought it would have set so soon, I might have been up at its dawning, though usually I hold, with Lever, that the sun looks best—as every one else does—when he's up and dressed for the day, and that it's a piece of impertinent curiosity to peep at him when he's rising and at his toilet; he has not rubbed the clouds out of his eyes, or you dared not look at him. But when one's sun shines such a little while as mine, might not one be pardoned for rushing to the levee at an unfashionable hour.

Yet it was noon before I was out in the bright glow, trudging down the lane with yesterday's fall of snow crisping under my feet, and last night's sleet clashing overhead, as the wind caught at the straggling, overgrown hedge-row boughs, and sent them ringing together, with such an icy jewelled flash and splendor of green and gold and red and blue as summer, with all her wealth of leaves and blossoms, could not rival. The very splendor promised the glittering mockery but a short life; the sun is a traitor with his kisses, and the warmth of them would soon wither away the snow wreaths, making their delicate mimicry of the white May and the hawthorne in the hedge. But meantime they were very fair, and the snow lay light and white under the great peach orchards that had their icy sparkle too, as they swept away, with gentle undulations, right and left of the still lane. And the blue sky had the merest snowflake of a cloud drifting along, and the sun was shining full upon me, and somehow a glint of it had got into my heart, though there was nothing in particular to bring it there. Christmas was so near, the first I had spent out of my own old home, so empty now; and Father Christmas, when he comes to us with a changed face, has the saddest of all looks. Yet I did not intend to mope. Aunt Margaret and the girls were friendly and kind, and the least I could do would be to put aside the shadow of my crape, and show them a contended face. And so—

Perhaps something more than content flashed into it just then, when that thought of mine was broken short off by a sharper clatter of those hedge-row boughs, and some one sprang down through the gap, bringing with him a little clatter of fallen icicles into the road before me. For, as we shook hands, there was a pleased look in his eyes, and he said, with some abruptness:

"You are a little glad to see me? You won't mind my finishing your walk with you?"

I tried to answer carelessly, though it was not so easy under that gaze of his: "Oh, if you are of a zoological turn this morning; I am going in search of foxtail and crow-foot. I marked a quite splendid bed down by the brook in the woods in a sheltered nook where I daresay this light snow has not covered it. The girls tell me they are not in the habit of putting Christmas evergreens about the house, but I always did at home, and—"

He understood me at once. He said, with his rare gentleness: "And you are trying hard to keep some of the old Christmas feeling about you. You must forgive me if I can not help seeing something of your brave struggle, and yearning to help you in it."

Yearning! It was a strong word, but his eyes made it stronger, as I could not help glancing up to see. And before in my confusion, I could drop mine again, somehow my muff was on the snow at our feet, and both my hands were in his.

"Miss Deane—Annie—I can help you—with my whole life, Annie!"

And, after that, is it any wonder if the sun shone straight into my heart?

I don't think our researches would have added much to the cause of either zoology or botany that day. On the latter especially my lover would have made strange confusion, insisting that we were passing under quite a number of mistletoe boughs, if my superior knowledge of the science had not set him right. We did find the crow-foot, however, and, as I had expected, not too deep in the snow. But when he had torn up a long spray of it and flung it trailing over my shoulder, I stayed his hand. Madge and I could come together another day for some—there was plenty of time before Christmas—but to-day's in-gatherings I meant to keep all to myself.

At least for this one day, I told him, when we had reached the house, and paused together in the porch. For this one day we would not call in any one, however friendly, to see what it had brought me; but to-night, when he was gone, then I would tell Aunt Margaret that I was to be his wife. I said the word in a little flutter as we stood there together, for already he had been asking me how long I meant to keep his own from him. As I said it, I glanced up shyly at him, and it would have discomfited me to see how his face changed, paling at that word, if his hand had not closed on mine with a tightening grasp which made me ashamed of a dawning doubt that he wanted it.

"Annie—"

The voice, full of a strange pain, startled me. Could this day have any pain in it?

Perhaps he read that thought—he was always so quick to understand—for he said: "I have a story to tell you Annie, a story that may take some of the brightness out of this hour for you, as it has taken all the brightness out of the last seven years of my life until now. Shall I tell it to you now? Or can you trust me that it is nothing which ought to part us? and would you rather wait to hear it until to-morrow?"

I could trust him; ay, rather, I could not distrust him; and I told him so. Let us live this day out without a shadow; afterward, if shadows must come, he should lead me safely through them.

"There is no danger in the shadow, Annie; there is only something for both of us to forget."

"Let us forget it now, then. See, there is Aunt Margaret at the window signing to me; she is afraid I shall let her neighbor so offend against her good old-fashioned hospitality as to go away to his bachelor's hall, when it is three o'clock and our dinner hour."

The shortest day of all the year. We were watching its setting from the library window, we two left alone, for Madge and Fannie had driven into the village for the mail, and Aunt Margaret was summoned to one of those kitchen-cabinet councils which in view of Christmas cheer grew more and more frequent under old Lethe's able administration. So we two were standing together in the bay-window, watching the crimson glow fade off from the wide snow stretch of lawn that sloped down to the lane, dotted here and there with a black-green pyramid of fir, between the naked oaks, when presently I caught sight of something moving across their shadows flung stiff and dark against the white.

"Some one is coming," I said, breaking the happy silence. "A lady, I thought—though I wonder who it could be, walking."

"What a bore!"

"Oh, she'll not be shown in here, and unless you fell disposed to go to Aunt Margaret's assistance—"

Here I saw the side door of the library opening from the lawn. The visitor must have observed us at the window; some one on sufficiently unceremonious terms.

It was a stranger. She had closed the door behind her, and had come forward into the full glow of the Christmas wood fire blazing on the heart. A stranger, certainly; if I had ever seen her before, I should never have forgotten her.

She was standing on the hearth, and drew her slender gloved hands out of the folds of her cashmere shawl, holding them to the warmth, before she turned to us the fairest face I have ever seen—the fairest face one ever dreamed. Only that would have been a strange, Fouque-like dream in which such a vision should come.

It could not have been after-knowledge on my part, for before she spoke, while she still fronted us with that gay smile upon her perfect lips, I thought of Undine in her soulless loveliness, light-hearted, glad, careless of others' pain because she could not feel it. There is the Undine nature in a child too, for whom there exists no pain that does not bruise its own tender flesh, and that soft hardness made itself felt in every line and curve about this woman, as she stood there, white and golden, looking at us out of those great brilliant eyes, of which I have read somewhere,

"Alive in their depths, as the Kraken beneath the sea blue"— eyes which I would fain have followed, for they fixed themselves on Brian. Only I could not, that face so held me.

"They told me at your house that you were here, perhaps; that you were often here; and so I came," she said, still looking at Brian.

I turned and looked at him too then; the clear, soft, shallow, child voice broke the spell.

But he never saw me. His eyes were riveted on her—just as a man might look who sees a ghost.

And then she smiled. She had been beautiful before, and now her beauty was bewildering. She stretched out her hands to him.

"Have you never a word of welcome, Brian, for your wife?"

He drew a long, hard breath, and passed his hand heavily over his eyes. He never once glanced my way, though I felt he saw me all the while. He answered her slowly:

"How is it you are not dead, Louise? For nearly seven years you have allowed me to believe you were."

She laughed a mocking little laugh. Though she did not turn toward me, new she had flashed a glance at me.

"Have you been a disconsolate widower all that time, my poor Brian? It was very wicked of me, of course. But then, you see, I always hated poverty; and you were so very impecunious at that time, I really thought it better to die off your hands."

Here she turned suddenly to me with a sweet graciousness of manner, while her eyes, alive with mocking spirits, looked me through and through.

"My husband is a little remiss at introductions, so I find I must make myself known to you, as I see you are one of his friends. Every one has a skeleton in his closet, you know, and I present you to Brian's."

She made a joyful courtesy as she spoke.

"Only he fancied it was laid away underground," she added. "Perhaps he has told you of our runaway match when he was at college, and how angry poor mamma was, and hushed the matter up, and carried me away to Europe to finish my school days there. And there it was that mamma made her brilliant second marriage—a real true German baron; and we went away to Vienna to live. But first I died; for one must die—must not one?—to get into Paradise. Brian would have never let me go there alive, so I sent him a lock of my hair and a little scrawling death-bed note inclosed in a letter from mamma's maid, who had helped us to run away the year before. You remember Fifine, Brian? She has come over with me now. Such a clever soul! I can't tell how I should ever, without her, managed to keep myself informed of your movements, and of course I had to do that, for all widowers aren't so constant, and you might have married you know—"

He interrupted her, hoarse with passion: "And how do I know that you—"

"Oh, Brian, how can you! As if that were not just what my step-father and I quarreled about! After dear mamma died, she died last year" (with a pretty, plaintive fall in voice and eyelids, come and gone as swiftly as a child's grave look)—"and he was quite set on making a match for me; and of course that wouldn't do at all, you know. Dear mamma was so content to let me enjoy life in my own way; but after she was gone, the step-papa became just a little difficult. And so— Well, Brian, I knew you were no longer a poor man, and that I should not drag you down now. And so I have come back to you if you will have me." She put out her hands then in the most pleading way. "If I had been a man—"

But Brian did not soften in the least. He had pent up his wrath now, and had it under his control; but his voice was still hoarse as he said to her:

"I shall take pains to learn whether all this is truth. Meanwhile we will not trespass any longer upon Miss Deane's patience. I shall take you back to my house, and will set out within the hour for Vienna. Miss Deane will pardon—"

There he broke off huskily. He had not once lifted his eyes to me since first they fell upon her shadow, which the waning sunset cast between us.

But—how I had the strength I do not know—but I went straight up to her and took her hand, and kissed her on the pretty smooth white brow as she lifted up her face to mine. Is there woman born who can keep anger for a pretty child? And there are some people who never outgrow the charm and irresponsibility of childhood; if they pluck at one's heart-strings with their careless fingers until one could be stung into giving them a blow or a shake, one must kiss and be friends afterward. And then I turned to him—I must have had a vision of how it would all end; for she was wonderfully fair; she had been his first love; she would be his last. I turned to him.

"I am sure you will find all as she has said, and that you will forgive her. I don't think I shall be here still when you come back from your long journey, so you must let me give you my best wishes now."

Our hands met for one instant—not our eyes; we neither of us could bear that. Then our hands fell apart and presently I was alone.

My day was over; twilight darkened in the window, gray and blank.

And after twilight?

Just a paragraph in a book I have been turning over by my solitary fireside to-night has set me thinking of all this. It says:

"There are women who live all their lives long in the cold white moonlight of other people's reflected joy. It is not a bad kind of light to live in after all. It may leave some dark, ghostly corners in the heart unwarmed, but like other moonlight, it lets a great deal be seen overhead that sunshine hides."—Harper's Weekly.

Mr. Blaine's Narrow Escape.

Rochester (N. Y.) Dispatch to the New York Sun.

A story showing how James G. Blaine came near ending all his earthly campaigns during his visit to Elmira in October, 1884, was told your correspondent by an intimate friend of the Maine statesman. While in Elmira on that occasion Mr. Blaine was the guest of J. D. F. Slee, a leading citizen. The political demonstration was all that even Mr. Blaine could desire, and though worn and exhausted by his long tour, he was in excellent spirits. After the meeting was over a reception was given at Mr. Slee's, which lasted till past midnight. When it ended Mr. Blaine went to his room on the second floor, and getting into bed spent two hours, tired as he must have been, in reading letters, dispatches and newspapers. When he could no longer keep his eyes open he turned off the gas and was soon in the land of dreams. Unfortunately, in extinguishing the light he turned the key of the burner too far, thus turning the gas on again. It is a miracle that he was not suffocated to death, for the night being cold and damp, the windows were all closed. But before the stuff had become overpowering Mr. Blaine awoke, possessed of consciousness enough to realize the danger of lighting a match or of opening the door leading into the hall, where a light was kept burning all night. Dragging himself out of bed he reached a window, threw it open, stood with his head out long enough to get some relief, and turned off the gas effectually. Then he alarmed the household.

The Frozen Valley of the Lena.

Scientific men have been perplexed for many years over the phenomenon of a certain well at Yakutsk, Siberia. A Russian merchant in 1828 began to dig a well, but he gave up the task three years later, when he dug down thirty feet and was still in solidly frozen soil. Then the Russian Academy of Sciences dug away at the well for months, but stopped when it had reached a depth of 382 feet, when the ground was still frozen as hard as a rock. In 1844 the academy had the temperature of the excavation carefully taken at various depths, and from these data it was estimated that the ground was frozen to a depth of 612 feet. Although the pole of the greatest cold is in this province of Yakutsk, not even the terrible severity of the Siberian winters could freeze the ground to a depth of 600 feet. Geologists have decided that the frozen valley of the lower Lena is a formation of the glacial period. They believe, in short, that it froze solidly then, and has never since had a chance to thaw out.

Foreign Butter in England.

Twenty years ago scarcely any foreign butter was consumed in England. Now not one hundreth part of the butter eaten in London is to be reckoned as home produce. Great Britain annually buys £12,000,000 worth of butter from the foreign market, yet the dairymen of Great Britain and Ireland have in their favor climate, soil, the price of cattle, wages and the cost of transport from America and Denmark. The prices paid in the Cork butter market, once famous for the good quality of its butter, are lower than those of any recognized butter market in the world. The description given of it in the Pall Mall Gazette is curt: "Dirt here, dirt there, dirt everywhere."

Many persons, not of a nervous temperament, specially hurry at their meals. They have vigorous appetites, and they eat voraciously. Now, swine can do this safely, for they have a vigorous digestion, and have nothing to do but to digest what they eat. It is otherwise with human beings. That kind monitor "enough" is seldom heard in season by those who eat in a hurry. Rapid eating is generally excessive eating, with, in due time, dyspepsia, "bilious attacks," liver complaints and gout. Besides, not only health, but the good of all concerned, demands that the meal-time should be one of restful leisure, pleasant interchange of thought and social cheer.

Jerusalem a Progressive City.

There is probably no town in the dominions of the Sultan which has undergone more change during the last few years than Jerusalem, and, as any change which implies progress implies also the increase of foreign influence, and is always viewed with suspicion by the Porte, the march of events in Palestine is watched by Turkish statesmen with a jealously which finds its expression in a persistent effort to oppose it. As, however, the basis of the movement to which Jerusalem owes its increase during recent years is a religious one, and is founded upon a sentiment which proverbially thrives by opposition, all efforts to retard the influx of population and capital into the Holy City have proved unavailing. Owing to increased facilities of travel, the pilgrimages both of the Greek and Latin churches have been more numerous. A new feature is that some of the richer pilgrims from time to time establish themselves here. This is especially the case with the Russian members of the Greek Church. The influx of Jews has also been increasing to a remarkable extent. The Protestant sects are constantly enlarging the field of their operations, and new charitable and educational estatblishments are springing up from year to year. An American soiciety of Second Adventists has been resident here for some years, while isolated religious cranks find in the Holy City an appropriate dwelling place for reasons known only to themselves.

The result of all this is that whereas when I was last here, six years ago only a very few houses had been built on the Jaffa road outside the walls of the town, where now there is an extensive and constantly increasing Frank suburb. The price of land has risen fifty per cent., and is still constantly rising. New hotels and shops have been opened to meet the increasing demand. Within the last twenty years the population of the Holy City has certainly doubled, the increase consisting entirely of Jews and Christians. Apart from its sacred associations the city has no attractions as a residence of any kind, but quite the reverse. This fact possesses a highly important political significance, because it is evident that in the degree in which the vested interests of rival sects and religions accumulate upon this spot is it destined some day to become a bone of contention between them. It is probably the only city in the world where the same amount of capital and enterprise is expended on objects which are in no sense remunerative, while in proportion to its size there is none where a larger sum is given away, either in the form of charitable or religious donations. Nothing strikes one more than the proportion of buildings having some sort of public character or other to private dwellings, and these buildings are constantly increasing. This year the estimated expenditure of the Greek and Latin churches will be over $600,000 for building purposes alone. The number of Russian pilgrims who visit Jerusalem annually is about 5,000, and it is constantly increasing. They are all accomodated in the extensive premises belonging to the Russian Government, in the centre of which the Russian Consulate is situated, and which forms a sort of Russian suburb to the Holy City. Here one feels transported for the time to the dominions of the Czar, as he hears on all sides the Slav tongue, and finds himself jostled by men and women in the peasant costume of their own country, chaffering over wares which the more enterprising of their number have imported to sell their own country people, while they squat in stalls and booths which they have roughly extemporized for the purpose.

When you consider the amount of foreign money which is annually expended in Jerusalem by these hosts of pilgrims—those of the Latin church however, do not equal in number those of the Greek—by the tourists and general influx of sightseers who flock during easter week, and by the churches and societies in building operations, you cannot wonder that many persons have of late years become wealthy, and that many natives of Syria and the Levant are attracted to the town in the hope of becoming so. The tide having thus set in, it goes on increasing, and the rivalry of the Latin and Greek churches imparts, as it were, a stimulus to the whole jumble of creeds and nationalities which cluster round the sacred shrines.

Tornadoes.

We are surprised at the total loss of life and property, during 1884, by tornadoes, as summarized in Popular Science News:

"The storms of Feb. 19 and March 11, extending over most of the Southern States, and ending with terrific gales along the Atlantic coast, were the most disastrous of the year. The storm of Feb. 19 killed 800 people, wounded 2,500 more, left 10,000 to 15,000 homeless, and caused a money-loss of from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000. People were warned of the tornadoes of March 11 in time to seek their cellars, so the loss was much less, —five killed, 50 wounded, $350,000 worth of property destroyed. March 25 there were 77 killed 298 wounded, and the money-loss was $950,000; April 1, 52 killed, 277 wounded, and $780,000 of property destroyed; April 14, 47 killed, 336 wounded, and the money-loss $850,000; April 27, killed 18, wounded 115, money-loss $575,000; April 28, killed 4, wounded 30, money-loss $250,000. Statistics are given for only three storms in May, and two each in July, August, and September, and none for June; yet these partial returns for four months show 51 killed, 252 wounded, and a money-loss of $2,885,000, making the total damage for 14 out of the 58 tornado days of the year 1,054 killed, 3,861 wounded, and a money-loss of $10,140,000. The many tornadoes produced in the two great wind-storms of February and March in the South give those States more than their usual proportion for the year, Georgia having 38, South Carolina 22, Alabama 18, and North Carolina 12; while in the West, Kansas had 12, Iowa and Wisconsin 10 each, and Dakota 8. Kentucky and Texas had each 7, Texas and New York 5 each, Indiana 4, and Ohio, Missouri and Minnesota 3 each. New England, and the region west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains, are the only parts of the country not visited by tornadoes."

Some Striking Sentiments of Sam Jones.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"BUT."

Do you notice that when we talk about people we never use the copulative conjunction? We use the disjunctive "but." You ask about Brother A. and the answer is. "Well, he's good, but he don't pray in his family." "How about Brother B?" "Well, he's a good man, a very good man, but seems to like his dram." You can take this disjunctive conjunction "but" and chip character all to pieces with it in a minute. You can just take any fellow in this town nearly and say all about him. "He's good and kind." Then commence to "but" him, and the first thing you know they butt him off the bridge, and that's the last of him.

GLAD THAT HIS CHILD DIED.

If I have anything special, in reference to my wife and children, to be grateful for, it is this: I have no child that ever looked into my face when I was not a consecrated Christian man. God gave us one when I was wrecked and wayward and godless. That little child lived and looked in my face when I was godless and profane and wretched, and God took her to heaven. I shall live a Christian as long as God gives me a child to look in my face, and when I get to heaven I will fall down and beg pardon of that sweet little angel that she ever saw me when I wasn't a Christian. [Tears.]

MONEY AND COMMUNISM.

"Yes," you say, "Jones is preaching communism." I am not. I tell you this to-day, there isn't a man in this country that fights communism stronger than I do. I have no sympathy with this low-down rack of God's creation going round here doing nothing, and wanting everything that everybody else has, and I have got no sympathy with the fellow that has got a big pile of it, and won't give any away. That's the way I feel about it. I have found out that money is like a walking-stick. One will help you along if you are lame, but fifty loaded on your back will break you down. That's so, and the matter with some of you people is that you are loaded down with money. Money is like guano; if you will put it on too thick it will burn up everything. And so money, if you load it on too heavily, will spoil a man. The richest man the world ever saw was also one of the best. Abraham could have bought out Vanderbilt, and scarcely have missed out of the bank the money of the check he drew to pay for Vanderbilt's estate, and yet he was one of the best men on earth. It is not so much the money as the sort of fellow that has it.

VARIOLOID PIETY.

There's a varioloid type of piety. They just put you in bed a day or two and you were out before anybody found out you were sick. The varioloid type of piety has taken possession of this country; but it ain't catching. But you get one of the old-fashioned, confluent cases of small-pox, and everybody will catch it that goes into the room. This varioloid type of religion that you see nowadays ain't catching, but you take an old-fashioned confluent rash, and when a man has got it, the first thing you know his wife will get it, and it will break out over the family, and the whole family will be consecrated to God.

Charmed by Pretty Frida.

Frida Friedman's pretty face and engaging manners, says the New York Journal, won her many admirers during her voyage across the Atlantic as a steerage passenger on the steamship Belgenland, from Antwerp. Her large blue eyes, rosy cheeks, and her exquisitely molded form, combined with a mass of golden hair, made her the belle of the steerage.

She took the attentions pleasantly and chatted gayly with all who came in her way. She made many friends, and among her ardent admirers was Rudolph Strauss, one of the Belgenland's engineers. Every moment he could snatch from his work he spent at the fair Frida's side.

She liked his huge black whiskers and dark eyes, and listened to his descriptions of America with wrapt attention. When she arrived at Castle Garden, Strauss came boldly forward ane demanded Frida's baggage.

"I am her uncle," said he to Superintendent Jackson, "and want to see that she is well taken care of."

Mr. Jackson, having his suspicions aroused, refused to let her go.

"I am her sweetheart," he pleaded, changing the claim.

"Will you marry her?" asked Mr. Jackson.

"May be, after I've known her longer," said the engineer.

"Well, you'd better get right out of here," advised the superintendent.

Strauss didn't wait for a second invitation, but hurried away. A few minutes later another individual who claimed to be a philanthropist arrived and asked for the fair Frida. He said he had come on the Belgenland, and, fearing she might not be treated well, would take her to Passaic, N. J., until she got a place. His name, he said, was Henry Frank.

He likewise was advised to depart, and did so. Scarcely had he gone when two tall youths entered the garden, and in a pompous manner demanded to see Frida. They said they were her cousins. Mr. Jackson didn't think so, and they concluded they would call again.

"I'll have to put her under lock and key," said he, laughingly, "for evidently some one is bound to get her away."

She will be taken care of by the emigration commissioners until she secures employment.

Portrait of Prof. Swing.

"He may be observed," says an exchange of Professor David Swing, "almost any day walking leisurely through the crowded streets. A profile of his deeply corrugated, thoughtful face suggests features of Dante. His hair is abundant and streaked with gray. His complexion is slaty. He is a man of small build, but his head is covered by a 7 3-8 hat. He is very plainly dressed and his collar is of the Byronic pattern. His tailor must make his clothes without too much style or they cannot be worn. * * * His mode of life is quiet, studious, and methodical, although he and his daughter have many callers to entertain and many invitations to attend festivities."

John L. Sullivan on Health.

Philadelphia Letter.

That great physical courage and prowess have many admirers is proven by the attendance at the Central Theatre every night. Long before the hour for the beginning of the performance every seat in the spacious auditorium is filled and the legend "Standing Room Only" is displayed at the box office. Several women were present on the opening night, and at least one well-known church official, says the Philadelphia News. The attraction was John L. Sullivan, the "undisputed champion of the world," in his representations of Greek and Roman statuary. Besides there was a minstrel prrformance, but it was only of tertiary importance. I found "the big fellow" in an entrance watching the feats of a couple of acrobats and accompanied him to his dress-room, where I saw him "makeup" for his act. Divesting himself of his street clothing, he first drew on a pair of tights, which were worthy of the name, for they were at least two sizes tighter than his skin, and though elastic it required the giant and his assistants at least ten minutes to draw them on him. A very strong elastic band at the waist made them fit his body like a glove. Then he was hand-rubbed and slapped from the waist up.

"What is that done for?" I asked.

"To bring the blood to the surface and arouse the electricity in my system. It makes me feel good and lively." Then he was wiped dry and his skin glowed and glistened like polished marble. "I'm a little too fat," said he. "I weigh now 231 pounds. I would be better at 225. I'll get there the next week stand we make."

"How?" I asked.

"Why, by doing a little work. Every one ought to do enough work to keep him in good condition," he replied.

"John," said I, "there are lots of people who are not fighters or athletes —men who are clerks, or in sedentary positions, who would like to know just how to 'condition' themselves in the spring. What ought they to do?"

"In the first place," he answered, "they ought to set apart fifteen minutes to half an hour every morning for exercise. More than half of them lie in bed until the last moment in the morning, then jump up, dress in a hurry, and go right to the breakfast table and wonder why they have no appetite and feel dull and stupid. The human stomach was not made to be treated that way. A man should, after getting up, take a ten minutes' brisk walk if possible, or, if that is not convenient, use a light pair of dumb-bells for three or four minutes, so as to bring on a slight perspiration. Then he should rub himself dry with a coarce towel, and after that take a sponge or towel bath. Then after he has rubbed himself dry, he should rub and slap himself briskly as I have done just now. Then after dressing let him go to the table and eat a couple of poached eggs on toast, or a bit of nice steak with bread and coffee, and he will be fit for his day's work, and, my word for it, he will want no other tonic to give him an appetite for his dinner. Should he need a laxative he can find few things better than plenty of fruit. Stewed prunes eaten at night are excellent. If a young clerk does as I have said for two weeks and don't find himself as fine a a fiddle there is something serious the matter with him and he had better consult a good doctor."

Buell on Shiloh.

General Buell's contribution to the Century Magazine for March, is a paper that will not make peace on the subject of the greatly disputed battle. It opens with this paragraph: Twenty-three years ago the banks of the Tennessee witnessed a remarkable occurrence. There was a wage of battle. Heavy blows were given and received, and the chanllenger failed to make his cause good. But there were peculiar circumstances which distinguished the combat from other trials of strength in the rebellion: An army comprising seventy regiments of infantry, twenty batteries of artillery and a sufficiency of cavalry lay for two weeks and more in isolated camps, with a river in its rear and a hostile army claimed to be superior in numbers twenty miles distant in its front, while the commander made his headquarters and passed his nights nine miles away on the opposite side of the river. It had no line or order of battle, no defensive works of any sort, no outposts, properly speaking, to give warning or check the advance of an enemy, and no recognized head during the absence of the regular commander. On a Saturday the hostile force arrived and formed in order of battle, without detection or hindrance, within a mile and a half of the unguarded army, advanced upon it the next morning, penetrated its disconnected lines, assaulted its camps in front and flank, drove its disjointed members successively from position to position, capturing some and routing others, in spite of much heroic individual resistance, and steadily drew near the landing and depot of supplies in the pocket between the river and an impassable creek. At the moment near the close of the day when the remnant of the retrograding army was driven to refuge in the midst of its magazines, with the triumphant enemy at half-gunshot distance, the advance division of a reinforcing army arrived on the opposite bank of the river, crossed, and took position under fire at the point of attack; the attacking force was checked, and the battle ceased for the day. The next morning at dawn the reinforcing army and a fresh division belonging to the defeated force advanced against the assailants, followed or accompanied by such of the broken columns of the previous day as had not lost all cohesion, and after ten hours of conflict drove the enemy from the captured camps and the field of battle.

The entertainments given by Mrs. Secretary Whitney are said to rival anything before seen in Washington. It is estimated that her receptions cost $2,500 a week. The story goes that Colonel Oliver Payne gave Mrs. Whitney his check for half a million not many months ago, and told his sister that the money was not for her to keep, but to spend for the entertainment of her friends. The receptions given by the Whitneys and the Leiters are a little ahead of almost anything in the line yet seen in the National Capitol.

Cape Breton Marriages.

Courtship is by no means a necessary preliminary to marriage. To begin at the beginning: When a young man decides that he will marry, he often first builds a house; and it is no trivial matter here, where most of the lumber is sawn by hand in a pit. A man may be said to be in earnest when he begins his suit with months of such hard labor—and that, too, from a disinterested motive, not having the faintest idea, perhaps, as to who will be the mistress of the house. We saw a number of such expectant buildings, in all states and of many ages; for some, failing to get a tenant, stood without windows or doors, the image of a desolate and empty heart. John ——, a young man duly prepared and determined to marry, had set out the previous week with his spokesman to get a wife. He had no particular preference for any one, but they decided to go first to the house of Mary ——, one of the brightest girls of the parish, whom he had often noted, but with whom he had never spoken. When they entered the house, a hint of their object was given to Mary, and she retired from the sitting room. The spokesman then delivered his speech, in which he praised the personal qualities, the fortune, the social position, of his friend, and asked the hand of Mary for him. As the father had no objection to the offer, he at once consented to leave the matter to his daughter. She was called in, and the spokesman conferred quietly a while with her in a corner, and she consented to the marriage. The spokesman then led her out to the middle of the floor, and John came from his corner and took her by the hand; thus the "contract" was accepted, under the usual penalty of forfeiting twenty dollars in case the engagement was broken. The evening was spent in dancing; but if any of the deacons had had wind of the affair, it is probable that they would have come and changed the festivity into a prayer meeting.

The young man afterward engaged the priest to publish the banns for the first and last time on the following Sunday. But Mary had her own plans in all this; she knew that the affair would reach the ears of Sandy ——, for whom she had a strong perference, and perhaps bring him promptly to a proposal. Sandy did come, and the upshot of it was that he and his father went late on Saturday night, roused the priest, and had Sandy's name substituted in the banns for that of applicant number one.

This new shuffling of the cards was common enough, so that it caused but a passing smile among the friends of the parties most interested. But a certain young man who heard the banns went home in such depression that he asked his father for ten dollars. When questioned he explained that the girl whom he had always intended to marry was to become the bride of Sandy ——, and he was going away to the States. "Well, and why don't ye carry her off and marry her yerself, Malcolm? I'll give ye the upper farm this minute. Go get yer brother, see the girl, and bring her home here. We'll keep her safe." Now it happened that Malcolm was the richest of three applicants, besides being, I will suppose, for charity's sake, a good fellow. Suffice it to say that they brought the girl home bag and baggage, by stealth, that Sunday night, mounted a guard that prevented the success of any strategem on either her part or the part of the others, and they were married on the following Tuesday.

These persons were by no means of the lowest ranks; the girl was described to me by an old fisherman as a "noble-minded lookin' girl, sir; a fine specimen of the highland craft." A man is all the more highly esteemed for such a feat. The rejected fellow does not lose heart; he generally keeps on with his negotiations day after day, house after house, until he finds a partner. An intelligent woman, while admitting the general predominance of the worldly interests in these matters, and the suddenness with which marriages were very often made, said that unhappy families are nevertheless rare among this people.

The domestic life of the couple even to-day in most of the peasants' homes will be exceedingly primitive, the woman will do the spinning, weaving and knitting required by the family; and the man will make nearly everything needed in the house and on the farm. A farm and family will require about two hundred dollars' worth of feed, food and sundries, and this amount represents the average production, of the little farms of Cape Breton, together with the fishing that many do at odd times. In the spring, actual want is sometimes felt by many families until fishing begins and the cows give milk once more. But the island is generally free from paupers.—Harper's Magazine.

Beecher on Conscience.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's new lecture is on "Conscience." He delivere it recently in Boston. Among the excellent things that he said the following is perhaps one of the most interesting and entertaining: "Let us look at some of the species of consciences. There are weak consciences and superstitious ones. I have heard of men with political consciences, but I never saw one yet. There are corporation consciences. Some men in corporations allow things to be done in the name of the corporation that would blast them with infamy if they did it individually. Some men have shifting consciences. Some men are real good at home, but are not so good in legislatures. Some men in business are graceful, pleasant, polite and good, but when they go home they are cross and sour, and their families have to take it. In the play of thought and emotion we are in danger of bringing men up to act from taste. That which we need most is instruction in what is right and wrong, and we not only need instruction but training, so that men and women shall know the right instinctively."

Thomas A. Edison is thought to have cleared two millions out of his electrical inventions. His purchase of a rual residence at $400,000 cash to take his wife to is regarded by his intimate friends as no great extravagance. In appearance he is a clean-shaven man, youthful in face, and so nearly deaf that a talker has little fun in making himself understood.

Ellen Terry, the actress, gets $375 a week for the fifty-two weeks of the year, with a vacation whenever she chooses.

Have They?

Your high tariff apostles are wont to look down upon all Republicans who believe in a revision of the tariff to suit the exigencies of the present and to declare that all such have forgotten their party traditions, in fact have left (or should leave) their party. We hold that this is a false position entirely and that your ratical high tariff Republican himself has left the traditions of his party while he remains in it and is trying to carry his party along with him, and to read out of the party all who oppose his views.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the high-tariff craze which now possesses the managers of the Republican party is the fact that this devotion to protection for protection's sake is opposed to the whole history of the party. The first national platform adopted by a Republican Presidential Convention in 1856, contained no allusion to the tariff. The platform of 1860 had a plank which favored protection, but only moderate protection, its main feature being the declaration that "while providing revenue for the support of the general government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of these imposts as to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the whole country."

The "Morrill tariff" of 1862 was not a measure framed in accordance with the Republican platform of 1860.

There was not a Republican in Congress who would not have ridiculed the idea that the scale of duties imposed by that measure was what the framers of the resolutions had in mind when they demanded "such an adjustment of these imposts as to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the whole country." On the contrary, everybody treated it as an exceptional and temporary policy, to be excused only by the imperious exigencies of an emergency which had not been contemplated as possible two years before. Mr. Morrill himself expressed the universal feeling of the Republican party when he justified it in these words: "This is intended as a war measure, a temporary measure, and we must as such give it our support."

The first President whom the Republican party elected after the war sought to redeem the pledge which the party's financial leader in the senate had made in 1862, that the high tariff should be only "a war measure, a temporary measure," the anomalous and extortionate features of which should be discarded as soon as possible after the restoration of peace. In his first annual message to Congress, in December 1869, President Grant pointed out that "the revenues of the country are greater than the requirements, and may with safety be reduced." In view of the then proposed funding of the debt at a lower rate of interest, he suggested that the question of reducing taxation to the full extent practicable had better be postponed until the next meeting of Congress, but he thought it at once "advisable to modify the taxation or tariff in instances where unjust and burdensome discriminations are made by the present laws." Growing a little more explicit, he added: "I feel safe in saying that the taxes and the revenues from imports [which for the previous fiscal year, ending June 30, 1869, had been $180,000,000] may be reduced safely from $60,000,000 to $80,000,000 per annum at once, and may be still further reduced from year to year as the resources of the country are developed."

Returning to the subject a year later, in his message to Congress in December, 1870, President Grant showed that the tax collected from the people by the internal revenue system had been reduced more than $80,000,000 per annum, having fallen from $266,000,000 in 1867 to less than $185,000,000 in 1870, and expressed the opinion that within a few years the national tax-gatherer might disappear from the door of the citizen almost entirely. "With the revenue stamp dispensed by postmasters in every community, a tax upon liquors of all sorts and tobacco in all its forms, and by a wise adjustment of the tariff, which will put a duty only upon those articles which we could dispense with, known as luxuries, and on those which we use more of than we produce, revenue enough may be raised, after a few years of peace and consequent reduction of indebtedness, to fulfil all our obligations." Discussing the subject a little, he declared himself in favor of "a tariff for revenue," stating that it was simply a question between the most inquisitorial kind of an internal-revenue system and a tariff system. "The necessities of the country compel us to collect revenues from our imports" he said. "an army of assessors and collectors is not a pleasant sight to the citizen, but that or a tariff for revenue is necessary." He added that "such a tariff, so far as it acts as an encouragement to home production, affords employment to labor at living wages, in contrast to the pauper labor of the Old World, and also in the development of home resources," but this was treated as a mere incident to the main purpose of imposing "a tariff for revenue."

President Grant's position in favor of "a tariff for revenue," with protection as a mere incident, was accepted as good Republican doctrine, and so continued for years. The Ohio Republicans, both in 1875 and 1876, adopted a platform which had only this to say on the tariff question: "We are in favor of a tariff for revenue, with incidental protection to American industry." Again in 1878, no allusion to the subject having been made in the platform of 1877, the Ohio Republicans resolved that "a tariff for revenue should be maintained, and so adjusted as to secure incidental protection to home industry." There was nothing exceptional in the attitude of the Republicans in John Sherman's State at this period. Similar planks are to be found in Republican platforms in many other states a dozen years ago, as, for example, the resolution of the New Hampshise Republicans in 1875 in favor of "a tariff for revenue, which shall be so adjusted as to be the least burdensome and most favorable to home industry and labor," and the resolution of the Minnesota Republicans the same year in almost the same words, in favor of "a tariff strictly for revenue, yet so adjusted as to be least burdensome and most favorable to the interests of home industry and labor."

But all these deliverances of high Republican authorities so short a time ago have already become so antiquated that anybody who should quote them to-day without saying where he found them would be accused of stating Democratic doctrine.

But the Republicans of 1888 have turned their backs upon the Republicans of 1862, the Republicans of 1869 and 1870, and the Republicans of 1878. They now demand protection for the sake of protection. Mr. Blaine set the pace in 1882, when he had the Republican State Convention in Maine adopt a platform which omitted all allusion to the idea of revenue, and declared that "American industries and labor should be protected against the unjust competition of the product of cheap foreign labor by protective tariff." Sherman has followed suit, and the platform adopted by the Ohio Republican Convention last week, which is, of course, the Ohio Senator's, declares that "we favor such economic legislation as will protect all American industries that can be profitably pursued by American citizens," and that the policy of tariff reduction advocated by the President "will, if unresisted, result in introducing a policy of free trade"—a policy, by the way, really not so severe as that advocated by President Grant in 1869.

The remarkable feaure of this change of base which has been executed by the Republican party during the last few years is that it has been made at a time when the policy of a high tariff for the sake of a high tariff is more unpopular than ever before in our history, and it is the duty of every true Republican to earnestly protest against the attempt to commit the party to a course so manifestly against the best interests of the people. If the leaders are headed wrong the rank and file should not be afraid to call a halt, and so far as may be, set them right. We cannot afford to see the grand old party wrecked now, after it has accomplished so much of good for the country.

A SUBJECT

For The County Convention

TO CONSIDER,

TARIFF REDUCTION.

The universal sentiment of the republicans of Polk County is in favor of a just and equitable reduction in the tariff and the proper place to express that sentiment is at the county convention to-morrow. Let a good strong resolution upon this subject be adopted and then let the convention select as delegates for the Fifth District Convention of the 15th only such men as are known to be in sympathy with the sentiment of the people upon the tariff question, men who will do all in their power to see that the delegates sent from the Fifth District are men who represent the sentiment of the District. We could imagine no greater burlesque upon the sentiment of our people than to see a high protective ("the higher the better,") tariff man sent to represent us. We understand that Polk County can have one of the delegates from the Fifth and if this is so she should select a man who represents her fully upon this question. There are plenty of them so there is no need of sending any high protectionist. Among those who would reflect credit upon the county are E. D. Childs, of Crookston, Hugh Thompson, of Fisher and many others. This is a very important point and one that should not be allowed to go by default. The interests of the people of this Fifth District do not lie in the direction of the present high tariff, the sentiment of the district is clearly in favor of reduction and the people in convention assembled should be careful to see that their wishes are not thwarted by the selection of delegates who are not in sympathy with them and who do not represent their sentiments and wishes. Wherein lies the consistency of incorporating a reduction plank into our platform, as we have, and selecting men to represent us in our conventions who are not in sympathy with the sentiment of their party on that point? We desire to see a set of resolutions adopted that will express the sentiment of the party in the county and we desire to see only such men selected as delegates as are in sympathy with that sentiment. If the convention acts upon this suggestion it will then have done its work as effectually and well as it can be done and our delegates, whoever they may be will know just what is expected from them and will be prepared to honestly carry out the wishes of their constituents or to dishonestly misrepresent them.

Roche and Re-is Elected.

It is a long time since we have seen any public mention of Rock and Rye and we had come to the conclusion that they had played out entirely, but on picking up the Pioneer Press of May third, this headline caught our eye: "Roche and Re-is Elected! This would indicate a Bourbon victory but such is not the case.

Some of our high tariff friends in the Northwest are just now very much worried about what the eastern manufacturer is going to do if the tariff should be reduced. Well, now, we can't see where that question interests us as much as the vital one to this country, "what will our farmers in the Northwest do if it isn't?" We have never found the manufacturing interests at all backward in looking over their own interests, and we have no doubt but that they can continue to do it without our intervening aid. It strikes us that the interests of our own Northwest are of most vital concern to us and, if properly looked after, about all we can handle to advantage. During the years of depression in farm products, while our farmers have been making a very small, if any, percentage of profit, have the manufacturers suffered in like ratio? Have their employes been cut down to next to nothing? In fact have they not made more clear money each year, with no investment, than the best of our farmers with all the capital necessary to his business? It strikes us that all of our great sympathy with the manufacturing interests is all gratuitous, is needed and could better be expended nearer home in caring for matters in which we are more deeply interested. Every tub should stand on its own bottom and not be dependent upon the ruin of our agricultural interests for its support.

The Congressional Convention.

Duluth Tribune.

Hon. T. H. Pressnell has received the following reply to a letter of inquiry regarding the call for the Fifth district congressional convention:

FERGUS FALLS, May 2, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 30th ult. at hand. No, the congressional convention to nominate a congressman has not been published. The committee voted to call the convention for the 12th of June at St. Cloud, but passed a resolution that the call should not be published until after May 15th. I see that several counties have elected delegates to that convention and presume that where there is no other convention called, there will be no question. It seemed that some of the counties thought that there would not be notice enough to elect delegates before the state convention. Yours respectfully,

E. E. CORLISS.

The May number of The Writer (Boston) contains a sharp article by James Parton on "Journalism as a Profession for Young Men," which is sure to excite discussion. Editor Dana, of the New York Sun, gives some valuable "Advice to Young Writers." Professor C. K. Nelson criticises sharply "The English of Miss Amelie Rives." "Some needs of Versifiers" are pointed out in a caustic article by James Buckham, and there are two practical articles that will directly interest every shorthand writer. The departments of "Queries," "Helpful Hints and Suggestions," and Literary articles in periodicals" are, as always, full of interest. The first edition of the April Writer was exhausted in a week, and a second edition, making 11,000 copies in all, had to be printed. The price of the magazine is one dollar a year; ten cents a number. Address: The Writer, P. O. Box 1905, Boston, Mass.

Crookston Reading Room.

Believing it should be of interest to the citizens who have so liberally aided them in their efforts to establish a free public reading room, the members of the W. C. T. U. desire to state that the building and library are now entirely paid for. After keeping the reading room open every day and furnishing a number of the best magazines and newspapers, not a fragment of debt now rests upon the Union, while within two years $750. has been paid for the building and $250. for the library. The members of the Union wish at this time to express their sincere and hearty thanks to the people of Crookston for their generous co-operation and assistance in bringing about this result. Those who subscribed five dollars, and over last October, are entitled to a renewal of their library cards for one year. The reading room is free to evesy one and it is hoped many will make use of its privileges. It is open every day except Sunday, from one to five o' clock, and from seven to nine in the evening. The library consists of 580 volumes and the following periodicals are always supplied: Five Norwegian newspapers, Scientific American, Youths Companion, Voice, Union Signal, New York Pioneer, Daily Pioneer Press, Chicago Daily News, N. W. Prohibitionist, Harpers Weekly, Harper's Magazine, Harper's Monthly, The Century, Crookston Chronicle, Crookston Times and POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, the last named three kindly given by the editors.

Superintendent of institutes, O. C. Gregg, was up as far as Warren on Saturday last arranging dates for the coming sessions in the northwest. We met him at the depot in the evening and he gave us the dates on which institutes will be held as follows: At Moorhead on May 21st, 22d and 23d; Ada, 24th, 25th and 26th, Crookston, 28th, 29th and 30th, Warren; May 31st and June 1st and 2d. Mr. Childs has arranged for McKinnon's Hall for the occasion and has also written Mr. Gregg to so change the date as to miss the 30th. It strikes us that these dates are all too previous for this country as the season is very backward and many farmers will not have finished sowing oats and barley. The first and second week in June would be far more preferable and the attendance would no doubt be far greater, as probably one-third or more of our farmers will be unable to attend on the time set. This is to be regretted as Mr. Gregg has a superior lot of institute workers this season, all old veterans in the service, and no farmer should miss this opportunity to meet and compare ideas. We would suggest, if the business has not progressed too far, that the first of these meetings commence not earlier than June 1st.

Beltrami Telautographs.

BELTRAMI, May 7, 1888.

C. J. Gullickson, of Fosston, formerly of this place, has been visiting relatives and friends here the past week.

Our photographer, A. S. Thompson, who has been quite ill for a long time, left Thursday for St. Paul where he will receive medical treatment. His many friends here wish him a speedy recovery and hope he will soon return.

I. W. Webb and wife spent Sunday with friends in Crookston.

P. O. Onstad, manager for Bangs & Co., of Ada, was shaking hands with his friends here Saturday last.

E. D. Davis has opened a temperance saloon in the Dykeman block.

The republican caucus held at the post office Tuesday evening, May 8th elected D. O. Hallock, chairman, and W. J. Nickle, secretary. The same gentlemen were elected also for the same position on the town committee, the other member being J. G. Johnson. C. M. Ohl and H. B. Budd were elected delegates to attend the county convention to be held at Crookston May 11th. After the caucus adjourned a republican club was formed, with the following members: D. O. Hallock, H. B. Budd, C. M. Ohl, J. Thompson, J. Jensen, D. E. Davis, C. E. Ford, Jr., D. E. Fulton, W. J. Nickle, Webb Murphy and F. B. Dykeman. The organization was completed by the election of W. J. Nickle, president, C. M. Ohl, secretary and F. B. Dykeman, treasurer. The first meeting will be held at C. M. Ohl's store, Saturday, May 12th, at 8 p. m. All who believe that the best interests of our country demand the return of the republican party to power and are willing to work for that end are requested to join.

I. W. Webb, J. Jensen and F. B. Dykeman are through seeding.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication May 10th 1888.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Joseph Fortin, mortgagor, to Mrs. Mary A. Allen, mortgagee, dated the 7th day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of June A. D. 1882, at four o'clock p. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 430, 431 and 432 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred forty 60-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. There is due on said mortgage the further sum of twenty-five 40-100 dollars for taxes paid as by said mortgage provided.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or by his duly appointed deputy, on Friday the 22d day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The south half of the northeast quarter (s½ ne¼) and also lots one and two (1 and 2) of Section three (3,) all in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north of Range forty-four (44) west, containing one hundred fifty-nine 23-100 (159 23-100) acres, according to the government survey thereof.

Dated at Crookston, Minn., this 3d day of May 1888.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MAY 10.

St. Hilaire Spectator: The new creamery building is nearly finished. The machinery will be here in about a week.

St. Hilaire Spectator: Tom Harris came up from Crookston yesterday with a carload of movers materials. He will move several buildings here. He expects to move the Near & Wheelden building on to Broadway and W. S. Morse's residence up from the river.

We Don't Need Democratic Advice.

Albert Lea Enterprise: The St. Paul Globe is getting worked up into white heat in its endeavor to make and unmake Republican candidates for governor. Don't spoil your linen so early in the season, Mr. Baker, as hotter weather is coming. The Republicans can nominate a candidate for governor without Democratic advice.

Warren Sheaf: Nearly every locality and nearly every newspaper are presenting their choice of delegates to the national convention. This time the Sheaf will present the name of its delegate, a gentleman who by all odds is the most popular man in Minnesota today, a gentleman who is an honor to the great fifth district and to the state, the Hon. Knute Nelson. As Mr. Nelson is not a candidate for any office this year the place of honor should be given to him and, besides, we can feel assured that the convention will have at least one able advocate of tariff reform and a brave champion for recognition to the west.

Duluth Evening Herald: The Janesville Argus suggests, in case of a deadlock between McGill and Merriam, that Joel Heatwole would stand an admirable show of stepping into the gubernatorial chair on the dark horse plan. The papers in the southern part of the state do not appear to realize that more than two-thirds of Minnesota lies north of the Twin Cities, and that it is pretty near time that Northern Minnesota received some recognition. The Republican party depends largely on the Fifth District to carry her to victory in this state, and in future the party will have to choose some of its candidates from the Fifth District.

Duluth Herald: Attention has been especially call to the fact that by reason of the "Soo" road the rail freights rates have already become the same from Duluth east that they are from Minneapolis and St. Paul east. By reason of the large amount of grain and ore shipments the freight rates from all Lake Erie ports to Duluth are 33⅓ per cent cheaper than to Chicago. Coal is now being shipped to Duluth at fifty cents per ton, while the rate to Chicago is seventy-five. Wheat is now being shipped from Duluth to Buffalo at just one-half the rate demanded during a portion of last year. The result will be to increase the price of wheat in the Duluth market over what it would have been last year about three cents a bushel.

Take Your Local Paper.

Judge Davis: Every year every local paper gives from $100 to $5,000 in free lines for the sole benefit of the vicinity in which it is located. No other agency can or will do this. The local editor, in proportion to his means, does more for his town than any other ten men, and in all fairness, man with man, he ought to be supported, not because you may happen to like him or admire his writing, but because a local paper is the best investment a community can make. It may not be brilliant or crowded with great thoughts, but financially it is more of a benefit to a community than the preacher or teacher. Understand us now, we do not mean morally or intellectually, but financially, and yet on the moral question you will find the majority of the local papers are on the right side of the question. To-day the editors of the local papers do the most work for the least money of any men on earth. Subscribe for your local paper, not as a charity, but as an investment.

A Rice County Opinion.

We believe in the present law. Our license has been $500 for the last three years, and the result is so satisfactory that if there were no statute to the contrary we would not go back to low license again. We thought a $500 license would take the saloon question out of our local politics. So far it has done so. To some of the poorer men engaged in the liquor traffic the law was a temporary hardship, to the others it has seemingly been a financial benefit. There has been a "survival of the fittest." We tried prohibition once, but one year was enough. Men voted the prohibition ticket and thought their duty was ended. No one tried to enforce the law and the whole thing was a farce. No town of its size could well have less business for the criminal courts than Faribault has to-day. Under low license and prohibition we have about thirty saloons, and for the last three years from sixteen to thirteen. It may be only a coincidence, but is nevertheless true that criminal cases have decreased proportionally. The saloon men observe the law more faithfully than they did. A man will run less risk of forfeiting a license, that cost him $500 than if it cost $100. The country saloon is no more. There may be an occasional "blind pig"—so there would be under prohibition. Personally, I believe in retaining the law.—[E. H. Loyd.

Woodside Items.

Farmers are all busy with their spring work.

Messrs. C. Foster, George Barnby and Sam Marin have gone out on the prairie to work.

The fish have been running for the last two weeks. A great many have been caught.

Mr. Gust Felsing is going to put in Charley Foster's farm this year. Gust is a hard and ambitious worker, and has two splendid teams, so he will no doubt get through in good shape.

John Tagley & Sons have just got in a nice stock of boots and shoes. If you want warranted tip-top shoes at figures so low they will surprise you, give them a call. Their motto is "quick sales and small profits."

Miss Myrtie Stoddard, who is teaching school in the town of Lessor, came home on a visit last Friday, and returned Sunday.

Mr. Fisk, of Fertile, has purchased T. J. West's place.

Mr. Byron Work, the new landlord of the Norman House, reports a rushing business.

W. C. Roome has just returned from Louisiana, where he has spent the winter. Mr. R. says Lousy Anna is quite nice but nothing to compare with Minnie Sota. Quite right, Roome, stick to Minnie and you will never get left. She is just as true as pretty, and will never go back on anybody; don't you forget it.

The "Farmer" received quite a spicy letter from Charles Crossman, who went to Louisiana last fall, stating that he likes the country down there, and that a man with a hundred dollars there could make a sure fortune in a year. Mr. C. must have been out of his head at the time he wrote the above, for he ought to have known that the people in this vicinity are not duped so easily as that.

RESULT OF AN ELOPEMENT.

Earl will have the blues, and grandma she will pout; Ann will jump out of her shoes, while running round about. For Sybel it will be a barren joy, for Charley a legal tender; Helen, of course, can keep the boy, and Gid the opposite gender. You may spy the children at play, but never Charley, upon the green; and the sweet face of Sybil Shay will never more be seen. FARMER.

We loan money to pay up railroad lands.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

To Rent.

We were mistaken about Jewell's having rented his claim this spring. He has had many chances to rent it on halves, if he would consent to furnish the seed wheat. We are told that Norie and Kirk are anxious to pay cash rent, payable after the crop is made, but Duke says he has no confidence in seed wheat notes and will only accept cash in advance. The claim has been thoroughly worked and is now in excellent shape to put in the seed. Some responsible party could make a good thing out of this claim as most Duke cares about it is to have it properly worked so that it will not become foul with weeds, and he does not wish to incur the expense of summer-fallowing.

Alliance Resolutions.

St. Paul Dispatch.

The following resolutions, after being thoroughly discussed, were unanimously adopted at a regular meeting of the Haven Alliance No. 499, April 21, 1888:

Resolved, That the executive committee of the State Farmers' Alliance acted unwisely in recommending Albert Sheffer as a fit person to be governor of this state.

Whereas, the supreme court of Minnesota have sustained the laws, which the farmers' alliance so long labored to have passed, and

Whereas, the honest enforcement of said laws will give to all persons and places equal rights and privileges in traveling and shipping their produce to market, and will lift the unjust burdens laid upon the people by corporate power within this state; relieve them from the payment of dollars every year; therefore,

Resolved, That the judges of the supreme court of the state of Minnesota deserve the gratitude and praise of all the laboring and producing classes of the state for the very able and just decision rendered in the case of the Railway and Warehouse Commissioners vs. the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway.

Resolved, That the people of this state may well feel that their rights and liberties are secure against the encroachments of corporate power so long as such judges remain on the bench.

Resolved, That those St. Paul and Minneapolis dailies and all other papers throughout the state, that published garbled, untruthful and distorted accounts of the action of the executive committee at their meeting at St. Paul, March 27, 28 and 29, thereby deceiving and misleading the people, and especially those papers that refused to publish a true statement of the case, or only published it in a mutilated form, cannot be too severely condemned.

A New Breed—Golden Wyandotte Fowls.

American Agriculturist: One of the most attractive novelties in recent exhibitions of poultry were the Golden Wyandottes. In all points except color they are similar to the older and well-known varieties of Wyandottes but are heavier, more hardy, and mature earlier. The color of the male, on breast and wings, is a deep rich golden-bay, laced with black, and the hen is a deep gold color, laced with black. There is little penciling in the center of the feathers, and clear, bright hackles. Their general appearance is striking and beautiful. The variety originated a few years ago, and rapidly found favor among fanciers. Last autumn a "Golden Wyandotte Club" was formed, with a view of promoting the pure and uniform breeding of this new variety. At the recent meeting of the American Poultry Association it was voted to admit the Golden Wyandottes to the standard. They are therefore entitled to a class in all poultry exhibitions, and are likely to become one of the leading classes of standard poultry throughout the country.

Two Bulls For Sale!

The Thoroughbred Shorthorn Bull, "Red River Valley," bred by Sam'l McCreary, Neshannock Falls, Lawrence Co., Pa., by whom he was sold to the late Geo. C. Reis, of Edna, in 1879, and by him brought to the Red River Valley. He was born May 30th, 1878, and his pedigree shows him to be in one of the very best Shorthorn families in existence. As my herd is all akin to him and I have now no further use for him, I will sell him at a bargain or trade for horses or other stock; also a thoroughbred son of his, one year old. These animals are both A 1 as their pedigree, which may be seen at my residence, clearly shows.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

[First publication April 19th, 1889.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty dollars ($60) installment of interest, which became due and payable on the 24th day of December, 1887, upon a certain mortgage made, executed, and delivered by John N. Ives and Annie Ives, his wife, of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 28th day of June A. D. 1884, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 30th day of June 1884, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 202, 203, 204 and 205.

And whereas a further default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the mortgagors failing and neglecting to pay the the taxes assessed against and levied upon the premises covered by said mortgage, prior to the date of the sale of lands for the payment of taxes, and the mortgagee, to protect the lien of its said mortgage, has been compelled to pay, and on the 2d day of May, 1887, did pay in satisfaction of the taxes then due and delinquent on said premises, the sum of twelve and 75-100 dollars ($12.75.) and the said defaults having each continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of such default and declaration aforesaid, there is claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and ninety-two dollars and twenty-nine one hundredths ($692.29.) and no action or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼.) of Section thirty-two (32.) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less, according to United States Government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest, taxes and fifty dollars attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on the 2d day of June A. D. 1888, subject to redemption at any time within one year, in manner provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE

[First publication March 29th, 1888.]

BY FAILURE TO PAY INTEREST FOR the years 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886 and 1887 and taxes for the years 1885, 1886 and 1887. Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Octavienne Joly, an unmarried man, mortgagor, to Alonzo F. Richardson, mortgagee, dated the fifth day of March A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-three and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the fifth day of March A. D. 1883, at 2:15 o'clock p. m., in book "K" of mortgages, on pages 290, 291 and 292, on which there is declared and claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred four and 72-100 dollars, principal and interest and seventy-one and 66-100 dollars taxes and interest, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

The said mortgage was duly assigned by an instrument thereof, duly executed and delivered by the said Alonzo F. Richardson, to D. N. Richardson and J. J. Richardson, dated the 25th day of February A. D. 1886, and recorded in said office of the Register of Deeds on the fifth day of March 1886, at 3 o'clock p. m., in book "23" of mortgages, on pages 588 and 589.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or by his deputy, on Saturday the 12th day of May A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The north half (n½) of the southeast quarter (se¼) and the northeast quarter (ne¼) of the southwest quarter (sw¼) and lot three (3) all in Section seven (7) in Township one hundred forty-nine (149) north of Range forty-three (43) west.

Dated this 24th day of March 1888.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk.—ss. District Court. 14th Judicial District.

In the matter of the assignment of L. M. Lambert and O. G. Mathews, copartners as Lambert & Mathews, insolvent.

On reading and filing the report of Charles M. Way, assignee of said Lambert & Mathews together with his account as such assignee.

Ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said Lambert & Mathews appear before said court at my chambers in the city of Moorhead, in the County of Clay, on Saturday the 19th day of May 1888, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, of said day, and show cause why said report and account be not approved and allowed, and said assignee be not directed to make final dividend of the assets in his hands as such assignee to such creditors as have proven their claims and filed releases of the same.

Ordered further that this order be served by publication in THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL once a week for three weeks previous to such hearing and by mailing a copy hereof to the address, if known, of each of the creditors of said estate.

Dated April 17th 1888.

[First publication April 26th, 1888.]

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk.—ss. In Probate Court.

In the matter of the estate of Eleanor A. Witherow deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Elizabeth Cooper formerly Elizabeth Norie of Clay County, Minnesota, representing among other things that Eleanor A. Witherow late of Polk County, Minnesota, on the 15th day of February A. D. 1883, at Crookston in said County of Polk died intestate, and being a resident of this county at the time of her death leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a creditor of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to B. Clements, granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before the judge of this court, on Monday the 28th day of May A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the probate office in Crookston in said county.

Ordered further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of deceased, and to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this order for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston in said county.

Dated at Crookston this 24th day of April A. D. 1888.

By the Court,
C. O. CHRISTIANSON,
Judge of Probate.

Half Fare Excursion.

We take special pleasure in calling attention to the excursions to points in Minnesota & Dakota via the St. Paul Minneapolis and Manitoba R'y, from St. Paul or Minneapolis and points South and East which have been announced, leaving St. Paul May 9 and 23 and June 6 and 20, and points South one day earlier, when tickets are to be sold at the low rate of one fare for the round trip. These tickets will be limited to thirty days from date of issue, good ten days going and five for return with stop over within limits. This will enable friends or intending settlers to visit this country during the early spring and summer, at a very small cost. Further particulars can be obtained by addressing

C. H. WARREN,
[2-tf] Gen'l Pass. Agent, St. Paul.

You can buy a whole block near the Court House at first prices, if taken soon, on very reasonable terms. This property is near the stock yards and machine shops, consists of 18 lots, 50 x 150, streets graded, and is a desirable property to hold for the rise. Will double in value within a year. Must be sold. For terms or particulars call on or address THE JOURNAL.

Duluth Evening Herald: Sam Hill, of Minneapolis, has returned from Europe and confirms the reports as to Blaine's ill health. He says it was understood in Florence that he was being treated for diabetes. He saw Mr. Blaine frequently and conversed with those intimate with him. Mr. Hill is a prominent republican and is not opposed to Blaine and his report in this matter can be relied upon.

Todd County Argus: The Brainerd Dispatch quotes Gov. Barto as saying that the fifth district is anti-McGill and that Merriam has hosts of friends who are hard at work for him on the quiet. This is about correct, but it ought to be added that Merriam has no more popular strength in the fifth district than McGill. The uninfluenced voters of northern Minnesota would like to furnish the governor this year.

Duluth Herald: If there are evils to correct or wrongs to set right the evils may be corrected or the wrongs righted through the organized parties. Those seeking to correct the evils of the liquor traffic can best accomplish their purposes through voting for the candidate who is most in sympathy with them. The prohibitionists have but one purpose anyway, and it would be wisdom on their part to vote with either party nominating a man favorable to them.

St. Cloud Tribune; This is no time for foolish words or preferences Will the republican voters go with their old and honest leaders on a march to new fields and more glorious victories? Or shall a weak, demoralizing policy be allowed to sap away the power of this mighty organization whose victories have given to man a world of equity and freedom! Let McGill retire and the party be reorganized upon its ancient plan of honesty and faithfulness to its trusts.

"Because a high protective tariff was very benficial to our infant manufacturing industries and was the means of establishing them upon a solid foundation it is a good thing to keep up now, when they are firmly established and don't need it," is the argument of the apostles of high tariff. As well might they say because our grandfathers plowed with sticks this enlightened age should do the same thing. There is just as much sense in the one as the other. The conditions of both are changed and the progressive spirit of the age demands the use of every modern improvement to make the most advancement.

The Minneapolis Journal. The strength of the Blaine boom is sentiment. The Blaine enthusiasts say we must have a candidate who can arouse some enthusiasm.

That is very true. We want enthusiasm and other things, too. But speaking about sentiment—what is the matter with the man of whom Judge Field one of the Indiana delegates to Chicago says: "Gresham has blazed a line from the log cabin along the rugged places of life up to his present exalted position. You cannot make the camp fires of political warfare burn brightly without a little sentiment. I tell you there is a heap of kindling wood for camp fires this year in the humble birth of the child, the untiring struggles of the boy, the indomitable will and purpose of the man, the shattered limb of the old soldier, the spotless purity of life, and the profound judgment of the great jurist. He combines more of Lincoln's sterling manhood and elements of strength and popularity than any man in the country.

If you want to run a campaign on sentiment let the man who nominated Lincoln nominate Gresham and put a record like that against that of Grover Cleveland.

Hoard's Dairyman: Where is the justice in a farmer with three per cent only, of fat in his milk, getting the same money for a hundred pounds of it, that the farmer does who has five per cent in his? The one should have "value received," and the other should be made to see by financial trepanning, of his head that he needs better cows. Nothing that could possibly happen would so shake up the dry bones of these shiftless, unthinking, non-reading, poor feeding dairy farmers as to be obliged to sell their milk or pool it for just what it it is worth, and no more. Nothing would so clear the minds of breeders and farmers of a lot of fog about "general purpofeness," as putting the cow and her owner right down to actual record for "value received." We hope the day will soon come when milk will be taken at creameries and cheese factories, and the returns divided on the basis of the reel butter or cheese value of it, not its weight in pounds.

Such a system would do more to make patrons honest and fair with the cow, and the factory than all the preaching since Adam. Our present system pays a premium to a man to be stingy feeder and a dishonest patron. He sees that it is cheaper to put water into the milk than feed into the cow, for a pound of water weighs as much as a pound of butter, and the danger of detection is altogether too remote.

An Elevator Scheme.

Duluth Evening Herald.

Mr. C. S. De St. Croix, London representative of the syndicate of capitalists who have joined with the Farmers' Alliance and the Scandinavian Elevator company, was in Duluth yesterday. He came here to look over the scheme for a new elevator company and to report on its feasibility to the English grain men, millers and capitalists interested. He goes back full of the belief that the project is not only practicable, but certain to be largely remunerative and of great benefit, not only to the English miller and customer, but to the wheat raiser of Minnesota and Dakota. His report will be most favorable, and on it final action will be taken on the large scale projected. In conversation Mr. De St. Croix stated that the affair was already causing something of a furore among English millers and grain men and they had already signified their intention of taking all of the first issue of $500,000 stock that was allowed them, and that his authoritative report would undoubtedly increase this anxiety to become interested in the bright project.

"There is no doubt," said the gentleman, "that the success of the company is assured and that before the season is over all details will be perfected and business actually begun."

The company proposes, as has been before stated, to build terminal elevators at Duluth and Minneapolis and to add largely to the line of country elevators on railway lines in the wheat districts of Minnesota and Dakota, of which it is already in possession by the cession of the elevators of O. C. Wolcott & Co., and the Farmers' Alliance. It also intends to build a large elevator or elevators at Buffalo. The intention is to ship the No. 1 hard wheat of the Northwest direct through to the English consumers, guaranteeing them, by the passage of the grain through no hands but those of the company, the wheat unmixed with poorer varieties of the soft wheat sections. The company is organized with a capital stock of $2,000,000, only one-quarter of which has yet been issued. This stock is to be held equally on both sides the Atlantic and the business of the company is to be transacted solely as a co-operative institution for the benefit of its stockholders. It is to be managed by ten directors, five American and five English, the Englishmen being represented at the headquarters of the company by the well known cashier of a leading Minnesota bank, who has already signified his willingness to take the position and who will hold much power in the management. The elevators to be built first at Duluth and Minneapolis will be about 750,000 bushels capacity, though this will probably be increased later. The largest elevator capacity of the company will be at Buffalo where it is intended to store wheat, the elevators here being principally for transfer and being "quick houses" with shipping facilities on both sides.

Mr. De St. Croix yesterday spent much time investigating Duluth elevators which he pronounced magnificent and far ahead in their way of anything he had ever seen. Elevators are not known in England, grain there being handled exclusively in flat warehouses by hand, and it is done very cheaply owing to the low cost of labor. He left last night on his way back to London.

Committee Report.

The committee appointed to report on the treasurers and comptrollers report submitted the following report as follows:

TO THE COMMON COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CROOKSTON.

GENTLEMAN:—We the undersigned comprising the finance committee to whom was referred the reports of the comptroller and treasurer, beg leave to make report as follows:

First as to the report of the treasurer, we find the charter provides and requires that this report shall be submitted to the council at least fifteen days before the annual election, and "shall show a full and detailed account of all receipts and expenditures since the date of his last annual report," and that "it shall be published in the official paper of the city," (see sec. 5 chap. 3.) The report as presented does not even approximately comply with the above named requirements.

We further find the charter makes it the duty of the comptroller to assist the treasurer in the preparation of this report, (see chap. 3, sec. 11 and 12,) and while it is not as distinctly stated, yet in our judgment it is contemplated by the language of this section, that said report as presented to this council should be accompanied by a certificate from the comptroller, stating he has examined the report and vouchers, and finds them to be correct, such a certificate is certainly very desirable and would save your finance committee much labor.

While the report under consideration is so incomplete as to throw but little light upon the real condition of the city finances. Yet by comparing it with the comptroller's report, which is a trifle more explicit, we catch hints of what to your committee appears to indicate an alarming condition of the city's finances.

Before entering upon this branch of our subject, we desire to call your attention to the fact that there is an apparent discrepancy between the books of these two officials in the general fund, also in the bond and interest account, as well as in the total amount of cash on hand to the credit of the city.

In the general fund, the treasurer reports $1,184.74 on hand, while the comptroller gives it as $1,105.84.

In the bond and interest account, the treasurer reports $2,178.04, while the comptroller only shows $2,157.88. And of total amount to the credit of the city the treasurer finds $16,097.87, while the comptroller shows $16,064.89. This difference in their accounts is, we presume, to be accounted for by the fact that the comptroller may have signed some order or orders on these funds and credited his account with them, which orders the treasurer had not paid, but the proper thing for the treasurer to have done was to ascertain from the comptroller, the amount of outstanding orders and presented the list with this report, which action on his part would here enabled your committee at a glance to determine whether the two accounts agreed in this particular.

But we find a far greater and more alarming discrepency between the two reports in the matter of their accounts with the different street funds. The comptroller's report showing a total amount of $2,294.72 now on hand to their credit, while the treasurdr's report shows a deficit of $5,386.66, a difference between the two reports of $7,609.83. A difference which cannot be explained as can that in the items specified above because the treasurer's report shows he has actually paid out this money, while it gives no hint as to what it was paid from, and if we accept the report as final, and correct, must conclude our treasurer has at length solved the problem of taking something from nothing, a feat which if he will but apply to our other funds with like success, would move the necessity of electing assessors and tax gatherers in future years and earn for him the lasting gratitude of this long suffering community of tax payers.

The deficiences above alluded to occur in the following street funds:

Ash street, Second to Houston Ave., where the total receipts were $228.75, disbursements $821.75 leaving a deficiency of $593.35.

Front street, Fifth to Sixth street. Receipts $1.50, disbursements $93.98 deficiency $92.48.

Ash street, south of Houston avenue. Receipts $20.50; disbursements 30.70. Deficiency $10.20.

Seventh street. Receipts $180.33; disbursements $602.91. Deficiency $422.58.

Cowing street. Receipts $56.75: disbursements $1000.24. Deficiency $943.49.

Ash street, 4th to 8th. Receipts $45.85; disbursements $1290. Deficiency $1245.03.

Elm street, 4th to Central avenue. Receipts $87.90; disbursements $545.92. Deficiency $558.02.

The total receipts for account of these streets, above mentioned, is $806.17, from which he has paid, according to his report, $7,455.04.

Turning now to the comptroller's report, while it is not sufficiently itemized to give us all the particulars we desire, yet it does suggest many questions. For instance, in a list of the gross sums paid out of the general fund, we find one item of "expenses" $1,783.37, which as the police expenses, water and light expenses, salaries board of health, printing, poor, fire department, stock yards, water mains, bridge work, &c., are otherwise provided for, would seem to require some explanation.

Again, we learn by his statement that there has been paid out of the general fund for the benefit of "streets" the sum of $2,431.24, but on the subject of which streets have received the benefits of this money he is discreetly silent.

Any such expenditure of the general fund seems to be in direct violation of the plain provisions of the charter, which requires payment for this class of work to be made from one of these funds, viz: the street assessments, or permanent improvement fund, or from the several ward funds. See Chap. 5, Sec. 12, and Chap. 8, Sec. 9, 11, and 14.

And the auditing and signing of these orders upon this fund, instead of upon the fund to which they properly belonged, if done because there was no funds in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund, seems to us a direct violation of Chap. 5, Sec. 13, and to demand further investigation on the part of this council, and such action thereon as such investigation may show to be necessary to protect the rights of the taxpayers of this city.

We also notice another gross item paid out of this gen. fund of $1,318.16 for "bridge work." This, if expended in the construction or repair of either of the bridges crossing the Red Lake River, is a proper and legitimate charge against this fund but, in the absence of any itemized account, or other information accompanied by the proper vouchers, we are unable to decide upon the merits of the case and rest with having called your attention to the item.

In view of all these facts, your committee would respectfully recommend with regard to the treasurer, that he be directed to prepare a report as contemplated by the charter stating in itemized detail all receipts from every source, whether from county treasurer, a firm, fines and licenses, or otherwise, with names of parties from whom collected in each and every instance, and giving all disbursements with equal explicitness, and that the comptroller be directed to compare the same with his books and the original vouchers, and if found correct, to attach his certificate attesting to such examination and finding, after which the treasurer shall file said report with the city clerk, who shall immediately cause the same to be published in the official paper of the city, and afterwards present it to this council for their consideration; all of which is required to be done by the charter.

In regard to the report of the comptroller, we would respectfully ask further time for its consideration after the corrected report from the treasurer has been received.

In view of the startling deficiences in some of the funds, and the irregularities in the management of the finances of the city hinted at by these reports we would further recommend that the President be directed to appoint a committee of three, to examine into the financial condition of the city both past and present, which committee shall have full power to call for all books vouchers and accounts relating in any way to the subject under consideration, and to employ at the expense of the city such assistance as they may find necessary to enable them to make an exhaustive examination as above, and to make a full report of the same at the earliest practicable moment.

And your committee would further respectfully recommend, that until the corrected report of the Treasurer recommend above has been received, or until this investigating committee has reported; and in the absence of definate information before this Council as to what accounts have funds rightly placed to their credit, that no contracts for further improvements of any kind be entered into, lest it should be found to call upon some fund already overdrawn, but that the strictest economy be enjoined upon the city officials in making such expenditures as are actually necessary for the safety and security of the property and persons of our citizens and of the city.

All of which is respectfully submitted by

Do They Need Dairy Education?

Hoards Dairyman: The town of Ellisburgh, Jefferson Co., N. Y., is one of the oldest and best dairy towns in that state. On a certain road in that town within a distance of 1½ miles are nine dairy farmers who milk in the aggregate 225 cows. Yet from an actual census taken by a correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman, these 225 cows did not earn their owners last year quite $30 apiece in the gross. It should be borne in mind that these cows are kept by men who have been dairying for years in their way; that they are within twenty hours of the New York market; that they have had every advantage any set of farmers could have to make of themselves first class managers of a dairy. Yet their cows do not earn in the aggrgate to pay 6 per cent. interest on their value and the assessed value of land used, and the market value of the food consumed. The owners simply danced attendance on these cows for the fun of the thing and paid for the fiddling(labor) besides.

Wide Awake for May is as bright and sunny as a May morning. The beautiful frontispiece (after Steffecks' painting) shows the late Emperor William and his brother when boys in company with their famous mother, Queen Louise. A brief article about the Emperor, with a portrait from his last life photograph is timely.

"President Madison's Family," with its beautiful portraits of Dolly Madison and other members of the family, is very chatty and entertaining. These glimpses into the home life of the children of our presidents appeal forcibly to every American boy and girl. Young coin collectors will turn first to the "Pleasures of a Young Numismatist." Mrs. Clark's "Rise and Fall of the Migit" is delightful in its fun, which "goes home" to every lad who has owned a printing press. Several jolly poems add to the entertainment furnished. The more substantial featues include "In a Typhoon," by Olive Risley Seward, "Chinese Dragons" by Professor Douglas of the British Museum, "Night in a Beaver Town," by Edmund Collins. In the June issue will begin Mrs. Crowninghshield,s serial of training-ship life, "Plucky Smalls, His Story."

Newsdealers have this issue for 20 cents, or it will be mailed by the publishers, D. Lothrop Company, Boston. A sample back number of any of the Lothrop magazines costs but 5 cents or of the four for 15 cents.

GRAND OPENING OF THE BERTHIAUME JEWELRY COMPANY,
Robert Street, opposite Fournet Block, - - - - - - - CROOKSTON, MINN.

We can say to the citizens of Crookston and surrounding country that we have opened a purchasing centre where you are sure to get Choice Goods, clean, and of the Latest Patterns in the line of FINE WATCHES, DIAMONDS, JEWELRY, CLOCKS, SILVERWARE, Etc.

Competition is so sharp in all kinds of industry that scores of merchants in the same business put in their bids for your cash and claiming to serve you better and save you money on your purchase. Should you find, after looking over our stock, an article you want, we will be one of the many to put in our bid for your cash, and do so with a confidence that we are certain to obtain it, because we can positively quote you LOWER PRICES without lowering the standard of the article. We think we can lead both in prices and variety of goods. We do not ask the public in general to believe us in this statement until you are convinced it is a fact. Very often you see a newspaper advertisement, and should you not look over the establishment, you would no doubt think it the best in the world. We will not boast or say that we are giving goods away, but we can say this much, that we have the LARGEST AND FINEST STOCK of Watches, Diamonds, Jewelry, Silverware, Clocks, Etc., in the city, and we sincerely ask of each and every one of you to call and examine our stock and be convinced that we have what we claim we have. and you can then judge for yourself. To those who have an idea of buying we can say, that to any responsible party we will give on trial any article in our store for 30 or 60 days, and give them ample time to see if the goods are as represented before paying for them, and be convinced that it is a BARGAIN. In a short time we will quote you prices on the most Prominent Bargains and would ask you to inspect same and see for yourself if what we claim and say is FALSE OR TRUE.

REMEMBER THE NAME AND PLACE;

'Round Home.

Nelson Mott, a Minot rustler, was on Saturday's train headed south.

Yes, Friday, Saturday and Sunday were cold days, but that is better than too wet.

S. L. Dobson arrived last Thursday and is busy getting the new mill in shape to run.

Mr. F. O. Sustad returned from his Chicago visit last week. Says "there's no place like home."

Watches, clocks and jewelry of all kinds and styles. Call and get prices. Berthiume Jewelry Co., Robert St., Crookston.

Bert Wells and C. A. Wells, Crookston old timers, came over from Grand Forks on Friday to visit old friends for a few days. Mrs. C. A. Wells joined her husband on Saturday evening.

We find it our duty to let the public know that we are agents for the best sewing machine, Domestic. We also have in stock two lighted windows and a general stock of sash and doors.
[52-tf] EIKEN BRO'S.

Nels Markusen, one of Woodside's enterprising youths, was in the city last week. He reports wheat up and looking nicely and farmers living in bright hopes of big crops and good prices.

Frankie Hawes, only daughter of D. D. and Effie J. Hawes died suddenly on Friday last after an illness of a few day's duration. Had she lived until August next she would have been 20 years of age.

McKinnon Bro's are getting in the buggies and carriages by the carload. You should examine their stock and get prices when you wish to purchase. They can supply you with anything that runs on wheels.

We loan money to pay up railroad ands.
STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

An ice wagon took a spin down Main, up Second to Broadway, thence to the place of beginning, near the big Walker mill, on Saturday last. Nobody hurt and the team not even scratched.

It was our intention to have published a full list of the delegates present at the Republican convention on Friday. The secretary, Prof. Wishard promised to give us his minutes so that we could copy the list but for some reason he failed to do so.

On all loans we make, interest payable at our office in Crookston.
STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

The Katie Pearson Comedy Co. finished their week's engagement on Saturday night with a good house. The best plays presented, to our notion, were "Uncle Dan'l" on Wednesday night and "the Phoenix" on Friday night. The company is a strong one, stronger than the general average Bittner, Melven and Silas Robinson being especially good. Miss Florence Hunt pleased us very much while Carrie Wyman was excellent in ancient character. Miss Katie Pearson is a clever little actress—and not so awful little either.

Farm loans completed and money paid over the day application is made.

The ladies taking part in the entertainment to be given by the Episcopal Church have spared no pains in their effort to make it a grand success, and everybody will be pleased to learn that on Friday eveneng at Mc Kinnon's Hall, an opportunity will be given to witness the new and charming "Mikado" Fan Drill. There will also be good instrumental and vocal music by the best home talent to conclude with a grand chorus. Fancy and useful articles will be offered for sale. Refreshments, consisting of strawberries, ice cream, coffee, cakes, home made, French candies etc., will be served immediately after the fan drill. Bring your cousins, sisters, and your aunts, and have a good time. Admission: Adults, 25 cents, children 15 cents.

Dr. Just has gone to convention in Minneapolis.

Bro. Mattson of the Warren Sheaf was a caller at THE JOURNAL office this week.

Mrs. Thos. Olafson, of Duluth, arrived on Wednesday to attend the funeral of her brother James.

Bro's Fuller, of the Little Falls Transcript, McMillan, of the Verndale Journal, Ingersoll, of the Brainerd Dispatch and Adams, of the Fergus Falls Journal were callers at THE JOURNAL office this week.

J. W. Wheeler and wife returned from their visit to Kenosha, Wis., on Saturday last. J. W. says that he did not enjoy his visit pretty much and looks it, as his sickness leaves him very much reduced in flesh, pale and weak.

Oh, that was not such a fearful row as the democratic press would have you believe. Only a few lances broken and no lives lost, and all of the family quarrels (if there were any) were tsettled right there. You will see that he republican party will be a unit as usual.

Mr. Louis Filiatrault takes exceptions to THE JOURNAL'S criticisms on the condition of the opera house and relieves his mind by calling us names. He admits all that we said and asks us to suggest a remedy. The remedy was suggested in our article i. e., opening the side doors which would permit all in the front part to pass out without wading through puddles of tobacco juice. As to that whistling, cat calls and smoking in the gallery, it is clearly for the interest of the owner of the house that every effort be made to provide for the comfort of his guests of the evening and we know that some managers that we have had in the past have prevented these nuisances. A ticket to the gallery does not entitle the holder to make himself a nuisance to the whole audience if it does the result will be that theatre-going people, who like to go and enjoy an evening thoroughly will simply keep away. Again, it is clearly to the advantage of the management to invest a dollar or two in a coat of fresh paint, (and Filiatrault admits all this, too,) because the more attractive the house is made the more our citizens will enjoy spending an evening in it, so if the hall was brightened up in this particular the increase in attendance would pay the extra cost in one evening alone. It don't matter if we have the largest building in the Northwest if no pains is taken to render it attractive and comfortable we might as well have a great barn. The management knows these things as well as we do and its fierce tirade against us does not release it from its responsibility in the matter, and the house will be the greatest sufferer if the suggestions are not heeded, for the criticisms were suggested by some who have been the best patrons of our theatre in the city, those who have paid out many dollars for tickets and who are entitled to some consideration. They are entitled to the best efforts of the management to provide for their comforts in return for their money and it is also for the interest of the management to see that they get it. The reply of Mr. Filiatrault shows that he feels the force of the criticisms, and instead of trying to cover his own shortcomings by personal abuse of his patrons if he would make an attempt to remedy the defects he would serve his own interests better, and if he was a man of mature judgment he could see it.

The Institute.

The Farmers' Institute will be held three days in McKinnon's Hall commencing Monday May 28th. Mr. Gregg informs us that he has secured an able corps of Institute workers and that all that is needed to ensure a grand success is the attendance of every farmer in the locality. Let all unite to accomplish this desired end. Our farmers pay the expenses of these institutes and should not fail to secure the benefits of them.

F. T. Haseltine is rushed with orders. Every mail brings orders for from 5,000 to 40,000 trees. He says he never had a bigger demand before.

We have nothing to say of our competitors, only that an inspection of our fine display of watches, diamonds, jewelry, clocks, silverware &c. will convince you that we have the finest and best selected stock in the city. The Berthiume Jewelry Co., Robert St., Crookston.

The finest jewelry store in the city is that of Berthiume Jewelry Co., Robert St., Crookston.

Frank Montague is no circus. Not even a little bit. Last week he mounted a ten-foot ladder to take down the festive stove pipe when the latter in sportive mood clinched with him and together they took a header upon the stove truck beneath. Frank looks as though he had interviewed a Minnesota Chief thresher or a "sassige masheen." He will not attempt to "attend court' again until Dame Nature restores his former beauty

We solicit your patronage. All we ask is an inspection and comparison of our fine display and be convinced Berthiume Jewelry Co., Robert St. Crookston.

But very few people are aware of the amount of adulteration there is in the different lines of food products. Sugars, jellies, butter and cheese are all liable to adulteration when brought from eastern markets. When in want of a pure article of cheese, call on Hartshorn, Hurlbut & Co. or B. Clements and ask for Hallock cheese which is warranted absolutely pure and full cream stock. By so doing you secure a good article while you encourage home manufacture.

Bivins, Jennie S. Carr and Lottie Anglim. Several of the pupils have already been offered lucrative positions and Columbus has accepted one at $50 per month.

We call special attention to our fine Watch reparing, diamond setting and manufacturing. Berthiume Jewelry Co., Crookston.

At Walker's Saw Mill, last Saturday, a pipe connected with the water heating aparatus burst. George Truax, whose work it is to keep the mill in repair, went at once to the engine room and ordered the pump stopped that he might repair the damage Fielding did as directed and returned to his work. Shortly after, the fireman, not knowing of the difficulty, started the pump thus throwing 120 lbs pressure upon the already weakened heater, whereupon the pipes began to split by the score. A gang of men were engaged Sunday reparing the damage. The mill has run very smoothly this season, the above, and the splitting of a large bull wheel the other day, being the only serious breakages.

We satisfy all our customers, we ask no bonus, and we pay over money on loans the moment notes are signed.
STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

Of all the counties in the District who have applied for Hon. Knute Nelson's seat in Congress, none need a representative in that body more than does Polk County. She will never get one unless she asks for it, that's clear, and having as able a legislator as Hon. Halvor Steenerson, why should she not present her claims to the St. Cloud Convention on June 12th? True, it may be said that we have no show, but how do we know before we try? We might succeed, and if we did not, it would aid our chances for success in the near future. THE JOURNAL would suggest that our delegates use every honorable means to secure the nomination of Hon. Halvor Steenerson.

James Eiken, of the hardware firm of Eiken Bros., died on Monday morning at 8 o'clck after a very short illness. He was taken sick on Tuesday May 8th, and after a week of severe pain, passed peacefully into rest. Stricture of the bowels was pronounced the cause.

R. A. Wilkinson arrived in the city on Tuesday, accompanied by Mr. Cook, a civil engineer in the employ of the Manitoba Co. Mr. Cook is engaged in surveying and laying out ground on the Davis Addition and adjoining it (where it is supposed the company intend to locate the shops) and while he and Mr. Wilkinson keep their mouths shut as close as an oyster, they do not deny that the work is preliminery to the building of the shops. The company has bought 20 acres of Mr. Davis adjoining their own tract.

Alum Baking Powder.

A List of those most prominently Sold.

The following are the names of some of the baking powders published by the public authorities as being made from alum:

Gem,	Crystal,
Scioto,	Centennial,
Zipp's Grape Crystal,	Gem,
Geo. Washington,	Windsor,
Fleur de Lis,	Sovereign,
Feather Weight,	Daisy.

There are doubtless many other brands of alum baking powder besides those so far examined and named by the authorities. Most of the baking powders sold in bulk, by weight, and all sold with a gift or present, are said to be of this description.

Prof. H. A. Mott, United States Government chemist, says: "In my opinion the use of alum as a constituent of a baking powder should be prohibited by law."

Our good neighbor of the Chronicle takes a very dyspeptical view of the proceedings of the county convention and, while charging it all to Hugh Thompson directly, he offers a gratuitous and uncalled for insult to every delegate in that convention who did not choose to vote as McGrew & Co. dictated. He says that Thompson named the delegates. In this he is ignorantly or wilfully wrong. The delegates met in caucus on Friday morning, where everybody was free to express his opinion and made up a list of delegates for each convention. When the convention met, and the ticket was announced, Mr. McGrew made a grand kick at the ticket, charging corruption and all manner of things, whereupon the convention promptly voted to smash that ticket, and did it, electing a different set in every instance. If Mr. McGrew really knows anything about it, he knows this to be a fact, and if he does not, he should not (as the honest man he claims to be) so confidently affirm that the caucus ticket went through without a change, as it is a very easy matter to prove it false. For Mr. McGrew's own sake, more than anything else, we regret to see him assume the position that he does. The only reason that we can see for his action is that this county does not agree with him in his high tariff views, but that is no good reason for him to use his paper to abuse every man who honestly differs with him upon this point, or any other, and we believe, as we believe him to be an honest man, that he will in time regret this hasty action more sincerely than now his friends do for him.

Give it to Marshall or Kittson.

It has been untruthfully alleged that a prominent citizen of Polk County is striving to be elected to the Legislature. This is wholly untrue as far as that man is concerned and we believe that we voice the sentiment of Polk County when we say that Marshall or Kittson is entitled to that office next time and can secure it if they can unite upon their man. They could have secured the last time had they been united.

Excursion Rates.

A very complete list of tourist round trip rates and routes to western points for 1888, has just been issued for free distribution by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. P. M. & M. Ry, St. Paul, Minn. [4-9]

Indian Reservation Opened.

The Montana Reservation Bill having now become a law opens for settlement four millions acres rich farming lands in the well known and long coveted Milk River Valley, also large areas of excellent grazing country on the surrounding uplands. This portion of Montana besides its agricultural resources being rich in minerals with an abundance of coal, is attractng widespread attention as is shown by the number already settled there. C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn., has issued for distribution, an an excellent map, and a pamphlet with other information regarding this country. Low rates are now being made to Great Falls for those desiring to explore this new country.

We have only one note and mortgage we make a loan the day applied for, charge no bonus, and make interest payable at our office in Crookston.

Auction Sale.

Berthiume & Michaud will have their first weekly sale on Saturday, May 19th commencing at 10 a. m where you will have a chance to buy household furniture, sewing machines, buggies, cutters, notions, tinware &c., at your own prices. Broadway between Robert and Fletcher Streets.

Peterson,s Magazine for June is an admirable number of this most excellent periodical. The opening story, "Jack's Little Princess," is a charming tale, and the illustrations are worthy of it. "Put to the test," by Frank Lee Benedict, ends satisfactorily and has proved one of the most interesting serials its author has written in a long while. Another excellent story is "The Lovers at Tuggle's Gap," and "In Harvest-Time" is equally striking in its way. Among the poems is a real gem called "Baby May," which no mother can read with undimmed eyes. Every page s bright and interesting. A new volume begins with the July number, and is a good time to begin a year's subscription or to get up a club. Terms: Two Dollars per year, with great reduction so clubs and fine premiums to those who will get up a club. Send for a sample copy. Address—Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St. Philadelphia, Pa.

CONTRACT WORK.

Sealed bids will be received by the City Council of the city of Crookston at the office of the city clerk until June 12, 1887, at 6 P. M. for building side walks and street crossings in the city of Crookston for the ensuing year. Parties tendering must specify first common lumber in their bids.

A bond of five hundred dollars to be approved by the City Council must accompany each bid, Said Council reserves the right to reject any or all bids. [4-6]

Going West.

The general interest that has been taken in the opening of the Montana Indian Reservations is shown by the large numbers of people who have already gone to Great Falls to investigate the mineral and agricultural resources of that wonderful country. The low excursion rate announced by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, makes the expense of exploring this country merely nominal, and will undoubtedly result in a still larger number following. [4-11]

A Fireproof Stable—Incendiary Rats —A New Spring for Side Bar Vehicles—Good Suggestions.

A Cheap Fire-Proof Stable.

A correspondent of the Hartford Courant relates what he saw in Frankfort, Germany. The loft of a stable had burned out, and he asked for the horses, thinking they must all have perished, but he was assured that they were in the stable and all right, for no smoke nor heat could touch them.

After everything was burned in the loft he made an inspection, and found that the stable was practically fireproof. They had in its construction used old railroad ties, placing them three and a half to four feet apart, and then put arched corrugated iron between the ties, and filled in with a mixture of cinders and lime, making it deep enough to protect the ties.

The trap or door to reach the loft was made of sheet iron, filled in with the same compound. This kind of fireproofing is very cheap and, according the writer, is very effective.

Incendiary Rats.

According to Fire and Water, Fire Marshal Whitcomb, of Boston, has been recently experimenting with rats and matches, shut up together in a cage, in order to ascertain whether they were likely to cause fires or not. In the absence of other known cause, frequent fires have been ascribed to their agency, while at the same time many underwriters affected to scoff at idea. The question may, however, now be considered as settled. The very first night that Marshal Whitcomb's rats were left alone with the matches, four fires were caused, and not a day passed while the experiment was being tried that fires were not set in this way. The rats were well fed, but they seemed to find something in the phosphorus that they liked. It was noticed that only the phosphorus ends were gnawed, and in nearly every instance the matches were dragged away from the spot where they had been laid.

New Spring for Side Bar Vehicles.

A spring of novel construction, readily attached to the platform of a vehicle and to the side bars, and designed to give to the body a regular, easy, and pleasing movement has been recently patented. The front, end, and side bars are united by clips of peculiar construction, having a horizontal lip integral with the outer surface of the inner member, to sustain the outer ends of horizontal springs, conforming to the under surface of the side bars, and extending from a bearing upon the lips, in contact with the side bars, to a point near the center thereof. These springs are made of thin steel, and in connection therewith, at each side of the center of the two side bars, ears are secured having lugs supporting springs with overlapping curved leaves, there being about centrally of the two leaves apertured oval binding plates, so arranged that when weight is brought to bear upon the springs the leaves work in opposite directions, the spring action taking place near the ends only, the central portion being bound by the elliptical plates. The body of the vehicle is connected with the spring through a block, which has its under face concaved to correspond with the convexity of the upper binding plate, such attachment being easily and expeditiously accomplished.

Butternut Wood for Indoor Work.

"Look here," said one of the best known lumber dealers to the editor of the St. Louis Lumberman. "Why don't you say a good word for butternut, which, of all the woods suitable for finishing purposes, is the most neglected right here in St. Louis? It has a splendid grain, is easily worked, and ought to increase in popularity. When my own house was built, I used cherry in the parlors and quartered oak in the dining room. Wishing to have a variety, I had the upper story rooms finished in butternut, and now many of my friends want to know why I didn't use it all over the house. Understand, I do not urge its use with the expectation of making a sale, for we haven't a foot of it in the yards. Our principal supply in this market comes from Wisconsin. It is growing scarce, and the only thing I have against butternut is that there is not enough of it."

The Professional Inventor.

Under the heading of "A Hint to Inventors," the facetious editor of Texas Siftings give the following dialogue, which is, in a measure, characteristic of a class of inventors:

First Yankee: "What puts you in such a good humor this morning?" Second Yankee: "I've just got my patent for my new patent ink eraser. I wouldn't take $50,000 for it." "Did you get a patent last year for inventing an indelible ink?" "I did, and I sold it for $30,000, and now I've invented an eraser that even remove writing done with my own indelible ink. "What are you going at next?" "I'm going to invent another indelible ink that can't be erased with my new ink eraser. I tell you, there is money in this patent business if you go at it right."

House Poison.

If the condensed breath collected on the cool window panes of a room where a number of persons have been assembled, be burned, a smell as of singed hair will show the presence of organic matter; and if the condensed breath be allowed to remain on the windows for a few days, it will be found, on examination by a microscope, that it is alive with animalculæ. The inhalation of air containing such putrescent matter causes untold complaints which might be avoided by circulation of fresh air.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Good Suggestions.

To keep frost, etc., off plate glass windows, keep the inside air dry, or inner sash tight, so that the air in window inclosure will be cold, and ventilated from the outside. A partial remedy is to have ventilating openings in the top of the window casing.

A harness pad which has been patented is formed with side flanges, in combination with strips stitched to the outer surface of such flanges, with an ornament secured to the strips between their outer edges and the edges of the skirt, whereby the harness may be very highly ornamented at comparatively small cost.

A hay rack has been patented by Mr. Calvin E. Hagerman, of Ainsworth, Neb. It is of light weight, adapted to be carried on a wagon, whereby hay or straw may be carried from the field to the stack or market, or loaded and unloaded in windy weather with comparatively little waste.

An [earthauger has been patented by Mr. Thomas Tow, of Miles City, Montana Ter. It consists of a novel form of spiral blade mounted on a rod to give great length of cutting edge, making an auger which can be easily and quickly forced down into the earth and at the same time will take hold of the earth to lift it.

A grain binder lately patented by Mr. William M. Clark, of Boscobel, Wis., relates to certain new and useful improvements in twine grain binders, simplifying their construction and making the machine compact and the operation more simple, the invention consisting in the construction and combination of numerous parts and details.

Among the almost numberless methods of removing particles from the eye, the following is recommended as an efficient means: Make a loop by doubling a horse hair. Raise the lid of the eye in which is the foreign particle, slip the loop over it, and placing the lid in contact with the eyeball, withdraw the loop, and the particle will be drawn out with it.

A candlestick has been patented by Mr. Hiram E. Lewis, of Gold Hill, Nevada. The candle-receiving tube has a spring for actuating the candle, and there is a lever pivotally connected with the tube, with other novel features, making an automatic feed for candlesticks and lanterns, to feed the candle upward as it burns down, so it may be entirely burned.

A harness back pad has been patented by Mr. Limbrick W. Vandenburg, of Americans, Kansas. It has a metal frame entirely inclosed or covered upon the outer surface with leather, with pads upon the under surface, the metal frame being composed of three sections, a central curved section and two side sections hinged to the end of the central curved section.

Some one says that a remarkable imitation of black walnut may be manufactured from poor pine, the quality and appearance of the article being such as to defy detection, except upon very close examination. To accomplish this, one part of walnut peel extract is mixed with six parts of water, and with this solution the wood is coated. When the material is half dry, a solution of bichromate of potash, with water, is rubbed on it, and the made walnut is ready for use.

The Age of Steel cautions its readers against filling a box with Babbitt metal without first washing the box with alcohol and dusting over the surface with sal ammoniac. Wherever a tinned surface is formed, cover the remaining surface of the box with clay wash to protect it against the attack of the fused metal. To solder a joint that is to be carefully united, the surfaces must be nicely fitted with a file and then cleaned thoroughly before bringing the parts together. A piece of tin foil will occupy a small space, and cover the whole surface, and when the work is heated slowly in a fire, the parts can be united so nicely that the joint will be almost invisible.

A writer in the Sanitary News suggests the following simple mode of thawing our water pipes:

When I think there is a possibility that the pipes leading to the boiler might be frozen, as soon as I start the fire I pour a little alcohol into an old spoon and burn it under and along the hot water pipe from the stove to the boiler until it is warm. This loosens any ice that may have formed, and makes a vent that will prevent any explosion. If the cold water pipe was thawed instead, it might freeze up again before circulation started to keep it open.

Hugged by an Anaconda.

When a man is hit on the neck he objects, but when an anaconda is caught by the neck he cannot object. There is a South American anaconda at the Reiche Brothers' animal store, No. 95 Park row, that knows all that, and he proved it in a rather startling way. The anaconda came from the Amazon, and is about as large as one of the river's numerous tributaries. His snakeship arrived with a lot of other snakes, and all were left in their boxes over night.

Recently it was decided to transfer the anacondas from their shipping boxes to a large aquarium. The attendants opened the boxes and began to fish the slimy reptiles out. They did not succeed very well, and presently called in Herman Rische, who is an authority on everything in the animal line.

The box contained seven or eight large specimens of anacondas, and they were tying themselves into all sorts of knots, angry at being aroused. Mr. Reiche put his hand into the box, grabbed one by the neck, and lifted it up. The snake squirmed out of the box, and then caught it by the middle of the body with his other hand and lifted it into the aquarium. In that way he transferred all the anacondas to the aquarium but one. He attempted to catch this, the biggest of the lot, by the neck as he had the others, but the big one lifted up its head, opened its mouth, and made such a vicious grab for Mr. Reiche's hand that he missed his clutch and caught the snake about eight inches below the neck. That part of the snake stayed right there, for Mr. Reiche has a strong grip, but the rest of it—ten or twelve feet, was out of the box in a twinkling. It wound its huge coils around Mr. Reiche's legs and waist, and hugged him like a bear in a powerful squeeze. Mr. Reiche struggled to get away, but the snake unwound its tail and whacked him a stunning blow in the back of the neck. An assistant clutched the tail, and Mr. Reiche spun himself out of the snake's coils amid the wildest excitement of the assistants and animals. The struggle created a great uproar, especially among the monkeys, and one them is alleged to have chattered, "got 'em again," as he saw the snake safely transferred to the aquarium.—New York Tribune.

SUNDAY READING.

Modern Public Worship—Time's Seasons—Who Art Thou?—Items, Etc.

Who Art Thou?

I met a gentle youth most wondrous fair,
The sunlight gleamed amid his waving hair,
Celestial blue his kindly, patient eyes,
Wherein a world of hidden mystery lies.

I followed him where'ere his footsteps bent,
As swiftly to and fro he came and went,
In palace, cottage, hovel, day and night,
No contact soiled his garments' spotless white.

I saw him sit beside the famished poor,
And feed them from some secret, unknown store;
I saw him lift with tender, soft embrace,
A mortal fallen in life's hurried race.

He burdens raised of seen and unseen weight;
Kindness returned for undeserving hate;
A blow, if aimed at him, he'd deftly miss,
And straightway give the offender's cheek a kiss.

He hid youth's folly; over censure's eyes
Placed soft his hand; with timely word disguise
Bold slanders tongue; bade malice cease,
And silenced discord with harmonious peace.

He stirred life's sweets in many a bitter cup,
Withheld the hand that would of error sup,
Uprooted sharpest thorns and foulest weeds,
Emplanting in their stead flower-bearing seed.

Infused hope into despairing souls;
Led back the lost to rectitude's fair goals,
And tripping softly, lightly here and there
He gathered up life's tear drops everywhere.

"O, youth," I cried, "pray tell me who art thou?
And whence this light effulgent on thy brow?
Whence cam'st thou? Hast thou an abiding place?
Methinks where'ere I go that step I trace."

"I came not, for I always was," said he,
"I am, and nevermore shall cease to be,
God's universe is my abode; this light heaven's glow.
Yet few behold me, or beholding know."

Then rising, with his garments fluttering white,
He vanished from my rapt, bewildered sight;
But sweetly came the last of his reply
In soft, clear voice, "Immortal love am I!"

Modern Public Worship.

Forms of religious service tend to conform to the spirit of their time. It is a pleasant feature of modern public worship that the people incline more than formerly to audible participation. A responsive service has many interesting features, especially for the young. It holds attention, and Aristotle says that attention is the first step in education. It gives the people a sense of personal interest, and renders the worship less vicarious.

The responsive reading of the Psalms, or of a portion of Scripture, in the early part of the hour, is becoming more customary. Selections for this purpose are printed in most of the recent books of praise, and even passages arranged merely to be sung may be readily employed in a responsive exercise. In using this method one point seems quite important that is not generally regarded—namely, a mode of securing harmony in the response of the people. Some read faster and others slower than the average movement. This discourages all, and sometimes interferes seriously with the common movement of the worship, causing few to participate. The people should have a leader here, as they have a precentor for the singing, whose voice, clear and loud, and whose regular reading should give confidence to the people and guide their progress.

The chorister, if the choir be stationed behind the pulpit, or an elder or some other person appointed standing in full view of the congregation, could readily give life to this service by careful leadership. It is surprising where this has been tried what unity and increase of participation is thus secured, and how much more pleasurable responsive services are thus made.

Changes of attitude in worship also relieve physical tedium and lessen the apparent length of the exercises.

In many places our fathers and mothers stood in prayer; or, if they sat during prayer, they stood in singing. This was restful to the body. But we have frequently worshiped in churches where the congregation sat from the close of the opening doxology to the benediction. This makes difficult preaching, for the people grow very weary, especially the younger attendants. Exact attitude is not now regarded as a religious principle, so it be only reverential, and even that is not always considered.

Time's Seasons.

Spring and Summer, Autumn and Winter form the four grand movements of the Divine symphonies of time. In the heart of every man resounds the echo of the heavenly music of the spheres. Spring is the ideal allegro, and presents the ideas that mark the glorious work. The andante breathes the balmy air of Summer, and with its slow but measures tread deprives the listener of all active sense. Man's powers fade beneath this touch of lethragy. The scherzo pictures the rustling of the leaves of Autumn, shaken by October's stirring winds, and wakes the sleeper from his dream of soothing melody. The finale prepares him for the stern realities of life, and is replete with varied activity and conflicting motives, united all the hallowed sounds heard before into one ethereal anthem of action, joy and praise.—Edward Freiberger.

Bees in the Pulpit.

A curious case of the pursuit of preaching under difficulties came under my notice. In a country church in the remote districts of the West of England a swarm of bees had taken up their quarters in the oaken woodwork at the back of the pulpit, to the dismay and discomfort of the weekly occupant of that structure. During the discharge of his peculiar function he was not only annoyed with the busy, sullen roar of the hive, but his fear of arousing their animosity by the loud challenge of his tones, or by the vibration of the pulpit, was stimulated by the light skirmishers which used to come out and perform all sorts of minature maneuvres within measureable distance of his nose. The annoyance at length became intolerable, and orders were given to smoke out the bees. This was effectually done, but, unfortunately, the clerk in smoking out the bees set fire to the church, and it was burned to the ground.

Items.

The clouds may rest on the present,
And sorrow on days that are gone,
But no night is so utterly cheerless
That we may not look for the dawn;
And there is no human being
With so wholly dark a lot,
But the heart by turning the picture
May find some sunny spot.
—Phoebe Carey.

To lie in the lap of pleasure may be the highest enjoyment of which a feeble character is capable; but a strong man must have something difficult to do; and the strong Christian man has to "work out his salvation with fear and trembling," to mortify the body, lest being over-indulged, it should learn to be the master instead of servant of the soul.—Professor Blackie.

It was the heroism of the early martyrs that conquered the Roman Empire; not the sermons of eloquent orators, nor the treaties of able disputants; it was the heroism that flinched not from the flame, that found songs in the dungeon and security in the fire. The Roman mind could not interpret that except as something divine. The Roman heart could not but feel the immensity of the power which was in that living consecration.—R. S. Storrs.

And so among the larger difficulties that throng and swarm around us as we move along into older years, there is nothing we need so much as to feel that there is some one that stands to us in just the same relation now as father and mother used to stand to us years ago. This is the first idea of God we want to have formed in us when we are little, and the last idea we want to have of Him as we move out and up into the place prepared for us in the Father's house on high. The first recorded sentence that Jesus spoke called God His Father, and His last recorded sentence on the cross called God His Father.—C. H. Parkhurst.

It is marvelous to see how often the teachings and the thoughts of Jesus are exactly the opposite of human thoughts and human teachings. The world goes with Peter until it understands the deeper and truer teachings of Christ. It is equally marvelous that the Christain soon comes to see things as Christ presents them, although they are the opposite of first thinking, and of his human conception in regard even to things of Christ. So it is never safe for us to assume that we are right, until we have profoundly considered and fairly listened to the teachings of Christ on that subject. We are His followers, and we are to go where He leads us, even when it takes us through the valley of humiliation, and when there is little light for our imperfect eyes to behold. —Anonymous.

Petrified Trees.

A correspondent writing from Silcott, W. T., to the Asotin Sentinel says: On the 5th inst. J. H. Schram, who is herding for Fuller & Walker, made a discovery that will give sufficient food for lots of hard study. On the dividing ridge between the gulches Powaka and Carner he found the broken fragments of a large petrified tree. The tree was about three feet through and the fragments are beautiful specimens of petrifaction. They vary in size from a minute particle up to pieces weighing 200 pounds. One piece, a knot, can be seen distinctly; also the pitch can be seen on the knot. One piece was decayed before being petrified and is very natural; also a chunck of yellow clay, which is found around the roots of trees, is here exposed and petrified.

An Accidental Theft.

One afternoon I arrived at the Liverpool street station and straightway walked toward a hansom which a porter had called for me, having myself picked out my small portmanteau from a heap of luggage. I had not got many yards before an attempt was made by some one in the crowd to snatch it out of my hands. I dragged it roughly from the intending thief, who suddenly disappeared. When I reached the cab there was a smiling porter touching his cap and pointing to my own luggage, which he (knowing me and mine by sight) had placed in the hansom. The portmanteau which I had rescued from the thief belonged to him; and his sudden disappearance (which I attributed to a desire to escape) meant that he had gone to fetch a constable. I drove quickly out of the station.—The Cornhill Magazine.

No You Don't

From Golden Days.

A Natick, Massachusetts, boy sends us an account of a New York occurrence that seems plausible. A genial countryman was plodding along Broadway carrying an antique carpetbag, when he was accosted by a flashy young man.

"Why, my dear uncle," he cried, "I—"

He stopped right there as the farmer fetched him a tremendous whack on the head with the carpet-bag, and exclaimed:

"No, you don't! You can't work any saw-dust racket on me. I read the papers, I do!"

The youth picked himself out of the gutter, and after eyeing the wreck of his hat and eye-glasses, remarked, ruefully:

"This is a queer reception, Uncle James. Mother sent me down to meet you at the ferry and I missed you."

The old gentleman eyed him keenly, and a light broke over his rugged countenance.

"Be you John's boy?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I'm right down sorry I gave ye that clip," said Uncle James, "but your looks deceived me. If you don't want to be taken for a swindler you oughtn't to dress like one. Lead on, sonny."

The horrible human holocaust at Arlington, Nebraska, by which seven human lives were lost still remains an impenetrable mystery. Not a mark could be found on any of the charred remains to indicate foul play and a thorough investigation fails to discover even a clue upon which to base suspicion. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death by burning. Some intimate it might have been the work of a rejected suitor for the hand of Emma Freeze, the only survivor of the family who was absent on a visit. The remains were gathered together and placed in four coffins to await Miss Freeze's arrival for burial.

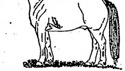
Capt. Quick, of the steamer Eureka, which was in collision with the steamer Benison and who with his crew of thirty-eight men were supposed to have been drowned, arrived at Philadelphia, with the entire crew, all safe and unhurt. They were picked up after they had been in their boats five hours.

BLOOD AND PEDIGREE.

The Fat Stock Show—The Importance of Improving Breeds of Stock—A Subject Affecting the National Wealth and Greatness.

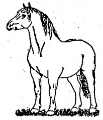
[Special Chicago Correspondence.]

THE annual Fat Stock Show at Chicago has become an institution of more than national importance. Among its exhibits are found cattle, horses, hogs and sheep, owned by breeders in foreign countries, who think it worth the while to show their stock, where it will be seen and noticed by representative American stockmen. But of still more interest are the exhibits made by our home breeders, showing as they do animals born and bred on American soil, which take the prizes over their blooded cousins from across the water.



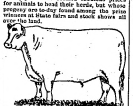
CLEVELAND BAY ROADSTER.

The benefit which has accrued to the stock interests of this country, through the efforts of the men who first imported blooded breeds into America, can hardly be estimated. The results are seen in the character of animals which are to-day found in every farming community in the United States. It is a fact, too, that many of these pioneer breeders spent fortunes and lost them in their enthusiastic efforts to advance the live stock interests to something like what they are now.



A BLACK PERCHERON.

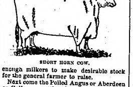
They paid what seemed fabulous prices for animals to head their herds, but whose progeny are to-day found among the prize winners at State fairs and stock shows all over the land.



POLLED ANGUS.

A glance at the types of breeds illustrated in this article will give a faint idea of the extent and character of the exhibit this year, especially when it is remembered that there were hundreds of other animals equally fine in every breed and class.

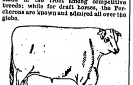
Between the Short Horns and Herefords there is always a spirited contest for the coveted ribbons, and general sweepstake prizes are, as a rule, pretty equally divided. Of course you can't talk Hereford to a Short Horn man, and vice versa to a Hereford breeder; but one thing is certain, both breeds are excellent cattle and any fair-minded stock man generally finds it hard to give a reason why he prefers one to the other. Both are distinctively beef breeds; and yet are good enough milkers to make desirable stock for the general farmer to raise.



SHORT HORN COW.

Next come the Polled Angus or Aberdeen or Galloway cattle; they are all hornless, good "beefers," fair milkers, hardy, and, for those who admire them, a profitable breed to own. A splendid type of the Polled Angus is herein illustrated, a prize winner not only at Chicago, but at other shows as well.

In the two breeds of horses, types of which are shown, may be found a subject in which nearly every body is interested. The Cleveland bays for roadsters, indeed as a general purpose horse, are conceded to stand in the front among competitive breeds; while for draft horses, the Percherons are known and admired all over the globe.



A TYPICAL HEREFORD.

So, did time and space permit, I would like to say something about the fine show of hogs and sheep, but I must pass them with the mention that the different breeds were fully represented, and by as fine specimens as the most critical live-stock fancier could demand. I noticed, too, with pleasure, that among the most interested and certainly appreciative visitors at the show, were the ladies and children; the former were, however, the most timid; but, bless you, a mighty short acquaintance generally establishes an intimacy between a kindly-disposed fat animal and the average child. Haven't you noticed this before?

The Most-Used Language.

Prof. Kirchoff, of Halle, was recently requested, in order to decide a bet, to state which language was the one most in use. His reply was to the effect that, without doubt, the Chinese language stood first, it being spoken by about 400,000,000 of people. Next comes the Hindoostanee, spoken by more than 100,000,000; then English, by upward of 100,000,000; Russian, by upward of 70,000,000; German, by about 58,000,000; Spanish, by about 48,000,000, and fifth in order French, by about 40,000,000.

All in the Family.

Here is a straight-out Democratic ticket of St. Francis County, Mo:

For Representative—John D. Highley.
For County Court Justice—John W. Highley.
For Prosecuting Attorney—Luke Highley.
For Collector—T. C. Highley.
For Treasurer—James Highley, Sr.
For Assessor—R. R. Highley.
For Sheriff—James Highley, Jr.
For Surveyor—J. N. Highley.
For Coroner—John B. Highley.

They are all vouched for as highly respectable.

She Saw His Point.

"Jane," said a fastidious gentleman, whose olfactory nerves were disturbed on entering his home by the smell of boiled dinner ascending the kitchen stair, "how often have I spoken to you about keeping the door that leads to the kitchen closed?"

"I forgot, sorr!"

"You must not forget. When I was a young man I paid my addresses to a young lady and I broke our engagement because she used to leave open the door between the kitchen and the front hallway so that the smell of cabbage diffused itself throughout the house. I thought if she did such things before I married her she would do likewise afterward. Now, do you see my point, Jane?"

"Yis, sorr."

"What is it?"

"Hi say, old chappie, hits honly 'arf han 'our to lunch, hisn't hit?" said Algernon De Ton, Mrs. Cochannigan's new English boarder.

"I believe so," replied Mr. Flipkins.

"Aw, Hi'm so glad. Hi nearly fawgot meh phawsphate."

"What is that, a medicine?"

"Naw; hit's ha tawnic, doncher naw—ha kind of bwain food."

"O, I see. Yes, it would be bad if you missed taking it. I'd drink it by the pailful if I was you. You need something of that kind badly."

A CUP OF COFFEE.

It Contains More Life-Giving Properties Than Any Other Stimulant.

A dozen or more gentlemen sat about a table at one of the great New York restaurants recently, says the New York Times, their faces betraying the contentment and self-satisfaction induced by the dinner, which had passed to the conversational and loquacious stage. Flames from a soft-coal fire threw ruddy gleams across the table, which was littered with dishes and cups. The company was a notable one, comprising among others the leader of a heroic party in an Arctic exploration, a white-haired veteran who had seen service in two continents, and a sprinkling of army and navy officers, great merchants, and rich and indolent loungers about town. One of the merchants was discoursing upon coffee.

"I tell you," said he, leaning back in his chair, and balancing his spoon, upon the egg-shell edge of his cup, "the old axiom that there is nothing like leather, is a mistake. There is nothing like coffee. It has more life-giving qualities than anything else, and will last."

"Right you are," broke in the arctic leader. "I know from my experience. In the coldest weather we had there was no such revivifying stimulant as coffee. When tired and about frozen the men wouldn't touch alcohol, but their first efforts were always to heat the lamp and dole out the essence of the fragrant berry. Another thing peculiar about the coffee we had was that it was just as good two years after we sailed as it was the first day out."

A beatific smile broke out on the face of the first speaker as he said: That is so."

At this stage the old veteran awoke from his revery with an abrupt "What's that; coffee? Let me tell you of some of my experiences in the first days of the rebellion. I had command of a brigade composed of regiments from all over the north. We were stationed right on the Potomac, and every one but myself was down with the old-fashioned ague—the kind that when a man sitting on a fence has a chill the fence for half a mile on either side tumbles down. I used to take a cup of hot coffee when I first awoke, and after thinking over the matter I tried this with the men of one of the regiments. No matter what the weather was, whenever they came in from picket or other duty they had to gulp down hot coffee, strong as blazes. The result? Well, after two weeks trial they never had any more shakes. I would have tried the same regimen with the others, but by this time war in earnest came on, and such little episodes as having the shakes were passed by without notice."

Krupp Guns.

The exclusive use of crucible steel for cannon, leading to perfection of means for making it, has been followed by an increase of lightness in gun organization, which renders possible an enormous increase of caliber. Here is a 10-inch gun, caliber 35—i e., 35 times as long as the diameter of its bore—which weighs only 21 tons. There was shown me a plate combined of 12 inches of iron, 2 inches wood packing, and a second iron plate of 8 inches thickness, making a compact mass, which had been pierced by shot from this gun. The 9.4 shot was propelled by 165 pounds of powder; the distance was 491 feet, and after passing through the treble plate, the shot actually went 1 mile and 642 yards beyond. An old wrought-iron gun would have had to be unmanageably large, thick and heavy to do anything like that, and would never have fired another shot. In modern gunmaking mere bulkiness is got rid of, as in nature the megatherium has been got rid of, the increased size of guns representing an increase of power rendered possible by refinement of material, and the humanization of horsepower in machinery for managing and moving large masses.

Chief Engineer King, in his "War Ships and Navies of the World," pronounces the 71-ton Krupp gun "the most powerful breech-loading gun ever constructed on the continent of Europe," and holds it superior to the 100-ton Armstrong. The 71-ton is 32 feet 9 inches long, greatest diameter, 5 feet 6 inches; length of bore, 28 feet 7 inches; diameter of bore, 15.75 inches; diameter of powder chamber, 17.32 inches. Over the tube (of two parts, neatly jointed) are 4 cylinders, and a ring around the breech. It is rifled with a uniform twist of 1 in 45. It is impossible to fire it until the breech is fully closed. The back of the breech-block is rounded like the letter D. It holds a maximum charge of 485 pounds of powder, carrying a chilled iron shell of 1,708.8 pounds. This is the gun that fossilizes so many fortresses. It is quasi-miraculous that this mass can be so easily moved.—Moncure D. Conway in Harper's Magazine.

Gov. Curtin's Story.

Ex-Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, in a speech in the house the other day told a very good story to point an attack he was making on some of the Republicans as follows: As to these bloody-minded men, some of whom would wipe out everybody on this side of the house, these warriors who can never be appeased, they remind me of a noted character who lived in my town years ago. He was an old fellow; I think he had been a wagonmaster in the revolution; that was the tradition of the town. He used to tell a story of his warlike achievements in battle, and he told it so often that he came to believe it and when strangers would come to the little village in which he lived they would give "Capt. Curzy" (that was his name) a drink or two and get him to tell the story. The story as he told it was about like this: "At the battle of Monmouth," he would say, "although in the light horse, I fought that day on foot, I slashed with my saber cuts one and two, and a head went off here and a limb went off there, until the blood actually ran into my shoes. [Laughter.] A pile of dead bodies surrounded me; I was excited, and I was still slashing away when I felt a touch on my shoulder. I looked up and there was Washington! [Laughter.] I shall never forget the solemnity of his appearance or the gravity of his speech. He gazed at me for a moment without speaking, and then said, "Young man, restrain your impetuosity! In the name of God do not make a slaughter house out of the field of battle." [Renewed laughter.]

Although Robert Bonner has owned the fastest horses in the country, and is ever on the alert for new acquisitions, it is said that he rarely goes to witness a horse race and never bets on one. He never drives a horse on Sunday, and never permits one of his horses to be driven on that day.

The drawing-room in Potter Palmer's Lake Shore castle, in Chicago, has just been furnished and decorated at a cost of $40,000. The decorations are in cream, gold, and blue tints, and the hangings are of damask silk copied from brocades of the last century. The ceiling has been painted and draped by Hester in the Louis XVI. style.

It will be remembered that it was the common impression in the South before the war that if slavery were abolished not a bale of cotton would be raised, as the negro would not work. It is curious to note the progress of events since that time. Prior to the war, the United States produced about 4,000,000 bales of cotton, while since the abolition of slavery about 7,000,000 bales of cotton have been produced in a year.

A cat whose general appearance indicated great feebleness and general ill-health walked into a drug-store in Van Buren, Mo., the other day, and began biting and scratching at a paper package of catnip. A quantity was poured on the floor, and the cat ate greedily, and rolled on the leaves. She was a daily visitor to the store, and got the medicine regularly, until to all appearance she was quite well. This is the story as sent from Van Buren.

George Brancroft, the venerable historian, was a warm personal friend of the late emperor of Germany, who gave him his portrait, painted in oil by Bulow, in 1874. The portrait hangs in the drawing-room of Mr. Bancroft's house in Washington, and bears in gilt letters in German text, on the frame, the inscription, "William the First, King of Prussia, Emperor of Germany, to George Bancroft, the friend of Prussia, and Germany through the years 1867-1874." Standing upon a cabinet under this portrait is a cup and saucer bearing the arms of Prince Bismarck, a gift to Mr. Bancroft from that mighty man.

The other night on the New Orleans & Northeastern Railway a little girl Mabel Smith, trying to pass from one car to another was blown off. The train was running very fast, and was followed twenty minutes later by a second section. As the second trian sped along through the darkness the sharp eyes of the engineer saw something that looked like a child lying on a clump of blackberry briars. He whistled "down brakes," brought the train to a standstill, and, running back, found Miss Mabel lying in the briers, badly scared and badly scratched, but otherwise none the worse for her remarkable adventure.

RESUME OF THE NEWS.

Big Things at Little Falls.

Little Falls, Minn., duly celebrated the completion of its great water power, and ten thousand people participated in the festivities. A large excursion attended from St. Paul, headed by Gov. McGill. Upon arriving at Little Falls the governor's party were driven to the rooms of the chamber of commerce, where they had lunch, after which they were driven across the river and spent some time in viewing the improvements. About 2 o'clock, the weather having apparently cleared, the party including the Louisville guests, again returned to the East side, a platform for speaking purposes having been erected on the river bank above the bridge. The ladies and gentlemen from Louisville, the speakers and the press representatives occupied the stand.

Dr. William L. Breyfogle of Louisville, president of the Little Falls Water Power company, opened the exercises with an address. Gov. McGill also made a grand speech and he was followed by several others. Several telegrams of congratulation upon the completition of the water power improvements were read, having been received from Hon. Edmund Rice, Hon. C. K. Davis, Hon. Knute Nelson, S. R. Thayer, and Senator Sabin. Later in the afternoon, log-rolling and other sports took place in the river, and the water was turned into the 1,000-foot canal. In the evening bonfires and fireworks were displayed, the town was illuminated and other festivities held.

The Hatch Sensation.

The story of the sudden and mysterious death of Broker Nathaniel W. Hatch continues to be the sensation of the day in New York. The reporters and officials have gathered a mass of facts concerning the Schofields which show the woman to be an adventuress of the worst kind, while Charles W. Schofield, the reputed husband, proves to be a man with a somewhat remarkable and shady history. Detectives advance the theory that the whole case was one of blackmail. They think that the Schofields put up a job to get Mr. Hatch in a tight place and then bleed him. Mr. Hatch, being somewhat under the influence of wine, was frightened, and, in attempting to escape, fell to the pavement and was killed. Mrs Schofield, who was formerly an actress named Stowell, is well known to men about town and years ago was a prominent figure in San Francisco, where she dabbled in mining stocks. After making considerable money in San Francisco she came next to New York and took up with Banker Ferris. The latter was spoken of as her brother-in-law, but it is now said that he was a former lover, and that she lived with him as his mistress. Mr. Schofield was interested in several wildcat schemes in the South and West. Numerous stories are told by men about town—brokers, restaurant keepers and others—none of which reflect any credit on either Schofield or his wife.

No Women Need Apply.

At the Methodist general conference in New York, the debate was continued at great length on the question of the admission of women as lay delegates. Forty-one delegates at once sprang to their feet and claimed the floor. Rev. D. H. Moore, of the Erie conference, spoke in favor of admitting women. Rev. J. T. Edwards, of the Detroit conference, and editor of the Northwestern Advocate, opposed. Judge S. N. Taylor, lay delegate from the St. Louis conference, made an elaborate legal argument against admitting women to vote at the present session. Rev. Dr. J. H. Bayliss, of the Cincinnati conference, argued that the conference had the right to construe the law in regard to the eligibility of women. The vote was finally taken on the adoption of Rev. David H. Moore's substitute for the report of the committee. It proposes that the women elected as lay delegates to the present general conference be seated, and the question of their eligibility to future general conferences be determined by a vote of the churches and annual conferences. This substitute was lost. Then a vote was taken upon the amendment to the report offered by Rev. D. Neely of Philadelphia. This amendment excludes the women from seats in the present conference, and submits the question of eligibility to future general conferences to the annual conferences. It was adopted by a vote of 240 ayes to 175 nays.

John J. Corneilson, who on Dec. 10, 1884, horsewhipped Superior Judge Richard Reed at Mount Sterling, Kentucky, from shame for which Reed committed suicide, was brought to Louisville for safety from mob violence. Corneilson was arraigned at the time of the assault, but was not convicted until April 3, 1887, when he was sentenced to three years in jail, the offense not bearing a penitentiary penalty. Three citizens of Mount Sterling made affidavit that Corneilson was in danger of a mob, and he was brought there. His ground for the assault was that Reed decided a case unjustly against him.

A package was received at the treasury department at Washington from the American Exchange National bank of New York, purporting to contain $41,000 in bank notes, but when it was opened nothing but brown paper was found within. The package was returned to the bank. The robbery is supposed to have occurred on the train between there and New York. The president of the express company has no idea at what point it took place, whether before or after it came into the hands of his company. He thinks it a very clever piece of work which it will be extremely difficult to trace.

Fred J. Stewart, treasurer of Luce county Michigan, and postmaster of Newberry, was arrested by United States authorities with his deputy Clyde W. Heux, editor and publisher of the Newbery News, on the charge of embezzlement. They were arraigned before United States Commissioner Stacey, pleaded not guilty and were held under $2,000 bonds each. Stewart, during the examination, jumped from a second-story window and attempted to escape, but officers caught him. Both are now in jail, unable to give bonds. The affairs of the postoffice are in a horrible shape. Crookedness being suspected at Washington, Inspector Stewart was sent there and found a $1,200 shortage. Stewart is a young man who a year ago had brilliant prospects, but was ruined by liquor. It is not yet known how his accounts stand as treasurer.

It was generally believed that the burning of the family at Arlington, Neb., was an accident, but the belief is now gaining ground that they were murdered and burned in the barn by some fiend. Prior to the funeral a most thorough examination of everything connected with the mysterious affair was made in the presence of Justice Cook, Dr. Hadley and several others, nearly all of whom came to the conclusion that the deaths were not accidental. Remnants of clothing worn by the victims were found among the ruins of the barn. Among these was a stiff collar fastened to the dress worn by Mrs. Fred Grotelushen. This was saturated with blood, and near the dress there was found about three ounces of clotted blood, as if some had come from the victim's throat. The remains of Mrs. Grotelushen was then exumed, and her throat was found to have been cut. The sight convinced everybody of foul play. They believe that the murderer met his death in attempting to escape after he had fired the barn, or that he committed suicide.

The salient point of the preface of Gen. Boulanger's book is the general's advocacy of the right of the army to have a voice in the question of peace or war. The book is almost everywhere regarded as a direct appeal to the army to support him in a possible coup d'etat, and it is now seen that the reforms instituted by him while minister of war, whereby the French soldier came into possession of comforts and the exercises of privileges heretofore denied him, were conceived and put into operation with the same ulterior view.

Gov. Hill of New York has again vetoed the Crosby high license bill. His grounds are among others, that it unjustly discriminates in placing a higher license on beer than on liquors and that it unreasonably taxes grocers' sales of liquors in packages.

The steamer S. B. Barker, which was in Ashland harbor during the winter, left Bayfield for Duluth and is fast in the ice between Apostle islands and Duluth. She has coal and provisions for three or four days. Capt. Flynn of Duluth is the owner. The Barker is not considered staunch enough to withstand a hard squeeze, but may escape from her perilous position. She has a crew of six men and no passengers.

The Mississippi is up to the danger mark all the way from St. Paul to Dubuque. At the latter place the water covers the sidewalk on the levee and will go over the lower floors of the stores there from which the merchandise has been removed to safe places. The saw mills are stopped and a few inches more will shut down the iron foundries, plow works, furniture factories and other manufactories. Water covers East First street to a depth of six inches. The Burlington freight yards are virtually an island.

A Baltimore special says: A singular meeting took place recently at one of the wharves here. The steamer Minnesota delivered on the water side a large shipment of straw matting that left Hong Kong Feb. 5 last, by steamer for London, where it was transshipped to Baltimore. On the land side she was met by a train of cars from Vancouver, that discharged at the same time the same kind of cargo, that had left China March 25. This makes a difference of forty-eight days in favor of the transcontinental route.

At the annual meeting of the Indiana Millers' Association at Indianapolis, C. H. Zeypt, of Illinois, president of the National Millers' Association, said he had just returned from Europe and was sure that there would be an enormous decline in the exportation of flour from the United States this year. The spring wheat crop in the northwest was too late and frost would probably damage what may be growing now. In the west he said the crop would hardly be worth harvesting. Prices would not be any higher because India, Russia, Australia and Chili have heavy crops.

The climax in the case of the Willimantic Savings Institute was reached in the arrest of Cashier H. F. Royce, on 25 counts, which indicate that Royce's rascalities have been more bold and extended than was at first expected. The indictments allege the misuse of deposits belonging to Frank Frost, which was covered by false entries, and the making of false entries for a large number of notes and bills receivable which were never sent for collection. He is also charged with appropriating about $35,000 at different times.

A triple tragedy was enacted near Beecher, Ill. Henry Miller and Wm. Oderholt, farmers, had a lawsuit over a trivial matter, and Miller the loser, swore he would get even. After the trial Miller, true to his word, shouldered his rifle and went to a field where L. C. Kinzey, one of Oderholt's witnesses, was plowing. Miller first killed Kinzey's horse and then shot Kinzey twice, inflicting mortal wounds. Then the slayer went to another field where Oderholt was at work. Oderholt's horse was first slain by Miller, and then Oderholt himself. It is supposed that Kinzey and Oderholt attempted to shield themselves behind their horses. When the revenge was complete, Miller proceeded to the hut which served as his home, and after setting fire to the place, blew his own brains out.

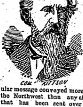
DEATH OF COM. KITTSON.

The Oldest, Wealthiest and Best Known Northwestern Pioneer Passes Away.



COM. KITTSON

From Harvard, Ill., a telegram was received in St. Paul that stirred many hearts. The message was commonplace; it simply chronicled a death. So many messages of like import pass over the wires daily that the public passes them by with careless interest when they appear in the newspapers. But this particular message conveyed more of interest to the Northwest than any similar telegram that has been sent over the wires for many a long day. It was brief, as telegrams always are, and simply stated that Commodore Kittson had died on a train near an obscure station on the Omaha road in Wisconsin.

But few men in the Northwest, even those who boast a pioneer record, have such a remarkable career as Norman Walfred Kittson. He was born in Lower Canada—Sorel—in March, 1814, and was a trifle over seventy-four years of age at the time of his death. A grandson of Alexander Henry, the celebrated explorer who journeyed through the Superior, Manitoba and Saskatchewan districts as early as 1776, it was not surprising that his ambition led him to probe the Northwestern forests. In May, 1830, then but sixteen years old, he became an employe of the American Fur company and journeyed northwest, being stationed between the Fox and Wisconsin rivers. In 1832 he was sent to the headwaters of the Minnesota river, and two years later he was employed in the sutler's department at Fort Snelling. Here he remained until 1838, when he returned to Canada for a brief period, returning to establish a fur business of his own at a point not far above Fort Snelling. In 1843 he entered the American Fur company as a special partner, and his headquarters were at Pembina, where he collected furs and shipped them in Red river carts to Mendota. It was in that same year that he purchased the tract of land now known as "Kittson's addition" on the map of St. Paul—a tract that is now among the most valuable business property in the city.

A MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATURE.

In 1851 he was elected a member of the council of the Minnesota legislature from the Pembina district. He was re-elected in 1853, and served four sessions, in which he took an active and prominent part. Old settlers now delight to recall the fact that to attend these sessions Mr. Kittson was obliged to travel the distance—about 500 miles—by dog sledge or on snow shoes. It was in 1854 that Mr. Kittson came to St. Paul to reside permanently. He formed a partnership with the late William H. Forbes, the firm being known as Forbes & Kittson, engaged in the general Indian trade supply business. That same year he built the Sintomine hotel at the corner of Sixth and John streets, but it was burned shortly after. In 1878 he was elected mayor of St. Paul, which was the only public office in the city he ever held, though often solicited to permit the use of his name for other places.

Mr. Kittson's personal history is as interesting as a romance. Without a single exception he was the oldest pioneer of the state. Gen. Sibley, Edmund Rice, Russel Blakeley Col. Allen and scores of others known as "pioneers" came after him. But aside from his private life he had a great influence on the public weal, not only as mayor of St. Paul, but as one of the projectors of the Manitoba road. Years of litigation, now almost ended, but still more muddled by Mr. Kittson's death, has been the outcome of his first and only railroad interest. He was on his way home to answer to the suit brought against himself and J. J. Hill when death overtook him. Mr. Hill and the Kittson heirs will now be left to fight the battle

Years ago, when fortunes in the Northwest were estimated at five figures, Commodore Kittson was rated a millionaire. His long life, frugal habits, enormous profits reaped from a business that was practically a monopoly, enabled him to gather a fortune such as is seldom given to adventurers in a new country. In 1860 he boasted $100,000. Ten years later his St. Paul property and railroad speculations made that sum $2,000,000. Fortunate investments, increase in realty values, a boom in Manitoba stock soon added other comfortable figures to the overburdened vaults, and yesterday men could have been found—of good judgment, too—to take oath that $5,000,000 would be a moderate estimate of Mr. Kittson's wealth. With a possible exception, he was the wealthiest man in the state. Generous with bounty, unostentatious yet lavish, he did not spend his income even with such magnificent stockfarms as Erdenheim and Kittsondale to drain his coffers. His St. Paul property is of great value. The Kittson residence on Summit avenue, is valued at $250,000 and is the largest and one of the handsomests private residences in the city. Other valuable property includs the Clarendon hotel, valued at $150,000 and the Astora hotel, valued at the same figure. A large interest in the St. Paul Gas company is a portion of the commodore's belongings, and the revenue has formed a good portion of his annual income.

Stories That Might be True.

There was once an alderman who was approached by a capitalist on the subject of municipal economy. Said the capitalist to the alderman: "I have in my pocket an ordinance which I am sure would greatly benfiet the public in this city were it passed. I have also $500 in my pocket which I intend, seeing that you are a worthy man, to present you with."

"Sir," replied the alderman, "I have goods enough to content my modest wants, and do not care for your money. As for the ordinance, I will look on that at the proper time And now, as I am already late for prayer meeting, I trust that you will excuse me."

Once upon a time there was a man who had no umbrella, although it chanced to be raining very hard. He stepped into the office of a friend and said to him:

"I would like to borrow your umbrella. I will return it in an hour."

"Certainly, with pleasure," was the reply.

It was then 2 o'clock in the afternoon. At one minute of 3 the man appeared in his friend's office and returned theumbrella.—Merchant Traveler.

A settler near Rapid City who had advertised to prove up on his preemption recently came to town with his witnesses, but finding that a $30 judgment had been filed against him, and that the $300 which he had made arrangements to borrow would not bring him out whole, he abandoned the idea of securing title, filed a homestead on his claim and thus fooled the tax-gatherer, money loaner and stony-hearted creditor. He says no "financial broker" is going to eat bananas in Florida next winter on his hard earned money, while he is sucking snowballs on a mortgaged ranch.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Senate and House.

SENATE.

The railroad forfeiture bill after being amended, was passed.

The copyright bill passed—yeas 35, nays 10.

On motion of Mr. Spooner the House bill for the establishment of a life saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis. was passed (with amendments insertin other points)

Among the bills reported from committees and placed on the calendar were the following: Senate bill for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast. Senate bill to transfer the survey of the coast to the navy department.

HOUSE.

Mr. Thelan, of Tennessee, presented a conference report, which was adopted, granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., authority to build two free bridges across the Red River.

The House then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Springer, of Illinois, in the chair) on the tariff bill.

To-day had been set apart by the House committee on agriculture for final action on the Butterworth lardine bill, but in view of the fact that only 11 members of the committee were present the consideration of the matter was again postponed. During the session there was some discussion, without result, of several propositions, which have not yet taken the form of bills, based upon the Butterworth bill, but generally of a wider scope and contemplating an inspection of food products generally and the imposition of taxes upon adulterated articles.

SENATE.

Mr. Allison, from the committee on appropriations, reported back the pension appropriation bill, and the bill making appropriations to enable the executive departments to participate in the centennial exposition of the Ohio valley and central states in Cincinnati, from July to October 1888.

Mr. Stewart gave notice that after the animal industry bill was disposed of he would ask the Senate to consider the bill for the admission of Washington territory as a state.

Mr. Blair, from the committee on education and labor, reported back the House bill to prevent the employment of alien labor on public works.

The senate in secret session did not reach any conclusion either upon the Riddleberger resolution for open discussion of the fisheries treaty or the Hoar resolution providing that the debate be stenographically taken down for future publication. The subject went over until next week.

HOUSE.

Mr. Sayres, of Texas, called up a bill making appropriation of $450,000 to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888. There is a clause in the bill repealing the permanent appropriations for the collection of customs. An amendment was adopted appropriating $3,500,000 to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the payment of army and navy pensions to invalid widows, minor children and dependent relatives, and survivors of the war of 1812.

An amendment was adopted providing that the appropriation of $190,000 made by the act of March 3, 1887, for heating apparatus to be furnished before June 30, 1888, to certain public buildings, shall continue available to enable the secretary of the treasury to fulfill contracts entered upon prior to June 30, 1888. The bill was then passed as amended.

The House then went into committee of the whole (Mr. Springer, of Illinois, in the chair) on the tariff bill.

SENATE.

No business transacted.

The senate committee on privileges and elections held a meeting to-day to consider the Turpie case. After an hour's consideration, the committee came to the unanimous conclusion that the determination of the Indiana house of representatives under the particular circumstances of this case of the title of its members to their seats is conclusive upon the senate, and therefore that the persons who voted in the election of senator must be conclusively presumed to have been entitled to vote, and consequently that Mr. Turpie must be held to be entitled to his seat.

HOUSE.

The tariff speeches were continued, the principal one being that of Mr. Scott of Pennsylvania.

SENATE.

Senator Sabin offered in the senate today an amendment to the bill to encourage the schools which have been giving some attention to Indian education in the West and to advance the cause of education among the Indians.

Senator Edmunds reported favorably the house bill fixing a term of the United States district court at Duluth. The bill was amended, however, by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the senate bill, which reads as follows:

That hereafter and until otherwise provided by law there shall be held annually on the second Monday in September a term of court in the city of Duluth in said district, said term to be in addition to the terms now required to be held at the cities of St. Paul and Winona in said district, and a grand and petit jury may be summoned to serve at said term of court hereby established.

This cuts out the provision for separate terms of district and circuit court at each of these places, and makes no change in the time of holding court at Winona or St. Paul, as did the house bill.

In the senate Mr. Spooner presented a petition from citizens of Stockholm, Wis., asking an appropriation of $15,000 for the repair of the pier at that place. It is represented that the water in the lake was higher than ever this spring and that the pier was partly carried away by the wind and ice. The money is needed this year to repair it if it is not to be swept entirely away.

The senate in secret session decided not to open the doors when the fishery treaty is under consideration, nor to admit even official reporters. This is a rejection of both the Hoar and Riddleberger resolutions.

HOUSE.

Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, spoke eloquently upon the industry of agriculture.

Representative Matson of Indiana, the chairman of the house committee on invalid pensions, reported from the committee a bill extending the time for filing claims for arrears of pensions so as to give the benefit of them to all claimants who file their claims after the expiration of the time limit, or who may yet file claims before the passage of this bill. If the bill should be enacted the cost to the government will be $250,000,000.

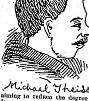
The President and Mrs. Cleveland will take possession of Oak View during the week. President Cleveland has but two engagements for the summer, outside of Washington. On June 21 he will go to Germantown, Pa., and attend the 20th anniversary of the Presbyterian Church. On Decoration day he will be in New York and Brooklyn and take part in the celebration of the Grand Army in both those places.

On the New York stage "Nadjy" proves very much the same brilliant success that Chassaigne's first American production "Falka," was. McCall brought it out in Philadelphia, and Chassaigne's second production seemed quite as successful. The music is spirited, melodious, and rich in harmony. The libretto is quick and ready, though the plot is sufficiently complicated to arouse interest instead of perplexity. The reception of the first act by a crowded house decided the fate of the opera. It was a success in which the stage manager, the costumer, and the scenic artist all anticipated, and the first two scenes painted by Hoyt were greeted by rounds of applause.

Wm. Showers, the escaped murderer from the Lebanon, Pa., jail, was captured in a deserted schoolhouse five miles from the city, by three young men.

IN THE FIRST DEGREE.

Michael Thill Convicted at Caledonia of the Murder of His Sister's Illegitimate Child.



CALEDONIA, Special, May 11.—The trial of Michael Thill for the murder of his sister's illegitimate child has ended, after a six days' session, in a verdict of murder in the first degree, as charged in the indictment. The defense was conducted on two theories, both aiming to reduce the degree of the crime. It was sought to show that the injuries discovered by the autopsy might have been caused by a difficult birth, and that death resulted from these, aided, perhaps, but not caused by the exposure of the child in the garden where Michael admitted that he had taken and laid it. The other defense was emotional insanity caused by the shame of his sister. The jury spent six hours in deliberating, and then announced the verdict. Thill received the verdict with composure, his face betrayed no sign that he appreciated its awful significance. The stolidity which he has preserved during the trial was unruffled by the decision. His counsel moved for a suspension of sentence and for time to prepare a case on which to move for a new trial, and it was ordered that the term, when the other cases for trial are finished, be adjourned until June 26, when the motion will be heard. The case is a notable one as being the first in the history of the county of conviction on the verdict of a jury of murder.

A Long Lost Daughter.

This story was considered interesting enough to be telegraphed by the associated press from Boston being condensed from a lengthy romance just developed by the Boston Globe:

In 1862 one Dr. August Franklin came to Nantucket, and soon became a leading light in society, gaining the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. Finally he began to pay marked attentions to a young lady who was handsome and well-to-do. He was accepted, the bridal preparations were made, the day was set, but the doctor suddenly appeared ill at ease. He sent word to his betrothed that the wedding could never take place, and before the people of Nantucket could recover from their surprise he sold out his lucrative business and left Nantucket. Sixteen months later he returned and attached to his card, informing the public of his return to practice, was the announcement that he would resume the "family name of Franklin Augustus Ellis." This change of name created a sensation but his business increased and he continued to make money. He had however, become addicted to the use of morphine. So firm a hold had the habit taken upon him that he died from its effects in Worcester, May 24, 1884. His remains now lie in the cemetery there. He left a will by which three sisters were bequeathed some $15,000. The attorney for the sisters, George H. Newton, of Monson, who visited California last October, chanced to meet Mr. E. M. Cleveland, a former acquaintance of Ellis, who told the attorney, greatly to his surprise, that the doctor had been married in 1860 to one Martha Pity, daughter of a wealthy widow at Saylesville, Ala., by whom it was ascertained he had one daughter. Also that on May 5, 1861, the doctor had suddenly deserted his wife and her mother, taking with him the proceeds of the sale of the later's plantation, some $6,000, and had never afterwards been seen by them.

Mr. Newton secured the assistance of O. E. Hall, of Collingsville, Ala., who in January last succeeded in tracing the long lost daughter to one of the "moonshining" districts of Tennessee. She was scantily clothed, and her appearance indicated that she had been subjected to all the drudgery that could be imposed upon her, and that she had practically been the slave of an old eccentric "moonshiner," although her character was above suspicion. She told Mr. Hall that her mother had been dead about 11 years. She was brought to Collingsville, where she was at once identified by her aunt on account of her striking resemblance to her mother. The clergyman who married Dr Ellis, and several witnesses of the marriage have been found and steps will be taken at once to secure for the young lady her rightful share of her father's estate.

Sat Down on Wolseley.

In the British House of Lords Viscount Harding asked the government as to the truth of the reports that England is defenseless, that her guns are the worst in the world, and that many of her ships and ports are unarmed. The Duke of Cambridge denied that the country was in imminent danger. The sensational articles in the press purporting to have emanated from the highest authority had not emanated from him.

Lord Salisbury said the government must observe the utmost reticence in such matters. Nothing could be more insane than to explain to the world England's strength and the nature of the precautions she was taking. The fact was that there had been a considerable increase of preparations in recent years. Since 1884 the army had been increased from 181,217 men of all arms to 212,470. Lord Salisbury strongly condemned Lord Wolseley's recent speech at a banquet. Lord Wolseley ought to have spoken in parliament, where his statements could have been answered and refuted. The tone of panic which pervaded the language used outside of parliament was not shared by the government, which was fully conscious that to disregard the defenses of England in the present state of the world, would be a very grave dereliction of duty.

Lord Salisbury's speech in the house of lords has caused a sensation in political and military circles. The attack on Gen. Lord Wolseley was wholly unexpected. The general opinion is that Lord Wolseley will resign after replying to the premier. Liberals are inclined to support Lord Wolseley's position, which is approved by all the military members of the house of commons.

A Tremendous Flood.

During the rise in the Mississippi river the levee situated south of Alexandria, Mo., broke in several places, and a vast volume of water began pouring into the town, which was completely inundated. A spasmodic attempt was made to check the irresistible flood, but within a few minutes the laborers quit and accepted the inevitable. It required less than an hour to inundate the entire town, which is covered with water from two to six feet, submerging almost every foot of ground. Water having reached half of the houses, their occupants have sought refuge in the upper stories of buildings, where they will be imprisoned until the subsidence of the flood in the main streets. The water is fully three feet deep, circumscribing the movements of the population and rendering transportation from one point to another possible only by means of skiffs or rudely constructed rafts. Sidewalks are over-flowed, and skiffs are landed in the door-ways of private residences. Business is entirely suspended. There has been no loss of life nor great damage to property within the town. At Alexandria the Mississippi is fully seven miles wide, and within the range of vision one vast expanse of water greets the eye. The area of farming land in the Missouri bottoms that is submerged is estimated at 75,000 acres, and a continuance of the flood will result in an approximate loss to the farming community of that region of at least $300,000. A high wind prevailed which caused the waves to wash openings in the Warsaw levee, which affords protection to some 60,000 acres of fertile land. Advices from the Red river country report that the damage done to the inhabitants of the Red river valley is almost beyond computation, and the overflow the largest since 1843. Most of the plantations near the river have been covered with water four to six feet deep, and many miles of fencing, cribs and barns have been washed down and carried away. Many of the people have lost their household furniture, provisions and corn. In several places the water extended from the hills of Arkansas to the hills of Texas, a distance of ten to fourteen miles. At West Norwood a negro was drowned while trying to swim from the overflow. Two white men were drowned in Mill Creek and quite a number of other deaths are reported, but names not given. Planting in the bottoms will have to be done over again.

Manitoba's Mismangement.

The galleries of the legislature at Winnipeg were crowded on the occasion of the delivery of the budget speech by Provincial Treasurer Jones. He stated that owing to the wretched condition in which the books had been left by the late Norquay government it was almost impossible to figure what their total discrepancies were. No books had been kept by the prothonotary of the court of queen's bench, and in the treasury department there was no entry in the cash book for fifteen months. In one room he had found vouchers representing a quarter of a million of dollars lying scattered about the floor, not even being under lock and key. No bank book was kept by the government, and before any checks were issued it had apparently been the custom of the ministers to telephone the bank and find if any funds were on hand. On July last the late government issued a loan of $100,000, which was all gone by August 5, and they had paid for the money at the rate of 10 per cent. Before leaving office the ministers had all drawn their salaries up to the end of the month, thus defrauding the province out of $600. Various other shortages were instanced, chief among which were the deficiency in the absconding queen's printer's accounts, the overdrawn draft of a prominent official of the agricultural department, and various sums appropriated for legal advice, of which no record was kept. He estimated the total liability of the province at $263,683.90, and the assets at $4,239,223.22, exclusive of school lands.

Laid to Rest.

The funeral of the late Commodore N. W. Kittson took place from his residence on Summit avenue St. Paul, Minn., on the 14th inst. The funereal services were private, and were attended only by members of the family and a few intimate friends. It was a sad and sorrowful company that gathered in the halls, and the magnificent surroundings had as little effect in assuaging the grief of the bereaved, as the most humble cottage. The only thought to occupy the minds of those present was that the beloved form lying before them was still and pulseless, and the kindly light of his eyes gone forever.

The remains were laid in the main parlor, and were surrounded by a profusion of beautiful, pure white flowers. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. William M. Pope, of the Church of the Good Shepherd. The ritual used was that of the Episcopal church, and in the darkened rooms, surrounded by the insignia of mourning, the services were very solemn and impressive.

The members of the family present were: Norman Kittson, Rev. Henry Kittson, Lewis Kittson, Hercules Kittson, L. Coyle Kittson, Alfred Kittson, Miss Annie Kittson, Miss Marie Kittson, Mrs. John Baker, Mrs. Lewis Baker, Jr., and the commodore's nephew, Ernest Kittson. The pall bearers were Messrs. I. V. D. Heard, Alexander Ramsey, R. B. Galusha, W. R. Marshall, A. H. Wilder, J. J. Hill, George R. Finch and Lewis Baker. Among those who were present were noticed Gen. H. H. Sibley, Maj. Pond and Maj. Newson. The body was interred in Oakland cemetery by the side of the late Mrs. Kittson and a son who has died.

England's Safety.

In connection with the recent assertions of the London Daily Telegraph with reference to the English army and navy, Lord Randolph Churchill has written a letter to that paper in which he says: "Your statements are supported by the highest military authority to a greater extent than either you or the public appear to be aware of." He then refers to the inquiry made by the committee, and quoted the replies of the Duke of Cambridge justifying the Telegraph's statements, which, he says, "form an instructive commentary upon the present system of war office administration, which continues to spend about twenty millions yearly, mostly derived from taxation, and which may claim lasting glory for having produced these sublime results.

"The Duke of Cambridge adheres to the statements made by him before the committee," continues Lord Randolph, "and the premier, instead of permitting himself to censure Lord Wolseley, would better have reassured and soothed the public mind if he had been able to disprove and refute the strong and unqualified condemnation of our military condition, which has been given to parliament itself by the highest military authority."

The Soo Road.

W. D. Washburn, of the Soo road, was at Chicago the other day, and when he was asked about the reported sale of the "Soo" railroad to the Canadian Pacific; he said: "There was no such sale. What was sold was a large block of consolidated stock of the Sault Ste. Marie, the Aberdeen road and the Minneapolis & Pacific. The sale was made to parties in New York, some of whom are stockholders in the Canadian Pacific. The "Soo" was built to give the Canadian Pacific an independent connecting link with the seaboard. The parties who were holding the stock would have found it necessary to part with it. If the stock were put on the market, there was a possibility of pool lines or other interests adverse to the Canadian Pacific getting hold of it. The road will continue to run as an independent line."

Advices from the red River of the South report that damage done to the inhabitants of the Red River valley during the past few days is almost beyond computation, and the overflow the largest since 1853. Most of the plantations near the river have been covered with water 4 to 6 feet deep, and many miles of fencing, cribs and barns have been washed down and carried away.

LOSS AND GAIN.

Dr. Talmage Ciphers Out Sums in Gospel Arithmetic for Bargain-Makers.

Wholesome Advice to Money Seekers and All Those Who Worship the Golden Calf.

Rev. T. Dewit Talmage, D. D., told the congregation at the tabernacle Sunday that a malicious falsehood had gone through the country, saying that at a recent meeting of the officers of the 13th regiment at his house he had set before them four kinds of wine. He said: "I will pay $1,000 to any charitable institution if it can be proved that one drop of wine or any other intoxicating liquor was offered in my house that evening. The twenty-five gentlemen present may be called upon for testimony. Any three respectable clergymen, or lawyers, or detectives may be selected; they also to decide what charity shall have the money. I ask the newspapers all over the land, which have been misled by the falsehood, to correct it."

Dr. Talmage announced as the subject of the sermon "Loss and Gain," and his text was:

"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" —Mark viii, 36.

I am accustomed, Sabbath by Sabbath, to stand before an audience of bargain-makers. There may be men in all occupations sitting before me, yet the vast majority of them, I am well aware, are engaged from Monday morning to Saturday night in the store. In many of the families of my congregation, across the breakfast-table and the tea-table are discussed questions of loss and gain. You are every day asking yourself: "What is the value of this? What is the value of that? You would not think of giving something of greater value for that which is of lesser value. You would not think of selling that which cost you $10 for $5. If you had a property that was worth $15,000 you would not sell it for $4,000. You are intelligent in all matters of bargain-making. Are you as wise in the things that pertain to the matters of the soul? Christ adapted his instructions to the circumstances of those to whom He spoke. When He talked to fishermen He spoke of the gospel net. When He talked to the farmers he said: "A sower went forth to sow." When He talked to the shepherds He told the parable of the lost sheep. And am I not right when speaking this morning to an audience made up of bargain-makers, that I address them in the words of my text, asking: "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his soul?"

I propose as far as possible to estimate and compare the value of two properties.

First. I have to say that the world is a very grand property. Its flowers are God's thoughts in bloom. Its rocks are God's thoughts in stone. Its dewdrops are God's thoughts in pearl. This world is God's child—a wayward child indeed; it has wandered off through the heavens. But about eighteen hundred and eighty-eight years ago, one Christmas night, God sent out a sister world to call that wanderer back, and it hung over Bethlehem only long enough to get the promise of the wanderer's return, and now that lost world, with soft feet of light, comes treading back through the heavens. The hills, how beautiful they billow up, the edge of the wave white with the foam of crocuses! How beautiful the rainbow, the arched bridge on which heaven and earth come and talk to each other in tears after the storm is over! How nimble the feet of the lamp-lighters that in a few minutes set all the dome of the night ablaze with brackets of fire! How bright the oar of the saffron cloud that rows across the deep sea of heaven! How beautiful the spring, with bridal blossoms in her hair! I wonder who it is that beats time on a June morning for the bird orchestra? How gently the harebell tells its fragrance on the air! There may be grander worlds, swarthier worlds, larger worlds than this, but I think that this is a most exquisite world—a mignonette on the bosom of immensity! "Oh," you say, take my soul! give me that world! I am willing to "take it in exchange. I am ready now for the bargain. It is so beautiful a world, so grand a world!"

But let us look more minutely into the value of this world. You will not buy property unless you can get a good title to it. After you have looked at the property and found out that it suits you send an attorney to the public office, and he examines the book of deeds and the book of mortgages and the book of judgements and the book of liens, and he decides whether the title is good before you will have anything to do with it. There might be a splendid property, and in every way exactly suited to your want, but if you can not get a good title you will not take it. Now, I am here this morning to say that it is impossible to get a good title to this world. If I settle down upon it, in the very year I so settle down upon it as a permanent possession I may be driven away from it. Ay, in five minutes after I give up my soul for the world, I may have to part with the world; and what kind of a title do you call that? There is only one way in which I can hold an earthly possession, and that is through the senses. All beautiful sights through the eye, but the eye may be blotted out; all captivating sounds though the ear, but my ear may be deafened; all lusciousness of fruits and viands through my taste, but my taste may be destroyed; all appreciation of culture and of art through my mind, but I may loose my mind. What a frail hold, then, I have upon any earthly possession!

In courts of law, if you want to get a man off a property, you must serve upon him a writ of ejectment, giving him a certain time to vacate the premises; but when Death comes to us and serves a writ of ejectment, he does not give us one second of forewarning He says: "Off of this place! You have no right any longer in the possession!" We might cry out, "I gave $100,000 for that property;" the plea would be of no avail. We might say, "We have a warranted deed of that property;" the plea would be of no avail. We might say, "We have a lien on that storehouse;" that would do us no good. Death is blind and he can not see a seal and can not read an indenture. So that first and last, I want to tell you that when you propose that I give up my soul for the world you can not give me the first item of title.

Having examined the title of a property, your next question is about insurance. You would not be silly enough to buy a large warehouse that could not possibly be insured. You would not have anything to do with such a property. Now, I ask you what assurance can you give me that this world is not going to be burned up? Absolutely none. Geologists tell us that it is already on fire; that the heart of the world is one great living coal; that it is just like a ship on fire at sea, the flames not bursting out because the hatches are kept down. And yet you propose to palm off on me in return for my soul, a world for which, in the first place, you give no title, and in the second place, you can give no insurance. "Oh!" you say, "the water of the oceans will wash over all the land and put out the fire." Oh, no. There are inflammable elements in the water, hydrogen and oxygen. Call off the hydrogen, and then the Atlantic and Pacific would blaze like heaps of shavings. You want me to take this world, for which you can give no possible insurance.

Astronomers have swept their telescopes through the sky and have found out that there have been thirteen worlds in the last two centuries that have disappeared. At first they looked just like other worlds. Then they got deeply red—they were on fire. Then they got ashen, showing that they were burned down. Then they disappeared, showing that even the ashes were scattered. And if the geologist be right in his prophecy, then our world is to go in the same way. And yet you want me to exchange my soul for it. Ah, no; it is a world that is burning now. Suppose you brought an insurance agent to look at your property for the purpose of giving you a policy upon it, and while he stood in front of the house he should say: "That house is on fire now, in the basement," you could not get any insurance upon it. Yet you talk about this world as though it were a safe investment, as though you could get some insurance upon it, when down in the basement it is on fire.

I remark, also, that this world is a property with which everybody who has taken it as a possession has had trouble. Now, I know a large reach of land that is not built on. I ask what is the matter, and they reply that everybody who has had anything to do with that property got into trouble about it. It is just so with this world; everybody that has had anything to do with it as a possession has been in perplexity. How was it with Lord Byron? Did he not sell his immortal soul for the purpose of getting the world? Was he satisfied with the possession? Alas! alas! the poem graphically describes his case when it says:

Drank every cup of joy,
Heard every trump of fame;
Drank early, deeply drank,
Drank draughts which common millions might have quenched,
Then died of thirst because there was no more to drink.

Oh, yes, he had trouble with it; and so did Napoleon. After conquering nations by the force of the sword, he lies down to die, his entire possession the military boots that he insisted on having on his feet while he was dying. So it has been with men who had better ambition. Thackeray, one of the most genial and lovable souls, after he had won the applause of all intelligent lands through his wonderful genius, sits down in a restaurant in Paris, looks to the other end of the room, and wonders whose that forlorn and wretched face is; rising up after awhile he finds that it is Thackeray in the mirror. Oh, yes, this world is a cheat. Talk about a man gaining the world! Who ever gained half of the world? Who ever owned a hemisphere? Who ever gained a continent? Who ever owned Brooklyn? Talk about gaining the world! No man ever gained it, or the hundred-thousandth part of it. You are demanding that I sell my soul, not for the world, but for a fragment of it. Here is a man who has had a large estate for forty or fifty years. He lies down to die. You say: "That man is worth millions and millions of dollars." Is he? You call up a surveyor, with his compass and chain, and you say: "There is a property extending three miles in one direction and three miles in another direction." Is that the way to measure that man's property? No! You do not want any surveyor with his compass and chains. That is not the way you want to measure that man's property now. It is an undertaker that you need, who will come and put his finger in his vest pocket and take out a tape-line, and he will measure five feet nine inches one way and two feet and a half the other way. That is the man's property. Oh, no; I forgot; not so much as that, for he does not own even the place in which he lies in the cemetery. The deed to that belongs to the executors and the heirs. Oh, what a property you propose to give me for my soul! If you sell a bill of goods, you go into the counting-room and say to your partner: "Do you think that man is good for this bill? Can he give proper security? Will he meet this payment?" Now, when you are offered this world as a possession I want you to test the matter. I do not want you to go into this bargain blindly. I want you to ask about the title, about the insurance, about whether men have ever had any trouble with it, about whether you can keep it, about whether you can get all, or the ten thousandth, or one hundred thousandth part of it.

There is the world now. I shall say no more about it. Make up your mind for yourself, as I shall, before God, have to make up my mind for myself, about the value of this world. I cannot afford to make a mistake for my soul, and you cannot afford to make a mistake for your soul.

Now, let us look at the other property—the soul. We cannot make a bargain without seeing the comparative value. The soul! How shall I estimate the value of it? Well, by its exquisite organization. It is the most wonderful piece of mechanism ever put together. Machinery is of value in proportion as it is mighty and silent at the same time. You look at the engine and the machinery in the Philadelphia mint, and, as you see it performing its wonderful work, you will be surprised to find how silently it goes. Machinery that roars and tears soon destroy itself; but silent machinery is often most effective. Now, so it is with the soul of man, with all its tremendous faculties—it moves in silence. Judgment, without any racket, lifting its scales; memory, without any noise, bringing down all its treasures; conscience taking its judgment seat without any excitement; the understanding and the will all doing their work. Velocity, majesty, might; but silence—silence. You listen at the door of your heart. You can hear no sound. The soul is all quiet. It is so delicate an instrument that no human hand can touch it. You break a bone, and with splinters and bandages the surgeon sets it; the eyes become inflamed, the apothecary's wash cools it; but a soul off the track, unbalanced, no human power can readjust it. With one sweep of its wing it circles the universe, and overvaults the throne of God. Why, in the hour of death the soul is so mighty it throws aside the body as though it were a toy. It drives back medical skill as impotent. It breaks through the circle of loved ones who stand around the dying couch. With one leap it springs beyond star and moon and sun and chasms of immensity. Oh, it is a soul superior to all material things! No fire can consume it; no floods can drown it; no rocks can crush it; no walls can impede it; no time can exhaust it. It wants no bridge on which to cross a chasm. It wants no plummet with which to sound a depth. A soul so mighty, so swift, so silent, must be a priceless soul.

I calculate the value of the soul, also, by its capacity for happiness. How much joy it can get in this world out of friendships, out of books, out of clouds, out of the sea, out of the flowers, out of ten thousand things; and yet all the joy it has here does not test its capacity. You are in a concert before the curtain hoists, and you hear the instruments preparing—the sharp snap of the broken string, the scraping of the bow across the viol. "There is music in that," you say. It is only getting ready for the music. And all the enjoyment of the soul in this world, the enjoyment we think is real enjoyment, is only preparative; it is only anticipative; it is only the first stages of the thing; it is only the entrance, the beginning of that which shall be the orchestral harmonies and splendors of the redeemed.

You cannot test the full power of the soul for happiness in this world. How much power the soul has here to find enjoyment in friendships! but, oh! the grander friendships for the soul in the skies! How sweet the flowers here, but how much sweeter they will be there. I do not think that when flowers do on earth they die forever. I think that the fragrance of the flowers is the spirit being wafted away into glory. God says there are palm trees in heaven and fruits in heaven. If so, why not the spirits of the dead flowers? In the sunny valleys of heaven shall not the marigold creep? On the hills of heaven, will not the amaranth bloom? On the amethystine walls of heaven, will not the jasmine climb? "My beloved is come down in his garden to gather lilies." No flowers in heaven? Where, then, do they get their garlands for the brows of the righteous!

Christ is glorious to our souls now, but how much grander our appreciation after a while! A conqueror comes back after the battle. He has been fighting for us. He comes upon the platform. He has one arm in a sling, and the other arm holds a crutch. As he mounts the platform, oh, the enthusiasm of the audience. They say: "That man fought for us, and imperiled his life for us;" and how wild the huzza that follows huzza! When the Lord Jesus Christ shall at last stand out before the multitudes of the redeemed of heaven, and we meet Him face to face and feel that He was wounded in the head and wounded in the hands and wounded in the feet and wounded in the side for us, methinks we will be overwhelmed. We will sit sometime gazing in silence, until some leader amid the white-robed choir shall lift the baton of light and give the signal that it is time to wake the song of jubilee, and all heaven will then break forth into: "Hosanna! hosanna! hosanna! Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!"

I calculate further the value of the soul by the price that has been paid for it. In St. Petersburg there is a diamond that the government paid $200,000 for. "Well," you say, "it must have been very valuable, or the government would not have paid $200,000 for it." I want to see what my soul is worth, and what your soul is worth, by seeing what has been paid for it. For that immortal soul, the richest blood that was ever shed, the deepest groan that was ever uttered, all the griefs of earth compressed into one tear, all the sufferings of earth gathered into one rapier of pain and struck through His holy heart. Does it not imply tremendous value?

I argue, also, the value of the soul from the home that had been fitted up for it in the future. One would have thought a street of adamant would have done. No; it is a street of gold. One would have thought that a wall of granite would have done. No; it is the flame of the sardonyx mingling with the green of emerald. One would have thought that an occasional doxology would have done. No; it is a perpetual song. If the ages of heaven marched in a straight line some day the last regiment, perhaps, might pass out of sight; but no, the ages of heaven do not march in a straight line, but in a circle around about the throne of God: forever, forever, tramp, tramp. A soul so bought, so equipped, so provided for, must be a priceless soul, a majestic soul, a tremendous soul.

Now, you have seen the two properties—the world, the soul. One perishable, the other immortal. One unsatisfying, the other capable of ever-increasing felicity. Will you trade? Will you trade even? Remember, it is the only investment you can make. If a man sell a bill of goods worth $5,000 and he is cheated out of it, he may get $3,000 somewhere else; but a man who invests his soul invests all. Losing that, he loses all. Saving that, he saves all. In the light of my text, it seems to me as if you were this morning offering your soul to the highest bidder, and I hear you say: "What is bid for it, my deathless spirit? What is bid for it?" Satan says: "I'll bid the world." You say: "Begone! that is no equivalent. Sell my soul for the world? No! Begone!" But there is someone else in the audience not so wise as that. He says: What is bid for my immortal soul?" Satan says: "I'll bid the world." "The world? Going at that, going at that, going at that, going! Gone!" Gone forever!

What is the thing of greatest price,
The whole creation round?
That which was lost in Paradise,
That which in Christ is found.

Then let us gather round the cross
That knowledge to obtain;
Not by the soul's eternal loss,
But everlasting gain.

Well, there are a great many people in the house who say: "I will not sell my soul for the world. I find the world is an unsatisfying portion." What, then, will you do with your soul? Someone whispers here: "I will give my soul to Christ." Will you? That is the wisest resolution you ever made. Will you give it to Christ? When? To-morrow? No; now. I congratulate you if you have come to such a decision. Oh, if this morning the eternal spirit of God would come down upon this audience, and show you the vanity of this world, and the immense importance of Christ's religion, and the infinite value of your own immortal souls, what a house this would be! what an hour this would be? what a moment this would be! Do you know that Christ has bought your soul? Do you know that He has paid an infinite price for it? Do you know that He is worthy of it? Will you give it to Him now?

I was reading of a sailor who had just got ashore and was telling about his last experience at sea. He said: The last time I crossed the ocean we had a terrific time. After we had been out three or four days the machinery got disarranged and the steam began to escape, and the captain, gathering the people and the crew on deck, said: "Unless someone shall go down and shut off that steam and arrange that machinery at the peril of his life we must all be destroyed." He was not willing to go down himself. No one seemed willing to go. The passengers gathered at one end of the steamer waiting for their fate. The captain said: "I give you a last warning. If there is no one here willing to imperil his life, and go down and fix that machinery we must all be lost." A plain sailor said "I'll go, sir;" and he wrapped himself in a coarse piece of canvas and went down, and was gone but a few moments when the escaping steam stopped and the machinery was corrected. The captain cried out to the passengers: "All saved! Let us go down below and see what has become of the poor fellow." They went down. There he lay dead. Vicarious suffering! Died for all! Oh, do you suppose that those people on the ship ever forgot, ever can forget that poor fellow? "No!" they say: "it was through his sacrifice that I got ashore." The time came when our whole race must die unless some one should endure torture and sorrow and shame. Who shall come to the rescue? Shall it be one of the seraphim? Not one. Shall it be one of the cherubim? Not one. Shall it be an inhabitant of some pure and unfallen world? Not one. Then Christ said: "Lo! I come to do Thy will, O God;" and He went down through the dark stairs of our sin, and wretchedness, and misery, and woe, and He stopped the peril, and He died that you and I might be free. Oh, the love! Oh, the endurance! Oh, the horrors of the sacrifice! Shall not our souls this morning go out toward Him, saying: "Lord Jesus Christ, take my soul. Thou art worthy to have it. Thou hast died to save it."

God help you this morning rightly to cipher out this sum in gospel arithmetic: "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Lord Castlereagh's Ghost.

Lockhart's Biography.

Lord Castlereagh, when commanding in early life a militia regiment in Ireland, was stationed one night in a large, desolate country house, and his bed was at one end of a long, dilapidated room, while at the other extremity a great fire of wood and turf had been prepared within a huge, gaping, old-fashioned chimney. Waking in the middle of the night, he lay watching from his pillow the gradual darkness of the embers of the hearth, when suddenly they blazed up and a naked child stepped from among them on the floor. The figure advanced slowly toward Lord Castlereagh, rising in stature at every step, until, on coming within two or three paces of his bed, it had assumed the appearance of a ghastly giant, pale as death, with a bleeding wound on the brow, and eyes glaring with rage and despair. Lord Castlereagh leaped from his bed and confronted the figure in an attitude of defiance. It retreated before him, diminishing in size as it withdrew in the same manner that it had previously shot up and expanded. He followed it pace by pace until the original child-like form disappeared among the embers. He then went back to his bed and was disturbed no more. The story, Lord Castlereagh told with perfect gravity at one of his wife's supper parties in Paris in 1815, when Scott was among the hearers.

Never Too Late.

"My friends," said a man at an experience meeting in a Chicago suburb a few evenings ago, as he arose and looked around him with deep contrition, "I trust I have begun a new life, and yet my conscience impels me to make a full confession before I can ask you to extend to me the hand of fellowship. For fifteen years before I came among you I was a manufacturer of maple sirup—"

"My brother, there is hope for you!" exclaimed a man on the seat in front, as he rose up and cordially grasped the speaker's hand. "I sold real estate for five years in Los Angeles."

"Brethren," exclaimed the minister, in a voice broken with emotion, "let us sing

"'While the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.'"

A Parson's Oratorical Chart.

"One of our prominet local ministers was called away from the city yesterday," said a deacon who possesses considerable dry humor, "and a substitute preached to the congregation. Not having a sermon prepared, he made use of one of Rev.—'s manuscripts, and could not help showing us the tracings on the margin, which kept him smiling all through a deep and serious discourse, much to the wonder of the congregation. Among other notes on the margin were: 'Bite lip bitterly,' 'extreme agitation,' 'pious smile,' 'loud, ringing voice,' and similar inscriptions. When Rev.— comes back I'll wager that he drops elocution for some time to come."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A New York policeman who was caught burgling was arrested at 4:30 a. m., arraigned at 11 a. m., indicted, tried and convicted before 2 p. m., and at 2:30 o'clock of the same day was on the way to Sing Sing to serve the state at hard labor for 10 years.

Robert C. Hall and David Vincent were hanged at Philadelphia. Hall murdered his mistress, Mrs. Lilian E. Rivers, in Philadelphia, June 3, 1887. The crime was the outcome of an insane jealousy. David Vincent, or Vinzenzo di Vita, the Italian, was a runner for a sailor boarding house and during a drunken quarrel killed George Carlotfatti, a Greek sailor, by stabbing him.

Up and Down the Social Ladder.

Everybody knows the way up the social ladder. It has been shown to those below my millions of twinkling feet. It is a broad ladder up which people are always climbing, some slowly, some quickly. From corduroy to broadcloth; from workshop to counter; from shop-boy to master; from shop to office; from trade to profession, from the bedroom over the shop to the great country villa. The other day a bricklayer told me that his grandfather and the first Lord O.'s father were old pals; they used to go poaching together, but the parent of Lord O. was so clever as to open a shop, where he sold what his friend poached. The shop began it, you see. The way up is known to everybody. But there is another way which we seldom regard, it is the way down again. The Family Rise is the commonest phenomenon. Is not the name Legion of those of whom men say, partly with the pride of connecting themselves with greatness, partly with the natural desire which small men always show to tear away something of that greatness, "Why, I knew him when his father had that shop." The Family Fall is less conspicuous. Yet there are always as many going down as climbing up. You cannot, in fact, stay still. You must either climb or slip down—unless, indeed, you have got your leg over the topmost rung, which means the stability of a hereditary titles and landed property. We all ought to have hereditary titles and landed property, in order to insure national prosperity forever. Novelists do not, as a rule treat of the Sinking Back, because it is a depressing subject. There are many ways of falling. Mostly the father makes an ass of himself in the way of business speculation, or he dies too soon, or his sons possess none of their father's ability, or they take to drink. Anyhow, down goes the family; at first slowly, but with ever-increasing rapidity, back to its original level. There is no country in the world—certainly not the United States—where a young man might rise to distinction with greater ease than the realm of the Three Kingdoms. There is also none where the families show a greater alacrity in sinking. But the most reluctant to go down, those who cling most tightly to the social level, which they think they have reached, are the daughters; so that when misfortunes fall upon them they are ready to deny themselves everything rather than lose the social dignity which they think belongs to them.—Walter Besant in Longman's Magazine.

The Trouble With the Pass.

One of Depew's Stories.

A man called here claiming to be an old comrade. I noticed the moment I entered the room that he was pretty well soaked in benzine. "Comrade," he said, with an eloquent wave of the hand, "some of us meet with success in life, fortune smiles on them and they prosper. Others are not so fortunate. They meet with reverses, fail in business and have to struggle to make both ends meet. Sometimes they don't succeed in doing that. Now, you have been successful. We are glad of it, comrade. But," he continued "comrade, there is a silver lining to every cloud." This was said in a very high key. "I have been offered a place in Poughkeepsie, where I can earn enough to take care of my wife and babies, but I have no money, comrade, to pay my fare there." I happened to have a pass in my pocket—I very rarely carry them with me—and signed it and handed it to him. He gazed at it blankly for a moment and then blurted out: "Comrade, did it ever occur to you that a pass is not negotiable?"

Jim Odom And The Snake.

Jim Odom is a good citizen and the craftiest hunter in Georgia. He kills more turkeys and deer than any other four men in the country, taking into account the time spent in hunting. He has a pocket full of long turkey beards, all killed this year. He doesn't shoot the hens, from the fact that he can kill a gobbler when he chooses, preferring to save them to keep up the game supply. A few mornings ago, as Jim was sitting down by a tree yelping for turkeys, up crawled a monster rattlesnake, which had mistaken the call of Jim for that of a young turkey. Jim settled his hash and now as he pulls the beards out of his pocket the rattles come, too. —Blakeley (Ga.) News.

A New Journalistic Development.

The great Dailies of the country are constantly striving to outdo each other by the introduction of novel and attractive features and the result has been in enormous growth in the circulation of such papers as have best succeeded in reaching the tastes of the people.

The latest feature introduced by the Sunday Pioneer Press is worth mentioning, chiefly because it appeals to the pockets as well as the tastes of all classes. It consists of the publication of a series of perspective views, floor plans and descriptions of modern houses ranging in cost from $600 to $7 500 each.

The plans to be published have all been selected with the greatest care, and are the production of one of the best known architect offices in the country, and are especially adapted to this climate. Arrangements have been made which enable parties desiring to adopt a plan appearing in the Sunday Pioneer Press to obtain at a very small cost detailed working plans and complete specifications. If it is found that a contract cannot be let within the estimate named, the party is at liberty to return the plans and specifications and his money will be refunded. This completes the scheme and makes it possible for the favored readers of the Sunday Pioneer Press to avail themselves of all its advantages.

It is difficult to imagine how any agency could do more for the Northwest generally than to put its inhabitants in the way of obtaining homes which are models of convenience, elegance and comfort, and we feel that there is reason for congratulating ourselves that we have a paper which not content with following the beaten paths is constantly reaching out for features which shall be of real use to its readers.

A Laxity All Around.

Philadelphia Times

A Cincinnati court has decreed a divorce in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel C. Young, who in an exuberance of feeling not strictly of a reasoning kind, were married last summer in an ascending balloon at Pittsburg. The marriage, it appears, was only a side show to the balloon ascension circus. Neither of the principals had any intention of becoming a party to a binding contract, nor did they ever consummate the union or live together afterward. The only condition of the law which had been fulfilled was to give consent before a qualified render of the service—not enough, the judge held, to warrant him in refusing the plea of separation filed by both Mr. and Mrs. Young. The decision is not very satisfying. It would have been better sense if not better law, to have forced the couple to put up with each other, if only to point a serious moral to the other fools who trifle with a serious custom.

"What a coward that Major Smith is," said Jones to Robinson, "why, the very sight of gun-powder would make him ill. How did he ever manage to become an officer in the army?" "Don't say anything against Smith," answered Robinson, "he once saved my life." "Saved your life! Nonsense, impossible! What do you mean?" "I mean that I was in the first stages of consumption; I was losing strength and vitality every day with the terrible disease, when Smith advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I had tried all kinds of medicines without success, and my physician had given me no hope; yet here I am, as well as ever a man was, and I owe my life to Smith, and to the wonderful remedy he recommended."

San Francisco, July 7th, 1886.

I took a severe cold upon my chest and lungs and did not give it proper attention; it developed into bronchitis, and in the fall of the same year I was threatened with consumption. Physicians ordered me to a more congenial climate, and I came to San Francisco. Soon after my arrival I commenced taking Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites regularly three times a day. In ten weeks my avoirdupois went from 155 to 180 pounds and over; the cough meantime ceased. C. R. BENNETT.

ARM AND HAMMER
CHURCH & CO'S SODA
BRAND SODA

To Housekeepers and Farmers.—It is important that the Soda you use should be White and Pure same as all similar substances used for food. To insure obtaining only the "Arm & Hammer" brand Soda, buy it in "pound or half pound" cartoons, which bear our name and trade-mark, as inferior goods are sometimes substituted for the "Arm & Hammer" brand when bought in bulk. Parties using Baking Powder should remember that its sole rising property consists of bicarbonate of soda. One teaspoonful of the "Arm & Hammer" brand of Soda mixed with sour milk equals four teaspoonfuls of the best Baking Powder, saving twenty times its cost, besides being much healthier, because it does not contain any injurious substances, such as alum, terra alba, etc., of which many Baking Powders are made. Dairymen and Farmers should use only the "Arm & Hammer" brand for cleaning and keeping Milk Pans Sweet and Clean.

THE OLD HOME.

I remember an old gray farmhouse,
All mossy, and stained with time,
With a film of old age upon it,
While yet it stood in its prime.

A broad, low-browed old homestead,
Where clambering wild woodbine
Hung out its flames in the autumn,
Like wreaths on a holy shrine.

Great, drooping elms swayed o'er it;
And blossoming lilacs tall,
Thrust their purple plumes in the windows,
With the bees they held in thrall.

All under its roof so mossy,
And around its heart so warm,
It gathered its happy children,
In a merry, busy swarm.

With the beat of rain on its shingles,
It lulled them all to rest,
When spring brought the mutteringshowers,
Surging up from out the west.

As a hen soothes her sleepy chickens,
Beneath her wings widespread,
So we heard the soft, sweet wind-song,
Of the old roof overhead.

And now when I fall a-dreaming,
When it rains, and the wind is strong,
I hear again the deep murmurs
And beat of the old roof's song.

And the years fall away and leave me,
A sleepy child once more;
Slow rocking on grand wild surges,
Toward some dreamland shore.

Now drifting among the tree-tops,
Now floating o'er rivers deep,
Till I sink in that rushing, sweeping sea,
Down to the land of sleep.

BETROTHED IN A CELLAR.

From Household Words.

By making a gigantic effort I had at last succeeded in pushing up the heavy sash of the old-fashioned guillotine window, and now, sitting in the broad window-seat, I was enjoying the scent of the great syringa bush, which grew so close to the house that it pushed its branches inside whenever it had the opportunity, so that sitting in the window was almost like being in an arbor. I was in Germany, of course, for guillotine windows, as we call them, are still the fashion in England, I hear.

Yes, I was in Germany, and it was the day before Whit Sunday—a lovely May day—and I was just 16.

I am a good deal more than 16 now, but still, often, when the syringa is in blossom, and the delicious fragrance comes floating round me, the whole scene rises again before my eyes, and I see the old-fashioned garden, with its quaintly-cut yews and box-hedges, and the apple trees loaded with blossom; the wainscotted room, with the faded red carpet, and antiquated furniture and ornaments; and, looking through the folding-doors into the dining-room beyond, I see the long table decked for some festal occasion, two chairs wreathed with flowers, and before them, on the table, two bouquets composed of sprays of myrtle.

I see, too, sitting opposite me in a capacious armchair, my grandmother, a little old lady in a white lace cap, with a prayer-book on her knees, which she was reading here at home because she could not get as far as the chapel beyond the town gate.

I had been there myself that morning, all in a hurry, just to see how it looked before I brought Granny to the house, and I had seen that it was beautifully decked with flowers, and that there were wax tapers enough to dazzle one.

After that I had come back to the "wedding house" and waited, for I could not leave granny quite alone; and while I waited I puzzled myself to make out why Uncle Dernau, as we all called him, and his wife should have chosen to celebrate their golden wedding in the little country chapel instead of in the large town church, which seemed so much more appropriate.

Then, too, I wondered what could be the meaning of sundry mysterious allusions which I had heard made in the course of the evening before. They had seemed to amuse the rest very much, but I could make nothing of them.

Uncle Dernau's little wife was a favorite little woman, with bright eyes, brown hair without a touch of grey in it, and had very small hands and feet. How we had all admired her the night before, when, for "the very last time," as she said, she had danced the charming minuet, which had been arranged in her honor. I can see her now in her old-fashioned, marvelously short waisted dress of silk, with a three-cornered fichu crossed over her chest, little shoes without heels, wide ribbon sandals, and embroidered stockings. Uncle Dernau himself was her partner, and at the close of the dance he made her a low bow, saying with a gleam of fun and mischief in his eyes:

"Madame, you dance like a Frenchwoman, and I believe I made a mistake after all in carrying you off from the French monsieur!"

Everyone laughed at this, and Aunt Dernau blushed like a young girl. What did it all mean? Could I ask Granny? I wondered. She had told me once that Aunt Dernau was her oldest and her dearest friend, and that some day she would tell me her history. Could I remind her of her promise now?

As I looked at her she took off her spectacles and closed her prayer-book, and slipping down from my throne in the window, I sat myself on a stool at her feet.

"Granny," I said coaxingly, "could not you tell me your friend's story now? You know you promised, and it is just the right day for it. They won't be back for a couple of hours yet, what with the service first, and then the wedding, and a long sermon, and all the congratulations so we have plenty of time."

Just then we caught the sound of distant church-bells, by which we knew that the bridal procession must be getting near the chapel.

"Ah, child," said my grandmother, "it was a beautiful time when we two were young, Lorchen and I; you never saw such a little wild thing as she was. They called her 'the bird,' because she was so quick and graceful, and had such bright eyes in her pretty little head. There was not a prettier girl far or near, and there was something about her so different from other girls, that one could hardly take one's eyes off her; she was so dainty and so distingue.

"And Lorchen herself was so well aware of the fact, that she was a perfect little despot. All the men old and young, did her homage, and many a one did his best to catch and keep the little bird. But this was not so easy, for Lorchen was obstinate, and her greatest delight was to tease and torment her admirers whenever she had the opportunity. I often used to scold her for it; for, being her most intimate friend, I acted as confessor, and she always honestly told me her misdeeds. Sometimes, we got really angry with one another after a ball or picnic, when her list of confessions was unusually long. But where was the use? She knew that I could not help 'forgiving' her, as she said, directly she asked me, little fondling puss that she was; and she knew, too, that all young men she had fooled and tormented would be at her feet again directly. You know that song:

"I know a maiden fair to see.
Take care!
She can both false and friendly be!

"And it goes on:

She has two eyes so soft and brown.
Take care!
She gives a side-glance and looks down.
Take care!
Trust her not, she's fooling thee!

"Well, child, that was Lore all over; just as if it had been written for her. But you mustn't think badly of her, for all that. She was a dear, sweet little thing; and in spite of all her follies, she had a good, honest heart. As I said, she was universally admired; and so it seemed strange that young Dernau, the merchant, who was a next-door neighbor of hers, should be so stiff and cold, and take no notice at all of her. Sometimes I twitted her with the fact that he had never once danced with her, and was quite insensible to her charms. That always made her angry, and she would pout her rosy lips and say:

"'I'm sure I don't want him, Christel; he's a bear?'

"Well, you know, bad times came for poor Germany. The French conquered us, and the King and our beautiful Queen Louisa had to fly with their children; and it seemed as if we should all become French subjects. It was a bad time for us in our little town, for the authorities favored the enemy, and we were disturbed by sounds of fighting all round us. Ah, it was terribly sad! for all prosperity was at an end, and we spent our days in misery and anxiety. Poor Lorchen had, too, a special trouble of her own, for accounts of the wild doings of the French reached us from all sides, and it was said that they had a very rough-and-ready way of courting, for if a German girl took their fancy they just sent their soldiers to carry her off, and then took her away with them to the war. We were constantly hearing of deeds of violence and robbery, and the laws, being administered either by the French or their adherents afforded us no redress or protection whatever. What could we do? People hid their valuables as far as they could in hollow trees, behind walls, or in the ground, and whenever any Frenchmen were known to be in the neighborhood they hid their wives and daughters as well. Poor Lorchen had the hardest time of all, for her mother was so nervous that she was always seeing danger, and she insisted on the poor girl's spending the greater part of the day down in the cellar, and many an afternoon I spent there, too, keeping her company.

"'Look, said I, on one of these occasions, 'you can see straight into Neighbor Dernau's garden, through this little window.'

"But Lorchen blushed and turned her head without answering. One Whitsun Eve, a lovely May day, just like to-day, a number of the enemy's troops passed through the town, and of course Lore had to sit in the cellar and get through the time as best she might. As soon as the terrible "Parlevouhs" as we called them, had all gone through and out of the town gate, the captive was let out, and what must the silly girl do but go to the sitting-room window and lean out. After being in prison so long, she enjoyed the sweet spring air doubly, and it amused her to watch what was going on in the street. But misfortune never slumbers; and, as it fell out, a young French officer came past leading his horse by the bridle, and looking for a blacksmith, as the animal had cast a shoe. He had no sooner caught sight of the lovely little head among the roses which clustered round the window, than he threw the reins to a boy and dashed up the steps like a madman. It did not take him a minute, but Lore was as quick as he, and had slipped back into her hiding-place. Still, where was the use of that, when the Frenchman had seen her and was bent upon finding her?

"I want to see the pretty demoiselle," he cried in his broken German, and he insisted on searching all the rooms in the house, then the garrets, and finally the cellar! It was useless to say him nay, for he was master of the situation, and Lorchen's poor mother followed him down the cellar-stairs trembling.

But, wonder of all wonders, the nest was empty, the bird had flown! Finding, therefore, that his search was vain, the young officer flew into a rage, and snatching up a little ivory miniature of Lore, dashed out of the house, vowing that he would come back next with a whole squadron, and stay till the girl was found. As soon as he was gone, Lore's mother sank down in a chair and burst into tears, feeling utterly bewildered and altogether at her wits' end. But she had not wept long when her neighbor, young Dernau, made his appearance, and, to her extreme surprise, asked her with all due form and ceremony to accept him as a suitor for her daughter's hand.

"'Ach!' cried the poor woman, 'Lorchen is gone—clean gone; she is not in her hiding-place; and if I could find her to-day, where's the use, when tomorrow that French villain is coming to carry her off! I'm a poor, miserable, helpless woman—what can I do? Oh, this dreadful war!'

"But the young man only laughed in an embarrassed sort of way, and then said:

"Only trust me mother, if I may call you so, and depend upon it I shall be able to take good care of Lorchen, when once I have the right. In the cellar she is, however, at the present moment, though not in yours!"

"So saying, he led the astonished dame into his house and down ever so many stairs, and there sure enough was the captive in his cellar, doubly a captive now, and a little shamefaced and tearful, but still looking very happy as she fell on her mother's neck, and begged her to give her and Karl her blessing. And so it came to pass that they were betrothed in the cellar, and immediately after all sorts of mysterious preparations, were made in both houses, and at last the good pastor himself was called in to give his advice. At 11 o'clock that same night there was enacted one of the strangest scenes which our peaceful, sober-going little town ever witnessed; for a young couple were married in the darkness, in the old chapel, outside the Martini gate, and you may imagine my utter amazement at being mysteriously sent for at such an hour, and then finding myself taken to the chapel to be one of the witnesses to Lore's marriage the others being her mother and Dernau's most intimate friend, Fritz Berger.

It seemed uncommonly dismal to a girl of seventeen, as I was then, with my head stuffed full, too, of all sorts of tragical stories. It was a mild, dark night; the sky was much overcast; and ever and anon a distant flash of lightning announced that a storm was coming up. The feeble glimmer from the two tapers on the altar seemed only to make the darkness darker, and the flames flickered incessantly as the wind came sweeping in gusts, and making the boughs of the old lime-tree rattle against the church windows. It was enough to make one shudder, child, I can tell you! The venerable old paster who had married Lorchen's father and mother, and baptized Lorchen herself, gave only a short address; but it was all the more impressive for that, and we were all very much touched by it. When the ceremony was over I helped the sobbing bride to take off her wreath of myrtle and put on a very large hood, which was part of the peasant's costume, such as used to be worn about here, which she was going to wear as a disguise. The poor mother was speechless with grief, and seemed quite dazed at the prospect of losing her beloved daughter.

"Meantime Karl Dernau, who had also dressed himself like a peasant, had brought a poor, miserable, one-horsed covered cart to the door of the chapel, and, after the most heart-rending leave-takings, Lorchen was lifted in, weeping bitterly. The night had grown pitch-black by this time; the lightning flashed and the thunder rolled in the distance; but under cover of the darkness, the pair safely effected their escape across the neighboring frontier, to where the French had not yet gained a footing, Lorchen passing for a sick peasant-girl who was being taken to some famous, wonder-working doctor. As Karl Dernau drove off on his strange wedding journey he looked so brave, and tender, and self-reliant that we who were left behind felt a comfortable assurance that our little bird would be safely hidden in her nest with him for her protector. Two years passed, and in the meantime I had been married in a regular, ordinary way, in broad daylight, with bridesmaids and wedding-breakfast, and without any of the rather uncalmy romance which had attended Lorchen's wedding. Still, who knows whether the mere fact of our having taken part together in this romantic affair did not lead to our own marriage? Be this as it may, it is quite certain that the next time Fritz Berger and I found ourselves inside the little chapel, it was for our own wedding.

"After a time things went better in the town, and as the French were less favored by those in authority, it was thought safe for the fugitives to come cack; and, as by the death of his father, Karl had become the owner of the house Lorchen's parents had rented—the very house we are in to-day—they came and settled here, and her mother with them, and all lived happily together. How happy we were to be together again! and the very first time we had a quiet hour, Lorchen told me the story of her betrothal, which I had never properly understood till then.

"'You see, Christel,' said she, 'you and I were very intimate, and you did know all my secrets—almost; but you did not know that I had cared for Karl for a long time past. I was ashamed to confess it either to you or myself. But when he came to the cellar window that dreadful day, just when I was in the greatest danger, and drove it in—I was too dazed to dare to open it myself—and when he lifted me up, and before I well knew where I was, took me into the cellar of his own house, well, then I knew I did care for him, and I began to cry. And then he sat down by me and quietly took hold of my hand, and when I was able to speak I thanked him and begged his pardon for having made such fun of him before. You can guess what followed. Our betiothal was not very romantic, Christel, for we sat upon an old sugar chest, and my dress was torn and dusty, and the air of the cellar was dank and musty. But what did we care for that? There were roses all round us, and we were in Elysium; and as for the romance, we had enough before the day was out to last a whole lifetime.'

"This was Lorchen's confession, and we both thanked Heaven for making us so happy and bringing us together again. We were happy, indeed, and this helped us to bear our daily cares, for we were still in a great deal of trouble and anxiety, and the clouds hung thick and black over the political sky. There were no christening feasts when our little ones were baptized, and, in spite of our real happiness, a good many tears fell on the little heads. But at last there was a a change! Suddenly it was as if a fresh wind had begun to blow. No one knew whence it had come, but it was there, and we all felt invigorated by it. Lore and I, too, soon noticed that there was a great deal going on behind the scenes, which gave us plenty of food for wonder and conjecture. Wagoners, who did not look at all like wagoners, were constantly bringing heavy loads of merchandise to Karl, and my Fritz, who was a lawyer, and nothing naturally to do with such matters, was always present at the unloading, and helped to carry the goods into the cellar as soon as it was dusk. It was quite clear that there was some secret which our husbands were keeping from us, and after bearing it patiently for a little while we determined to put an end to such an unnatural state of things.

"Well, we found it all out, and learned that Karl and Fritz were members of a secret league which had branches everywhere throughout Germany, and was formed to deliver the Fatherland from her foreign masters. The "wagoners" were members and the goods they bought were arms, which they stored in the cellar; and there, in what had been Lorchen's prison, the confederates held their meetings. On these occasions, now that we knew what was going on, we used to do our part by lighting up the chandaliers in the drawing-room, clinking glasses together and carrying wine bottles and dishes to and fro, to divert the attention from what was going on down below, and to throw dust in people's eyes.

"As soon as ever our good king issued his appeal 'to my people,' we saw the result of all these secret preparations. The enthusiasm was tremendous, and every German heart was all aglow. Oh, child, it was a grand time and I shall never forget the day when the pastor read out the king's proclamation in the market-place—and there was not room for the crowd in the church—and called on all the men to come forward and take part in a holy war to expel the enemy. There never was such excitement before or since! Friends and acquaintances embraced one another, and the most bitter enemies shook hands. The first to volunteer to fight for wife and child, and home, were Karl Dernau and my Fritz; and numbers and numbers followed their example. Then came the leave-takings, and those were sad enough. I fainted away, but Lorchen behaved like a little heroine.

"We two kept together through all that time of terrible waiting and fighting, and misery. But at last—at last came the news of victory, and all the hills blazed with bonfires. The Fatherland was free, and our loved ones were safe and coming home crowned with laurels! We had suffered a great deal, but we thought ourselves fortunate in having been allowed to look on while such great events were doing.

"But where have I got to with my chattering? I was only going to tell you——"

"Oh, Granny," I interrupted, "you have not told me a bit too much; I could listen all day——"

"Well," said she with a smile, "you deserve something for giving up going to the chapel to sith with an old woman. When I began I only meant to tell you how Aunt Dernau was imprisoned in the cellar, that you might see what a dangerous gift beauty is!"

"H—m, Granny, I don't like your moral!" I answered. "The French are far enough off now, and for my part I shouldn't mind running the risk of being tolerably nice-looking."

Granny was going to scold, but the corners of her mouth twitched, and before she could recover herself, I had jumped up exclaiming:

"Listen, the bells have been ringing this long time; the wedding is over, and they will be here directly!"

I went once more hastily through the rooms to see that everything was in order, and then I strewed flowers all down the stairs to the front door, and then Granny and I waited at the window.

Soon the head of the procession made its appearance—such a long, long procession! First came the old people, several couples, and then the young ones, and lastly the grandchildren all decked with flowers, but the bridal pair, who were that day celebrating their golden wedding, were the most beautiful sight of all.

Aunt Dernau looked lovely in her blue flowered damask and three-cornered lace handkerchief, with the golden sprays of myrtle in her hair, and Uncle Dernau, with his snow-white curly hair, and tall, upright figure, looked most dignified, and quite grand, too; for besides the golden sprig in his button-hole, he wore the orders and decorations which he had won during the war. How tender and careful he was of his little wife, too.

Just as tender and affectionate as he had been to the young beauty when he married her in the sunny May-time fifty years before!

The Mortality from Consumption.

Within the past year the civilized world has been shocked and saddened by the knowledge of the great devastation wrought by the cholera in Spain; and every precaution, in the way of sanitary measures and quarantine regulations that modern science could suggest, was taken to prevent its spreading into other countries. The public scanned the columns of the daily press, eager for information with regard to the advance of this fearful disease, and read with bated breath as they learned that it numbered its victims by the tens of thousands.

If it was a matter of such deep and universal concern that in Spain 101,000 souls gave up their lives to this fell destroyer, should it not also be a matter of some interest to our own people that, within the borders of the United States, over 91,500 persons die each year of pulmonary consumption?—that twelve out of every hundred deaths are caused by a disease which though slow in progress, is as sure in its results as cholera itself?

Should it ever transpire that some means of prevention should be found, by means of which people would be rendered proof against the disease, or at least could be cured when at once it had set its seal upon them, would it not be one of the greatest boons vouchsafed to man since the introduction of vaccination?

Inventive persons have from time to time thought that they had secured a sure cure, if not an unfailing prophylactic; and, at the present time, since the discoveries of Koch, all sorts of parasiticides are being used to kill the germ of the disease. The unfortunate bacillus is now being hunted down with pneumatic chambers, deep inhalations, and local applications introduced by means of the hypodermic syringe, with the results that are, to say the least, uncertain.

But, after all the years of research devoted to the subject, and out of all the methods of prevention and cure that have been suggested, the one that has given the best results, and is now being universally adopted, is change of climate.—From "Colorado as a Winter Sanitarium," by Dr. S. A. Fisk in Popular Science Monthly for March.

Yes, Why Not.

From the Boston Courier.

Why should a writer who makes a new witticism about the sealskin sacque, the plumber, the iceman, the coal dealer, the Chicago girl's foot, the skating rink, the beautiful snow, or upon any other subject in which humanity is interested, be accused of perpetrating what is termed a chestnut? Is not the subject of love a chestnut? Is not woman a chestnut? Is not virtue a chestnut? Is not vice a chestnut? Has not every poet and proser since Cadmus invented letters harped upon these strings, and isn't every poet and every proser harping upon them still? Solomon says: "There is nothing new under the sun. Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new? It hath been already of old time which was before us." Solomon, who wrote B. C. 979, was a paragrapher. Isaiah, B. C. 760, criticises feminine fripperies more severely than the funny man of to-day. What is a chestnut? Man, human experience, life, death, all are chestnuts. Even the little critic who is constantly crying "Chestnut" is a reproduction of some other chestnut, and a very wormy one at that.

THE LONELY TEACHER.

Miss Whittemore had for some time been sitting with her head bowed on her arms upon the table. At last she raised it, glanced about the dreary school-room, and, bursting into a passion of sobs, dropped it again.

Not, surely, a room to brighten a thoroughly tired, discouraged, harassed, half sick young woman! It was large and barn-like; the children's restless feet had departing, left behind them footprints on the dirty floor (adapted from one—Longfellow;) the blackboards were cracked and the woodwork was of that hideous shade of buff which seems to be, for some unknown reason, always and in every clime, chosen to assist in the education of the juvenile mind. The ventilator, a closet like projection reaching from floor to ceiling, suggested to the chance visitor the existence of a metal dumb-waiter, and a miniature "torpedo," as one of the scholars called it, to the unfortunates whose pedal extremities were within range of its blast, which blast caught up bits of paper in quite a realistic cyclonic fashion. The hanging of the splint curtains must have been designed by the conglomerate brains of the entire school board; for surely no other mind or minds could have been equal to such a strain upon stupidity as tilted the tops of those curtains at the exact angle to throw a beam of sunlight just across the scholar's eyes like a golden riband blindfolding those young princes on the royal road to learning.

However, even in this dingy room some small, very small concessions had been made to the artistic, for a wood-cut of the father of his country hung, very crooked, so high in one corner that no one could see it without turning a back somersault; and a mercy it was, for the stupid dignity of the figure and the benevolent idiocy of the face exasperated one to anything but emulation of the virtues of the illustrious deceased. In fact, Tom Smith, buzzing over his dates one day, with his fiery head resting on his chair's back and his eyes wandering about the ceiling, upon discovering it had whispered across the isle to Jim Jones: "That there Washington's a confounded old muff." Whereupon Jim Jones burning with patriotic ardor, had invited him to have, in the coming recess "every bone in his body broke," but in his wrath, catching sight of the picture he cooled down, and gave a nod in which approbation, disgust and apology were adroitly blended, and handed over his best agate as a peace-offering.

Then, too, there was a chromo of colors so brilliant as to merit the bon mot of a local art critic with regard to the pastelle of Bacher's in our recent art loan, "a telegram of color."

Neither of the beauties did Miss Whittemore notice in her brief survey. Poor thing, the day had been an exceptionably hard one. To begin with, she had overslept, and then hurried, breakfastless, through two miles of depressing fog to school, was a minute late, and had entered such fact upon her report.

Then the scholars had been unusually noisy and troublesome. Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress had been the spelling in vogue. Minnie Gray had failed on every question put to her in history with mild expression of grieved surprise that she should be asked any; and when Miss Whittemore, losing patience at last, inquired, "Who is the president of the United States?" she had camly shaken out her long curls (her brains had all run to hair) and answered, "Why, Miss Whittemore, I don't know: You didn't tell us to learn that." Willie Black either could not or would not understand that a bin had two sides and two ends; but the climax had come when Ernestine De Lorme, with a self-approbative smile, in reply to the question, "What animal in Siberia is hunted for its fur?" had made answer, "The sponge."

Beside all this, she had been mortified and wounded by the impertinent remarks of an illiterate parent who came to avenge a fancied slight to her young hopeful, a brutal, overgrown boy, with just enough intellect to play marbles and chew tobacco.

After the session, she had given some assistance, heard corrections, posted the register, made out the monthly report, which required the killing off of an unaccounted for boy, had out her cry, and finally rousing to the fact that it was almost dark, had taken her roll of examination papers, which seemed audibly to assert: "We'll sit heavy on your soul to-morrow" and struggled along the muddy streets, trying to forget the annoyances of the day, to conquer the rebellious thoughts arising in her aching heart and to attain to a mood suitable to the season.

Reaching home, a small room in the third story, back of a boarding-house, dedraggled, exhausted, lonely, she sank into a chair, gazing out upon littered back yards and dripping roofs (for the weather was un-Christian, as the landlady had asserted, adding: "Such days is so opsettin'"), until the tea-bell summoned her to hear Mr. Dean's nocturnal remark and its accompanying chuckle: "Evenin', Miss Whittemore. Ben a-teachin' the young idear how to shoot?"

Later, sitting in her room, she heard the door-bell's ding-a-ling-ling. What is there about a ring that always arouses a pleasant sense of expectation? "No one for me," was her second thought, "unless its Jane for my clothes." So when the stupid maid-of-all work appeared and said briefly, "Fur you," Helen bade her ask up the girl. What then was her embarrassment upon seeing a stylish young lady and a very proud looking gentleman enter.

Helen began apologies, but Miss Hildreth interrupted with, "Oh, I'm glad of the mistake so that my brother—Dr. Hildreth, Miss Whittemore—(with a bird-like nod of her sunny head toward where he stood), and myself, might come up to your pleasant little room and meet you unceremoniously. You see you're Jamie's teacher and he's forever quoting you as if you were a tenth muse. Well, father inquired and found you were the daughter of his old chum, Dr. Whittemore, whom he loved like a brother; and he asked me to call immediately and try to win your friendship. And Mumzy—that's my mother—wants to know, providing you have no other engagement if you wouldn't spend the holidays with us. Now please don't refuse, do come." All this before one could scarcely count three.

Wouldn't they be seated and stay awhile? They would and did for the evening. It was Helen's first bit of the old life which she had known since she had left the quiet, home town to teach in the city, after dear, old Mr. Whittemore laid down his noble life and passed into the Beyond, leaving his motherless daughter little but the memory of that life, his tender blessing, and the large and rare library collected in many lands and through many years. Oh, it was hard to find herself so completely cut off from the world to which she was born; to be of no importance, for how interest in a young lady does die down, when, to the inquiry: "Who is that pretty, bright-looking girl?" the answer, given indifferently, is: "She? Why, she's only a teacher in a public school." It's all very pretty to prate about "The nobility of labor, the long pedigree of toil." But bless me! There's precious little practical recognition in it.

Miss Janet Hildreth returned home enraptured with Miss Helen Whittemore. "Mumzy, she looks like a queen—tall, slim, with long, white, tapering hands, large blue eyes, long black lashes and great coils of purplish black hair. And she's so intellectual, and when she's startled out of that acquired quiet she's so witty and original."

"And what do you think of her, Dana?" asked Dr. Hildreth, turning to his son, the young doctor.

"She's a woman very much out of the ordinary. I like her very much—and such a library! You and I must ask the pleasure of overlooking them soon, father. They are rare old treasures, and one can see she thoroughly appreciates them."

Such high praise for non-committal Dana, the authority of the family, was phenomenal, and Janet paused in her caresses, (rubbing her father's nose up the wrong way) and gave a quick look at her brother before she resumed: "And the daintiest little room! It has a rose-bud carpet and rose-bud paper—"

"And for an inmate the 'queen rose' of the rosebud garden of girls?" queried Ned, the poetic.

"More of a lily. And one of those beds that fold into cabinets, you know," resuming her description and her caresses, varing the latter by gently pulling her father's ears. "Then, books, books, books, lining it almost all around two or three choice pictures, and—oh, I havn't seen such a gem of a room for ages!"

So it came to pass that the Hildreths, in family council assmbled adopted the lonely girl into their great hearts and warm sympathies, and generous plans then and there; and when Helen, in her plain black silk and the rich lace that had been her mother's, presented herself at their luxurious home, she was greeted with such a homely cordiality that her heart ached for joy. Old Dr. Hildreth carried her hand with old-time courtesy to his lips and said, while the tears stood in his kindly eyes: "Let me take as nearly a father's place as any but a father can fill, my dear." His wife kissed her heartily and begged her to feel entirely at home then and always. Dr. Dana shook hands, a very unusual mark of attention from him. Ned asserted that he was mighty glad to see her, and little Jamie hid behind the door from sheer delight at seeing his idol.

It was a joyful, thankful time to Helen, and it was but the beginning. Every little while Janet would insist upon her staying from Friday until Monday with her. And there were lectures and concerts, and the books to be read and discussed, and little teas and bright people she met, in short, a life of interest and happiness of which she had lately never dreamed.

People began to discover that Miss Whittemore was not only a charming woman, but a beautiful and cultivated one. Even Miss De Browne admitted that her family was good, and that she was really "much above her station." Bah, it makes me sick! as if a woman, any woman could be above independence and faithful, honorable work!

She had several admirers, too, to her train, now that she had become "a friend of the Hildreths, you know;" but that authority, Everyone, accepted for her Mr. Clifford Vanness, rich, handsome and agreeable, if a trifle dissipated. What more could she want? asked Everyone.

But Miss Whittemore herself, one evening after a call from Dr. Hildreth, had been startled by a humiliating discovery, nothing, in fact, short of the sudden knowledge that she loved this proud, reserved quiet man with all the pent up force of her passionate nature. Poor Helen! she threw herself upon her bed and like him of old, turned her face to the wall and wept, in a paroxysm of self-contempt, bitterness and grief that seemed to engulf her. "Unasked! Unsought!"

She recalled his brotherly kindness, his considerate courtesy, his noble heart, and found some comfort in thinking that any woman would have loved such a man. Then she would recall his late constraint, and his seeming avoidance of her, and would writhe in agony. Could he have guessed her secret before she herself had known of its existence?

After that night of misery, people remarked that Miss Whittemore grew more spirituelle; but as her body's strength grew less, her spirit's strength grew great, and it was with triumpant pleasure she would note how plainly the purple veins could be traced in the delicate hands. Then would she say exultingly to herself: "It is coming, coming fast. It can't be far distant now."

But time dragged on, as it has a fashion of doing, until the eve of the year was around again, and with it Dr. Dana Hildreth, who was shown to her library, as it had come to be termed. Her heart beat wildly as she rose to greet him. He had been there seldom of late in that informal way.

"Miss Whittemore," said he earnestly, still holding the almost transparent hand she had extended to him, "why will you not allow my father or myself to help you? You are far from well. Do you know what this means?" holding it up in his broad palm.

"Yes," replied Helen, with a singular undertone of joy; "it means death."

"Why, Helen, darl—" Did her ears deceive her? Surely, yes; for when she quickly looked up he was standing near her, wearing his accustomed composure, if a very anxious look.

"Excuse my using your name, Miss Whittemore," he was saying. "I spoke hastily because of my surprise. But, indeed, its not friendly. You put me so far off in that stately way of yours. I may be nothing to you, do nothing for you" (very bitterly). "But think I didn't mean to speak so. What might, could, would or should Mr. Vanness do without you, not considering us common mortals?"

"Dr. Hildreth," returned she, "you seem to be laboring under some delusion. Mr. Vanness is nothing to me."

Words one would hardly imagine capable of producing so great a change in a man as was apparent in Dana Hildreth. He started; into his dark eyes came a great light, into his face a glad flush, into his whole form an anxious attention. But she, cold with her pain, saw nothing of it. She was gazing into the fire.

"Helen," said a low and eager, yet restrained voice, "is this thing true? tell me again."

"Of course," said Helen, "how could you for an instant, suppose I would marry that man?"

He came close to the trembling girl, for her little strength had suddenly failed her.

"Then, dearest, have pity, and tell me if there is any hope for me. I have loved you since the first time I saw you, but it came so natural that I only knew that life, for some reason, was better and more purposeful. Then when I found it was love, I lived for a time in a fool's paradise, dreading to speak for fear I should be turned out of it. Then that scoundrel, Vanness, told me you had promised to marry him. I tried to tear you out of my heart, to avoid you, but you drew me to you in spite of myself. Oh, Helen, I have suffered! No, don't answer me. I will wait. You shall learn to love me."

She had borne her trouble bravely, after the first agony, but joy quite conquered her, and she had quietly fainted, lying straight, like death itself, in the great arm-chair.

Dr. Hildreth's fright was highly unprofessional. When consciousness returned she was resting in his great strong arms. She opened those blue eyes wonderingly.

"Dearest, forgive me. Do not excite yourself. I will wait; I was inconsiderate."

"No," said she, "I love you. That is what it meant," again holding up that pathetic hand.

Dana's reply was an appropriation of both hands. "You must live now Helen dear, live for me."

Dr. Hildreth wended his homeward way much later than he had intended, and meeting a friend on the corner, left said friend in stupefied amazement at his ecstatic appearence, muttering, "What the deuce has struck Hildreth?"

The next morning Dana called for Miss Whittemore and brought her over to spend the day, as she had done the year before; and as they entered the sitting-room he announced with a touch of boyishness: "My dearly beloved family, condole with Helen and congratulate with me." Then with an earnest joy, "She has made my life worth living, she has promised to be my wife."

At this Helen, instead of waiting to be sympathized with in her misfortune, seized Janet and rushed blushing from the room.

There isn't much more to tell. Miss Whittemore's physician positively forbade her return to school, and she evidently considered it economy to have a physician in the family, for she married him directly after New Year's day. This Miss De Brown considered quite rushing things. Well, perhaps.

So this ends as all stories should in the fairy-lore fashion: "And they lived together very, very happy ever afterward."—Detroit Free Press.

Does a Woman Marrying a Minister Marry His Whole Congregation?

A pretty good story is told of a young but gritty pastor of the First Baptist Church at Pittsfield, Mass., bearing on the old notion that when a lady marries a minister she practically marries his whole congregation. It seems that a short time ago he married a vivacious young lady whose family was of the Episcopal Church, and this gave occasion to some of the tattlers of the husband's church. But the climax was reached a few weeks later, when the young wife attended a social given by the Business-Men's Association, and joined in the waltzes and quadrilles, just like other ladies present. Then the tongues of the gossips of the husband's congregation wagged at double-quick; and, the facts coming to his ears, the next Sunday he shot a little gospel truth at the gossips, saying, among other things, the following:

"My wife came to you in a position involving no responsibility. She is neither the property of the church nor my property in that sense, having views religiously, socially, and domestically which are entirely her own. She is not to be criticised by you. She is accountable only to her God, and the church is not her keeper. She is not a co-worker with me as far as church affairs go, and you have no authority to gossip about her. St. Paul says if church members have a grievance against a brother they shall go to him with two or three and then if he declines to hear to cite him to the church. I want you to come to me if you have any fault to find and not talk to third parties. My wife shall do as she pleases, and she shall not be accountable to you in any sense. You would better let her alone."

Victoria's Daughters.

Of Queen Victoria's daughters Adam Badeau says: "All these ladies lead very dull and humdrum lives. They are too high to find equals in society; they must be surrounded with a certain degree of state and ceremony; they have their people in waiting; everybody courtesies or kotows to them. But this is the extent of their grandeur. Their incomes are not to be compared with the revenues of the nobility; their jewels and toilets are inferior to the trappings of many of the ladies who wait on them; they have no great estates, or mansions, even, but must put up with apartments in some half-deserted palace; and the spectacle they present of impoverished royalty is pitiable, rather than dignified. The nation grudges them their allowance and threatens not to support their children. The demand for a dowery is fought by the radicals at each successive marriage, and the more obscure they remain the better the chance of their portion being paid. The English, perhaps, are still willing to be taxed for the state of the sovereign and the heir to the throne, but not for the support of the royal relatives, whose existence is a burden to the nation and can never be a benefit.

The Republican caucuses, held last week, elected delegates to the county convention, as follows:

1st Ward—C. O. Christianson, Fred Anderson and H. E. Cooke. On motion, I. U. Jennings and C. O. Christianson were appointed on first ward committee for the balance of the term. The committee now stands thus:

I. U. Jennings, chairman.
C. O. Christianson.
H. E. Cooke.

2d Ward—O. L. Hamery, B. F. Zarracher and John McLean were elected as delegates, and the name of B. F. Zarracher added to the ward committee in place of G. H. Palmer, removed to another ward.

3d Ward—Selected as delegates J. G. McGrew and Ole Hanson, and appointed the following ward committee, viz:

G. H. Palmer, chairman.
Andrew Eiken.
Dr. L. B. Tooly.

4th Ward—P. C. Schmidt, John Cromb and A. D. Stephens were selected as delegates. No change in ward committee reported.

5th Ward—E. D. Childs was selected as delegate.

The Republican County Convention.

The Republican County Convention met at the Court House on Friday, at 12 o'clock, and was called to order by Dr. Lankester, chairman of the county central committee. A motion to adjourn till 2 p. m. prevailed. At two convention assembled, E. E. Lommen was elected temporary chairman and P. C. Schmidt temporary secretary. The chair appointed a committee on credentials and one on permanent organization. The committee on credentials reported 70 delegates entitled to seats in the convention. The committee on permanent organization recommended that the temporary organization be made permanent. At this point M. P. C. Schmidt declined to serve, and A. D. Wishard was substituted. Mr. A. D. Stephens arose and put in nomination eight delegates to the convention at St. Cloud, and moved that they be elected by acclamation. Here the music commenced by objections from men who desired that our delegation go in the interest of Judge Stearns, and they raised the cry of a "cut and dried plan." The convention promptly smashed what the Stearns men called the slate, by over a two-thirds vote, and after much animated discussion the following delegates were selected: John Cromb, Hugh Thompson, I. K. Messelt, H. E. Cooke, Mat Cornelius, E. E. Lommen, O. A. Thorsen and F. Hunt.

ALTERNATES.

J. G. McGrew, D. D. Williams, John Anderson, W. L. Davies, Levi S. Myers, E. D. Childs, Ole Nelson, C. M. Ohls.

A motion made by a Stearns man to instruct the delegation for S. G. Comstock was promptly voted down and the delegation goes uninstructed, to make the best combination possible for the interests of Polk County.

FOR ST. PAUL.

The following gentlemen were elected to represent Polk County in the convention at St. Paul, viz:

H. Steenerson, Ole Nelson, Andrew Sture, D. D. Williams, C. C. Knappen, H. Lankester, H. Ives and D. Jacobus.

ALTERNATES.

Ole Hamery, H. Thompson, John Cromb, Ole Hanson, Halvor Grundeson, Ole Larson, John Purcell and Lewis Lohn.

FOR CROOKSTON.

The following gentlemen were elected delegates to represent Polk County in the District Convention at Crookston, viz:

E. D. Childs, H. Wight, C. M. Ohl, N. J. Anderson, J. E. Stiles, J. A. Gilmour, A. G. Kingston and H. E. Cooke.

ALTERNATES.

R. J. Montague, H. Ives, Ole Hamery, B. F. Zarracher, J. G. McGrew, John McLean, Geo. McManus and H. Steenerson.

The committee on resolutions submitted the following report:

Resolved, That we endorse the principle of raising revenue for the support of the government by maintainance of the present tax upon tobacco and on intoxicants, and a tariff upon imports which shall be imposed upon the principle of protection to American labor, and such industries as will profitably be aided thereby; but, we condemn as unjust and unconstitutional the principle of levying a tariff tax for the purpose of protection without regard to the requirements of the United States Treasury, and to this end we demand a thorough revision of the present tariff list, a simplification of its classification and greatly enlarging the free list; and we heartily endorse the views of the Hon. Knute Nelson upon the tariff, as expressed in his recent speech in Congress, and that we commend his course upon the tariff question.

Resolved, That we demand the opening of the Red Lake Indian Reservation and the allotment to the Indians in severalty in the interests of both the white settlers and the aboriginal owners.

Resolved, That we recognize in the Republican clubs now being organized in this community and throughout the State an important and laudable movement to perfect the organization of the party, to inculcate sound Republican doctrines in the rank and file of the party, and to purify and elevate political sentiment. That we heartily endorse the work of these clubs and urge all Republicans to affiliate themselves with them.

Resolved Further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Secretary of the Republican State League.

H. E. Cooke.
E. D. Childs.
A. Sture.
P. C. Schmidt.
Com. on Resolutions.

Objections were made by the high tariff contingent, but upon vote the resolutions were accepted as the sense of the convention by an overwhelming majority.

A motion to adjourn prevailed in peace and harmony.

Fifth District Convention.

The Republican District Convention met at the court house in this city at 10:30 on Tuesday and was called to order by the chairman of the District Central Committee, Hon. E. E. Corliss. Hon. H. Steenerson was made temporary chairman and W. P. Allen, of Carlton Co., temporary secretary. The chair appointed the following committees:

ON CREDENTIALS.

Mr. Boggs, of St. Louis.
H. Wight, of Polk.
Mr. Freeman, of Todd.
Mr. Ingersoll, of Crow Wing.
Mr. Fuller, of Morrison.

ON RESOLUTIONS.

C. L. Lewis, of Ottertail.
H. E. Cooke, of Polk.
O. M. Torrison, of Grant.
J. P. Mattson, of Marshall.
Chas. F. Hendrix, of Stearns.

ON PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

K. Bennet, of Stearns.
Dr. Demars, of Kittson.
Chas. Haupt, of Ottertail.

Pending report of committees the convention adjourned until 1 p. m. Upon re-assembling the committee reported 99 delegates entitled to seats in the convention. There were present 88 delegates the balance, 11, being represented by proxy; owing to a lack of time and space we are unable to publish the list in detail. The committee on permanent organization recommended making the temporary organization permanent. The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

The Republicans of the Fifth Congressional District of Minnesota hereby declare their confidence in the Republican party, that it is the only political party which has ever promulgated those principles which form the basis of advancing civilization, and the general prosperity of the citizens of the republic.

We demand a readjustment of the tariff and its reduction to the lowest possible point consistent with the development and preservation of American Industries and labor.

We denounce the unjust and partisan action of the democratic congress in their effort to disfranchise the territory of Dakota.

We denounce the party in power in endeavoring to pose before the people as champions of reform, loud in protestations, in positive enactments wanting.

We turn confidently to the republican party in congress for wise legislation believing that the national government has the power under the constitution to enact sufficient laws to control "trusts" to encompass corporate power, to perfect interstate, commercial relations so that in connection with a wise adjustment of the revenue duties the whole land from sea to sea and from the lake to the gulf may be equally protected and equally benefitted under the law.

Resolved:—That we heartily endorse the course of the Hon. Knute Nelson in Congress, in matters of national policy and we commend the energy and distinguished ability with which he has discharged his duties as representative.

A resolution endorsing Gresham, requesting our delegates to use all honorable means for his nomination was tabled, the convention preferring to send only level-headed men free to use their own judgment, (Gresham men were selected, however, as the delegates.) Nominations were now made for delegates to Chicago, Hon. H. Steenerson, of Polk, and C. L. Lewis, of Ottertail, were elected, the former by acclamation. As alternates O. M. Torrison, of Grant and M. D. Taylor, of Stearns were elected. A resolution endorsing the name of Hon. G. G. Hartley, of Duluth for delegate at large, also Geo. N. Lamphere, of Moorhead, as elector was passed, and the convention adjourned.

CONVENTION NOTES.

Pending the counting of ballots on vote for delegate, Gov. Gilman was invited to address the convention which he did in his usual happy manner.

E. E. Adams can jump higher than any newspaper man in the business. When the result was reached that showed a majority for Lewis for delegate, Adams gave a jump that would have made the most expert bounty jumper of the war period sick with envy. He didn't quite strike the ceiling with his head.

The convention was one of the most harmonious ever held in the "bloody Fifth" and everybody seemed content with results attained.

Council Proceedings.

Proceedings of a regular meeting of the city council, of the city of Crookston held May 8th 1888. The following members were present, Ald. Watts, Lally, Childs, Fournet, Jerome, Walters, Nolan, Bohn, Steenerson, Jennings and Marlette. President Watts in the chair.

A Republican Tariff Bill.

Outline of a Measure that Mr. McKinley is to Bring Foward.

[Special Dispatch to The Evening Post.]

Washington, May 9.—The statement has recently been made as a fact that there is a sharp division between Eastern and Western Republicans on the expediency of submitting to the House a Republican tariff bill, and that the Republicans of the Ways and Means committee will refuse to present such a bill. This information is based upon misinformation. Mr. McKinley of the Ways and Means Committee will not only not refuse to submit a bill, but he has one already prepared. It has been approved by other Republican members of the Committee and by some of the other leading Republicans of the House, and it will be presented at the earliest opportunity as a substitute for all pending tariff bills. This measure has not been the result of a party caucus, but has been drafted after a great many consultations with representative Republicans from different sections, and is believed to be a measure as to which all of the Republicans, with possibly one exception, will agree. That single exception is Judge Kelley of Pennsylvania, who will listen to no proposition which involves the reduction of the duty on sugar. Sugar he regards as the keynote of the protective system, and he does not think it wise Republican policy to in any way interfere with it. The time for the Republicans to move any measure as a substitute for the Mills bill will not arrive until after the general debate has been concluded, and it will be discretionary with those who have this substitute bill in charge whether or not they will give notice that they will move it before the debate in the Committee of the Whole shall begin, or whether they will make no public mention of it until after that debate ends. The probabilty is that the measure will not be withheld so long, but that about the time that the Mills bill is taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole, the details of the McKinley bill will be made known. In fact, it is very possible that Mr. McKinley, in his speech, which will be near the close of the general debate, will formally announce to the House that the Republicans have agreed to a measure and he may incorporate it in his speech.

There has been a very determined demand from the East as well as from the West that the Republicans shall present some affirmative proposition relative to the tariff. This demand is to be answered in the McKinley bill One of the objects in withholding the bill has been to see from the general drift of the discussion what the sentiment of the House is likely to be, and to take advantage of that discussion to frame a bill which would be pretty certain to receive the support of most of the Republicans, and possibly of the Randall Democrats.

The bill in general terms proposes a reduction of at least one-half the duty on sugar, the abolition of all the taxes on tobacco, except on cigars and cigarettes, the repeal of the internal-revenue tax upon alcohol used in the arts, and the adoption of the wool schedule agreed upon by the wool convention. The total reduction to be effected by this bill would be not far from $65,000,000.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

Retirement of Health Officers.

Official report of the State Board of health; Two representative, and pioneer Health Officers, Dr. C. E. Dampier of Crookston, Polk County, and Dr. E. D. Abell of Farmington, Dakota County have retired by expiration of term of service. Dr. Dampier came into office under peculiar difficulties. There was not another organized Board of Health in Polk County, and popular support had not yet been secured for the sanitary service. The doctor began his work, April 9,1885, and four days after was called to the first case of what proved a wide-spread outbreak of small pox. It was in a boarding house, and was promptly cared for. In May, another case broke out in a hotel, then another in a private family, and so on till eleven cases had appeared in Crookston alone. They were single cases, removed from each other, and suggested some contagion outside the city; we found it in a lumber camp forty miles away. Dr. Dampier's service was a trying one, but by his tact, and steady performance of his duty he stayed the disease in his own city, and was of great assistance to those of us who had to deal with it elsewhere. Another but more limited outbreak of small pox was promptly suppressed in 1886. But, after all, it is in the every day duties of his office that the efficient Health Officer is most thoroughly tested and here Dr. Dampier did faithful service, laying good foundations upon which his successor may reasonably be expected to carry the work of municipal sanitation to still better results.

Angus Items.

Fine weather, but we are getting in need of rain.

A good many of the farmers are all through seeding and most of the others are nearly so.

Three runaways this week to enliven things; J. M. Palmer's gentle colt managed to get away and run through a barbed wire fence and then run home, hauling the buggy into the barn without doing any damage; Mr. Loughbridge and A. M. Shaw each let his team get away just to see how fast it could run without any one driving and no damage done in either case.

School begins next Monday, Miss M. A. Crookshanks teacher. This is her third term here.

Theodore Brush started for his school near St. Hilaire on Friday. Looks as though he means business as he took a shot gun, lots of ammunition and SOME books.

Letter from D. Hatlestad.

WOONSOCKET, Dak., May 7, 1888.

ED. JOURNAL: The fertility of the soil in the Red River Valley both in Minn. and Dak., has so often been lauded that it remains an old story and as an established fact that the soil in that portion of the country cannot be excelled for wheat growing. I have now passed through the length of this belt of country from Larimore to Wahpeton and thence to Ortonville. Through here the farmers were well nigh done with their seeding and requiring only a few days more to finish it. From Ortonville I passed on through to Aberdeen due west toward the James River Valley. Thus far my course has been made in shape of a right angle through a rich prairie county, perhaps the richest in the country. Thus far there is no end to settlements, fine farms with fine houses, fine towns and villages with hardly enough to contain their people and industries. Aberdeen is a fine town located on the prairie without the least sign of timber in sight. There are fine buildings of brick and frame, closely built on each side of the seven or eight principal streets, thus showing as it were, one wall of different form, taste and material. The taste displayed in the construction of buildings and laying out parks and streets is of a metropoliton cast. But judging from my own experience, I think that the Aberdeen folks have good taste in some things but in others their taste is Frontier-like, and rural, not to say civilized or refined, I speak now of their beefsteak at six in the morning. The Aberdeen people never wait for anything, and knowing this fact it stands to reason that they would not wait for the steak till seven in the morning when they once had the opportunity to wait with the building of their city until the timber forests and groves so essential to eastern cities should grow up. It is now too late to wait for the forests to grow because the young sprouts are always trodden down by the onward tramp, tramp of a metropolis of the west. I am now at Woonsocket, the county seat of Sanborn County. My trip from Aberdeen here has been in a due course south and through much the same kind of country as lies between Ortonville and Aberdeen The soil is to a larger extent mixed with sand than the Red River soil is. The spring though complained of as being later than usual, is looked upon favorably for good crops. The wheat fields are beginning to get green and farmers are plowing for the corn, as spring plowing is considered better than fall plowing. Between here and Aberdeen there is nothing but prarie although we are in the valley of the James, and the land is all settled and converted from a wilderness to thousands of happy homes. I shall further state that I have listened to different conversations had by parties traveling on the same train and at the hotels where I have stopped and find Norsks, Swedes, Danes, Irish, Germans, Scotch, Americans and French, and from the conversations that I have been able to understand, I have drawn these conclusions: First, that as far as fuel is concerned in Dakota, the scarcity of timber though a disadvantage is not to be considered as a drawback; that this disadvantage is is overcome by the prospect of strong railroad competion in line of freight which is bound to be created between the different competing lines as a return from these to the people of the territory for the trade of the territory.

Second, that the class of farmers who are the most successful on the small farms whose wants are measured by their gains, and work themselves out of difficulties by not getting into them, who have no pretentions of the large farmer but who do their work honestly from early till late on the principle of saving a days work for a rainy day by putting it into the farm when the opportunity is given, like putting a penny into the savings bank for safe keeping. That the sod houses on these praries invariably are occupied and that the finest houses are the ones that are the ones that are empty if any are.

Third, that business on account of probibtion has not decreased; that prohibition prohibits and has come to stay as the guest of a law-abiding people in the territory of Dakota; that the verdict given by the people on this question, though claimed by some not to be the expression of the people owing to the light vote, appears to be the verdict and sense especially among those people who came of foreign blood: Although they drink as much as any class and get drunk just as easy when it can be had, but who when voting perform a sober act. This evening I am going by Mitchell on my way to Chamberlain on the Missouri River opposite the Sioux Reserve. It is feared that a great deal of red tape will be gone through before the president will appoint the commissioners to settle with the Indians and before he will issue his proclamation for opening it. An order has been issued to the different Indian Agencies ordering them to keep settlers away from the reservation until after the proclamation is issued. I make this remark so that any who may read this will know that it is premature at this time to go there for purpose of settlement. Where I have been to see what I can see and learn what I can learn I shall for the benefit of my friends and readers of the JOURNAL, give a continued story from my travel to and about the Sioux Reservation.

Yours Respectfully.
D. E. HATLESTAD.

The Anti-Saloon Republican Platform.

At the Anti-Saloon Republican National Convention held in New York last week the following platform was adopted:

First—We regard the saloon as the common and malignant foe of civilization and humanity. It is wasteful, vicious and hostile to good government. It degrades the individual, ruins the family, debauches our youth, is destructive of Sunday as the people's day of rest, corrupts the ballot, fosters crime and threatens the very existence of the republic. It has become a pernicious and demoralizing power in politics—municipal, state and national, and as therein intrusive and aggressive. As a public enemy it ought to abolished.

Second—We have with great satisfaction witnessed the growth of the anti-saloon sentiment in all parts of the country as shown by constitutional amendments, legislative enactments, and by the fact that in 34 states and territories laws have been enacted requiring the giving of scientific instruction in public schools on the effects of alchohol on the human system. The public conscience is aroused on this subject, and will be satisfied with nothing less than the suppression of this monstrous evil.

The saloon is doomed and must go.

Third—Recognizing the practical difficulties of legislation and enforcement we unite upon the broad ground of active hostility to the saloon without dictating methods of procedure. The people have the right and should have the opportunity of deciding how and when the saloon shall be suppressed. It should be destroyed with the weapons that are most effective and available.

Fourth—As members of the Republican party we are proud of its glorious past, rejoice in its present vigor and have an abiding confidence that it will prove to be the agent of divine Providence for the destruction of the saloon, as it was for the overthrow of slavery.

The saloon is moral slavery.

Fifth—Speaking for an overwhelming majority of Republican voters and citizens, we respectfully, but most earnestly, ask our brethren of the national Republican convention, that is to meet in Chicago in June, to incorporate in their platform of principles a declaration of hostility to the saloon as clear and emphatic as the English language can make it. We ask this because it is right.

Right is might.

Sixth—We earnestly invite the co-operation of all friends of temperance upon this plan of campaign, which has the promise and potency of the speedy overthrow of the saloon party in national affairs and the immediate crippling and ultimate extermination of the legalized liquor traffic.

The following resolution was offered ly Albert Griffin, of Kansas, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved: That, recognizing the fact that during the early history of the Republican party, when it made the most glorious portion of its record, it had the enthusiastic support of the best women of the land, and recognizing the further fact that the help of all good women is now needed in the warfare against the saloon, we appeal to them to give a hearty support to the Republican party whenever it stands for protection of the home against the saloon.

The New York delegation sent a telegram to the Republican members of the legislature demanding that they enact local option for the state.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

[First publication April 19th, 1889.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty dollars ($60) installment of interest, which became due and payable on the 24th day of December, 1887, upon a certain mortgage made, executed, and delivered by John N. Ives and Annie Ives, his wife, of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 28th day of June A. D. 1884, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 30th day of June 1884, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 202, 203, 204 and 205.

And whereas a further default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the mortgagors failing and neglecting to pay the the taxes assessed against and levied upon the premises covered by said mortgage, prior to the date of the sale of lands for the payment of taxes, and the mortgagee, to protect the lien of its said mortgage, has been compelled to pay, and on the 2d day of May, 1887, did pay in satisfaction of the taxes then due and delinquent on said premises, the sum of twelve and 75-100 dollars ($12.75,) and the said defaults having each continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of such default and declaration aforesaid, there is claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and ninety-two dollars and twenty-nine one hundredths ($692.29,) and no action or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼) of Section thirty-two (32) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less, according to United States Government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest, taxes and fifty dollars attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on the 2d day of June A. D. 1888, subject to redemption at any time within one year, in manner provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication May 10th 1888.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Joseph Fortin, mortgagor, to Mrs. Mary A. Allen, mortgagee, dated the 7th day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of June A. D. 1882, at four o'clock p. m., in book "P" of mortgages, on pages 430, 431 and 432 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred forty 60-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. There is due on said mortgage the further sum of twenty-five 40-100 dollars for taxes paid as by said mortgage provided.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or by his duly appointed deputy, on Friday the 22d day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The south half of the northeast quarter (s½ ne¼) and also lots one and two (1 and 2) of Section three (3,) all in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north of Range forty-four (44) west, containing one hundred fifty-nine 33-100 (159 33-100) acres, according to the government survey thereof.

Dated at Crookston, Minn., this 3d day of May 1888.

MONTANA SHORT LINE.

When traveling every one should consider well the questions of economy, comfort, safety and speed, these questions being of the same importance in a journey of an hour as in one of several days' ride. An examination of the map will convince anyone that this is the most direct route to and from all the principal points in Central and Northern Minnesota, Dakota and Montana.

ST. PAUL MINNEAPOLIS MANITOBA RAILWAY.

Our epuipment and time are excellent. Our rates are the lowest, but this fact is something which speaks for itself. Definite figures and maps can be obtained by applying to any Agent of the Company, or the General Passenger Agent.

The following are a few of the Principal Points reached via this Line:

ST. CLOUD, SAUK CENTRE, FERGUS FALLS, CROOKSTON, ST. VINCENT, HUTCHINSON, PAYNESVILLE, MORRIS, APPLETON AND BRECKENRIDGE, MINN.; WATERTOWN, ABERDEEN, ELLENDALE, WAHPETON, FARGO, GRAND FORKS, GRAFTON, DEVILS LAKE, BOTTINEAU AND BUFORD, DAKOTA; GLASGOW, DAWES (FT. BELKNAP), ASSINNIBOINE, FT. BENTON, GREAT FALLS, HELENA AND BUTTE, MONTANA; WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, AND ALL PACIFIC COAST POINTS.

Parties seeking farms or business locations will find unusual opportunities for both on this line in Northern Dakota and Montana, also in Minnesota where the Company has for sale at low prices and on favorable terms 2,000,000 acres of excellent farming, grazing and timber lands. Jim Hill's Goose.

Long years ago, nearly a decade, Jim Hill had a nice, fat, likely young gosling that strode triumphantly over the savannas of Red River Valley, the only goose kind that had any right to crop the rich grasses of the fertile fields from the Northern Pacific to the International boundary, and when this fine gosling had attained gooschood, every day in the year she laid a large egg of gold. Time sped on and the goose grew and was happy, for had she not the whole valley for her pasture, and there was not another goose in all the land and she grew fat and her eggs increased in size and frequency until she was often known to lay a bushel a day, all solid gold and no dross. "Verily," said Jim, "there is no other such goose in all the land and her industry and faithfulness has made me rich!" Wild geese in great flocks flew over her domain, but were frightened away, and the pampered golden goose was the wonder of the world, for had not her conduct been upright and her products wonderful? But one spring, after this wonderful goose had stood through a long, hard winter, on one foot alternately to warm and keep the other from freezing, and had eked out a precarious livlihood from the droppings of certain thorough-bred bulls that Jim had sent to keep her company, and just as she had plumed and oiled her feathers for a summer's swim in the glassy lakes, and pick up a few pollywogs for a change of diet, Jim's emmissary appeared and informed her that she was old enough to be plucked, that she had an abundance of fine feathers and down which she did not need in summer and that their value was great. Miss goose accepted the situation and her beautiful feathers and soft down were removed without much remonstrance, and when freed from the hands of her destroyer she was no longer the fine goose she had been for lo! her wings hung helplessly by her side, and the egg gatherer found less eggs for many months. Her summer on the bosom of the glassy lakes was not as gay as she as she had anticipated, her visions of being tossed upon the stormy billow in full plume and vigor were not realized, and her success in capturing pollywogs had been far behind her bright expectations, Her dismal summer passed away and the frosty nights of autumn found her again full fledged with all the vim and hope of her former years. But now appeared the emmissary and again plucked her of her beautiful winter garment, even to the soft down she had doted on to shield her body from the chilly and freezing boreal breezes, and the poor goose lost hope courage, had she not enriched her master, had she not performed all and more than could be expected even of a wonderful goose? and communing with herself as wonderful geese sometimes do, said: "My usefulness is gone; my litter of golden eggs is laid out and I have not enough vital energy left to form another, the cold winter is at hand and I must shiver and suffer for seven long months, Oh! that I could die now, and ceasing to think of her woes, the poor goose was seized with a congestive chill and turned up her broad flat feet to the November sun.

A FRIEND OF THE GOOSE,

The Illinois Republican Platform.

Springfield, Ill., May 3,—The following is the platform adopted by the State Republican Convention:

The Republican party of the State of Illinois deems it unnecessary, on the eve. of a National Convention, to make an extended declaration of principles, more than to reaffirm those laid down in the National platform of 1884, and to express the conviction that the public interests would be greatly promoted by a change of administration, The Democratic party has become merely an organization for official spoils. It has unblushingly violated all its reformatory promises. It is not entitled to the confidence of the people. The President solemnly pledged himself to carry out Civil-Service Reform, but with the full approval of his partisan supporters he has converted this reform into a shallow pretense. He committed himself to the one-term principle in his letter of acceptance, but is now actually using the Federal patronage to secure a re-election. His partisan confederates proclaim devotion to equal suffrage rights, while they trample these rights under foot in the South. The Democratic party professes attachment to State sovereignty and home rule, but ruthlessly denies both to the 60,000 American citizens of Dakota, fearing that the votes of that people may be cast for the Republican candidates at the coming Presidential election. It professes love for the Union soldiers and sailors, but its continued policy has been to refuse relief to the suffering defenders of the nation and their dependents. It rules the national House of Representatives, which alone can originate changes of tax and revenue bills, but it has done nothing in its past six years' control of that body to reduce the surplus accumulation of money in the Treasury, or to relieve the people of unnenessary taxation.

The Democraic party has provided no seaboard defence against foreign invasion. Its administration of foreign affairs has been weak to the verge of humiliation. Our natation is now represented abroad by men who either sought its dismemberment or openly sympathized with its foes. The postal service affecting every interest has become a disgrace to the country. Partisan spoilsmen in violation of civil-service principles have displaced trained, competent and faithful officers, many of them ex-Union soldiers. Every function of the Government is made subordinate to partisan ends. There is a lamentable want of honesty of purpose and efficiency of administration.

The needed change of administration can be accomplished by selection of a candidate whose courage, character and record command universal confidence, and will concentrate the united and enthusiastic support of the whole Republican party. We must have an aggressive, not a defensive campaign. For a leader in such a campaign, we turn with one accord to Walter Q. Gresham. In the opinion of this Conveniton he is the best and most available candidate to head the Republican party to victory in the coming Presidential election. By his brave and patriotic services in the war for the preservation of the Union and the abolition of slavery, Walter Q. Gresham has won a warm place in the hearts of the volunteer soldiers and of the emancipated race. By his important labors in two great Cabinet positions, he has demonstrated high qualiites as a statesman. By his unswerving rectitude on the bench in holding the scales of justice on even poise, irrespective of the strength or weakness, the wealth or poverty of the suitors, he has gained the confidence of the people, who recognize in him a just and fearless judge; and in his whole life, from its humble beginning to his present high position as Circuit Judge for the great States of Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, the people have seen in him traits of character resembling those of the immortal Lincoln. We feel confident that his nomination for President by the National Convention will restore the administration to the keeping of the Republican party and give the nation a President worthy of its origin and history, its traditions and aspiration. We therefore request the delegates from this State to the National Convention to use all honorable means to secure his nomination.

An attempt was made to get the Convention to adopt a resolution favoring the submission of a prohibition amendment to the people but it failed.

Tariff-Protected Laborers.

Farm, Stock and Home.

A recent strike in a men's clothing manufactory in Minneapolis furnishes a significent commentary on the constantly reiterated boast that our tariff system insures munificent wages to labor, and that if it were not for the tariff "pauper labor" would be the rule. The strike referred to was made by female employees, and it has been the means of disclosing the fact that girls were compelled to work very hard ten to twelve hours a day to earn an average of a little over four dollars a week, on which they had to live as best they could. Sixty of the girls were getting but $2.90 a week each. In order to live at all on such wages the girls were compelled to board far from the factory, could not afford to pay car fare and hence were compelled to walk long distances twice a day. It was against a further reduction in wages that the girls struck. At this writing the strike is still on, the proprietors refusing to arbitrate, even, claiming they can get all the hands they want at the reduced rates! If this claim is true, it furnishes indisputable proof that we not only have the despised "pauper labor" in this country, but plenty of paupers as well.

The proprietors in this case are protected by a tariff on the goods they make; the employees are now out of work and have plenty of time to look around to see where their protection comes in. This case is not singular, duplicates can be found in every city in the land. Still, this is the country where labor is "inspired with hope and crowned with dignity."

Hemp Binding Twine.

Farm, Stock and Home.

A process has recently been discovered by which the very best quality of binding twine can be made from domestic hemp. Attempts have heretofore been made to utilize hemp for this purpose, but results were not satisfactory. Now, however, we are assured by several manufacturers and general agents of harvesters, that the "new process" twine is actually superior to that made of pure manilla, it being much less liable to break. The new hemp twine can be used with the same adjustment and tension of the binder that is adapted to manilla or sisal, which was impossible with the old one. This new product makes its appearance at an opportune time, for it will prove a disagreeable obstacle to the syndicate whose purpose it is to monopolize the importation of material and control the price of the twine now almost universally used. There is another advantage: If the 50,000 tons of binding twine used in this country every year can be made of an easily grown domestic product it will prove a welcome addition to our agricultural industries. For the present year the price will be but little below that of manilla, as there will not be enough of it made to more than prevent the combination in the latter from becoming extortionate; but we are informed that the manufactures of the hemp twine say they will ultimately be able to make twine for the United States as low as it can be made in the world, and that they are perfectly indifferent to high, low or no tariffs.

It seems to us that patriotism and self-interest both appeal to the farmer to encourage this new industry whenever he can, for it certainly means much cheaper twine in the near future.

Taxation.

Farm, Stock and Home.

Governments are established for the protection of the life, liberty and property of their people. All individuals are naturally interested in such laws and regulations as will best reach these results. Experience teaches us that it requires a great deal of money to keep the machinery of state moving along smoothly. The people who receive the benefits of this organized society must pay the necessary expenses incident to its healthy existance. Thus arose the idea of taxation, and it is one of the most important functions of the state. It cannot be said that any system of taxation so far known is perfect; nor can it be said that because we have had our present mode in use a long time it is growing obsolete.

The principle is that taxation to be just must fall equally upon all property. While this may contain the truth it it does not necessarily contain all the the truth. So far as the protection of property is concerned the principle is absolutely just, but the functions of government do not cease in proecting its people in their property rights. They are also founded to protect citizens in life and liberty; and these rights are not essentially related or connected with property. The question naturally suggests itself; is it exact justice to require the property of one man to bear the burdens of securing to others the rights of citizenship? Without entering into a discussion of this abstruse question, and giving my reasons for my belief, I am clearly of the opinion that a per capita tax should be limited to a road and school fund, but should at least be required in these two matters; and that beyond this the support of the government should rest upon acunulated wealth. So far this seems to be the settled principle of our local and state governments, but not of our national government. The principle of collecting revenues, or taxes, for the support of our national government consists of a tribute levied upon individuals according to what they use, and not on the amount of wealth they possess. Of this phase of the tax question I do not care to write now, but only desire to extend a word of warning to the people and more especially farmers, concerning this "Henry Georgism" or "single tax" principle, which is meeting with some favor in many places, and even with some farmers. It seems to to be the most sweeping attempt at the annihilation of personal and individual responsibility of the governed to the government that has yet been proposed for serious discussion. It is, in essence, organized anarchy, if so paradoxical a term may be used. The idea of these "single tax" advocates is to remove the tax from everything except real estate and make the burdens of all organized society fall specifically upon this class of property. The objections to this theory are of a positive and negative character. It would cast the burdens of governmental support upon those least able to bear them—the farmers. They would be required to pay not only for the protection they received in the possession and enjoyment of their own property, but also for the protection enjoyed by all others who did not own real estate. One of the worst evils arising from our present mode of taxation lies in the fact that very many of those who vote a tax bear none of its burdens, and it is not supposed that a person will be as careful concerning his neighbor's property as he would his own.

Taxation should fall on the property which a man really has and not on that which he appears to have. In regard to a farm jointly owned by mortgagor and mortgagee, each party should pay taxes on his interest in the farm, as shown by the record, and pay it in the district in which the land lies. I believe a large majority of the farmers of the country are in favor of this idea, and if we are it has got to be adopted and that speedily. It is a very important question and should be discussed in farm papers, in Alliances, and, if desired, such a concert of action secured as will carry it through.

Another point to which I wish to call attention here is that bankers and chattel money loaners do not pay their just proportion of taxes. They escape by making false returns to the assessors, by perjury and other nefarious ways. All who read this know that these are notorious facts. Many ways have been suggested and tried to overcome these frauds, but so far without success. There is one way, I think, by which this purpose may be accomplished. It is to require all parties who make chattel or personal property loans to file with the county clerk of the counties in which the loans are made, an affidavit each month showing the amount of loans made and the parties to whom they are made, and the county clerk should be required to assess against each money loaner the average amount of his loans for the year. As an incentive for the money loaner to comply fully with such a law, a failure in any instance to do so should be a complete bar to the recovery of the debt in our courts. If a majority of the people think this would be a good law, then we want it and must have it.

Farmers have been living too long under loans constructed specially by politicians, and must now demand their rights at the ballot box. It is useless to look for reform in these matters through disorganized effort. This has been repeatedly tried and is a flat failure. At the present time the Farmer's Alliance seems to be the means by which an orderly and concentrated effort can be made to secure the rights of the agricultural people. In Dakota it is taking the right course and is now in a position to make felt any reasonable and just demand. It is in a position to elect to the legislature of the territory those men who unequivocally agree to do, or not to do, the things desired for the welfare of the farmers; and it should elect them irrespective of their political affiliations.

Alden's Library Magazine:

Among the notable articles in The Library Magazine for May, are the following: The Negro Question in the United States, by George W. Cable; the concluding paper on the Constitution of the United States, by Hon. E. J. Phelps, U. S. Minister to Great Britain; the fourth of a series of scholarly articles on Post-Talmudic Hebrew Literature, by Dr. Bernhard Pick; the article on Hans Sachs, the cobbler-poet of Nuremberg, from the Westminister Review. is very curious; Snowed up in Arcady, by Rev. Dr. Jessopp, is one of the most enjoyable papers found in last month's English magazines; Cardinl Manning's Plea for the Worthless, is very timely, and worth universal reading; the critique upon Mr. Froude's West Indies is sound and appreciative; the Earl of Meath gives a genial account of "A Model Factory" in England; Miss Frances Power Cobbe discusses the "Education of the Emotions," and opens up a suggestive train of thought, as also does the paper on "Domestic Service and Democracy." The editorial miscellany, entitled: "Current Thought," is unusually full and interesting. The issue contains 196 pages, in large type; an extraordinary amount of high-class literature for the price of $1.00 a year, or 10 cents a copy. John B. Alden, Publisher, 393 Pearl Street, New York; 218 Clark Street, Chicago.

The Novelist, Alden's new weekly Magazine, which is devoted entirely to American fiction, is a remarkably attractive and popular enterprise. Every reader interested in high-class fiction should send to the publisher for a free specimen copy. The first completed story is Robert Timsol's, A "Pessimist," an uncommonly bright, readable story, making about 200 pages, which is sold in paper for 15 cents, or in cloth, 36 cents, post-paid. It would not be easy to name a novel in which the conversation has so much wit, humor and clever badinage, sustained throughout with such unflagging vivacity. There is not a dull page in the book. Moreover, it has—what was so much desiderated by Charles Darwin—a good ending. The hero is thoroughly cured of his pessimism. John B. Alden, Publisher, New York and Chicago.

The American Agriculturist for June 88, comes to us with the brightness and freshness of the month of roses and strawberries. The frontispiece is a full-page engraving (by Davis) entitled "In Berry Season." The live stock department is even more fully illustrated than usual, giving engravings of Breton cattle, Hackney horses, Oxford-Down sheep, poultry, etc. Then there are plans of dwellings and barns, new fruits and plants and various labor-saving devices. Joseph Harris contributes an article on the value of fertilizers; Seth Green, the New York State Fish Commissioner, gives directions for the care of Gold Fish; Chester P. Dewey writes on sugar production. Consumption and cost, on the rabbit war in Australasia, and other timely topics; W. W. Meech contributes an illustrated article on the propagation of the quince; A. B. Allen treats upon the rational treatment of horses. In all some forty well-known writers are represented in this number. The household department is full of useful and valuable matter of interest to farmers' families; and the boys and girls find in the columns specially devoted to their interests much that is instructive and entertaining. Price $1.50 per year, English or German; single numbers 15 cts. Address American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

We will not permit any store in Crookston to undersell us. We ask for your welcome patronage because we give the best value for your money and have gone beyond the reach of competition. Other dealers may use column after column of space in the newspapers, but the truth stands out in bold relief, as brilliant as the unclouded noonday, that the Berthiaume Jewelry Co. sells the finest Watches, Diamonds, Silverware, marble and walnut Clocks, guard and vest Chains, Cuff Buttons, Lace Pins, Ear Drops, plain gold Rings, seal Rings, Bracelets, Necklaces, Fob Chains, Scarf Pins, Opera Glasses, in fact everything pertaining to a First-Class Jewelry Store, more than any of their competitors in Crookston or surrounding country.

We have the Finest Store, show the finest goods, treat every one alike, be they rich or poor, and make HONESTY THE FOUNDATION OF ALL OUR DEALINGS. The element that attracts trade to our store is that we do business on business principles, and ask the custom of no one on the whining and whimpering plea of sympathy. If we do not sell you goods for less money than other dealers and give you better attention than you get elsewhere, why then, do not trade with us. Remember our address,

T. H. Bjoin says he saw a neighbor of Bernt Abrahamson's this week who says that the story that the lost girl had been found is a mistake. It was a boy that was found and nobody knows where he was stolen from.

C. H. Saake displays in his Jewelry store a fine assortment of gold and silver watches, gold jewelry, solid silver tableware, fine clocks etc. at prices lower than at any former period. Everybody is invited to call and inspect my stock. [5-7]

The Maggie Fielding Comedy Ideals will present "Muldoon's Picnic" at the opera house on Saturday evening next. The Brainerd papers speak well of this troupe. The play is on the comical order, abounding in ludicrous situations and enjoyable if well rendered. The box sheet is now ready at the Berthiume Jewelry Company's new store.

Inez, the little nine year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Sargeant, died of diphtheria on Wednesday morning, May 16th, and was buried in the evening. The funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Sargeant is away in California and the death of his only child will fall with crushing force as she was his idol.

We have just received a carload of Buggies, Carriages, Phaetons, Jump Seats, Platform Wagons and Road Carts, and can sell you better goods for the money than any one else. We do not sell snide goods at any price. Don't fail to see us.

By the kindness of Hon. Knute Nelson THE JOURNAL is in receipt of a full and complete account of the funeral obsequies of the late Gen. John A. Logan together with the speeches of the prominent men who took part. It is a very intresting work, and highly appreciated.

R. G. Marlette had the misfortune to have a fine colt break his leg this week and he at once named the colt "Dennis." A sympathizing neighbor suggested that he get Mike Legue over and see if he could not mend the broken colt, so Marlette sent for Mike, who patched the animal up and the prospects now are good for a complete recovery.

But very few people are aware of the amount of adulteration there is in the different lines of food products. Sugars, jellies, butter and cheese are all liable to adulteration when brought from eastern markets. When in want of a pure article of cheese, call on Hartshorn, Hurlbut & Co. or B. Clements and ask for Hallock cheese which is warranted absolutely pure and full-cream stock. By so doing you secure a good article while you encourage home manufacture.

On all loans we make, interest payable at our office in Crookston.
STEENERSON & McMANUS.

As the grey dawn was beginning to get out of bed on Tuesday morning about 6:30, two of our prominent citizins, one small boy, and one youth, four fish-poles, one small dog and two little fishes were observed to creep quietly into the city and slowly and solemnly wend their way along west Main toward Hib. Palmer's residence. We heard Hib. tell a derisive bystander that "them ain't skip jacks;" and Doc says they were not sardines but we know they were almost as big as either.

The Park Region Pioneer is preparing in tract form a reprint of "The Revelation of the Sevens" a copy of which is to be furnished to every reader of the Pioneer. We should hardly deem it necessary to furnish a premium with so excellent a paper as the Pioneer, which alone is worth ten times its cost to its subscribers, but then some people would not be content with the world and all contained therein for fifty cents—and would not buy it without a chromo "throwed in."

Geo. Holden was down from Warren last week looking after the sale of his house and lot here which business he accomplished to his satisfaction. He reports the hardware business flourishing in fact so rushing that Guy was obliged to cut off that dandy moustache to keep up with it. Guy will not venture to visit his friends here until he shall have restored that tree-claim to its original vigor and beauty.

Bro. Fuller of the Little Falls Transcript is one of the most modest men you ever saw. To have seen him quietly wandering around our streets on convention day one would not suspect that he had just got out a boom edition of the Transcript bigger than a Pioneer Press Ice Palace—edition. Yet so it was and a good one too filled to overflowing with the good features of Little Falls and vicinity. He deserves well of that people.

Next Saturday Berthiume & Michaud will hold their second auction sale at which they will offer every conceivable article of houehold furnitnre and farm implements that one can conceive of. Among the attractions they will offer is a new milch grade Shorthorn cow with a fine four weeks old heifer calf at her side. These animals will be offered on time on good secured notes due Nov. 1st, or a discount of TWENTY per cent will be given for all cash. Here is a rare chance to secure an A No. 1 bargain for some good stock fancier. The sale will commence at 1:30 sharp. Do not fail to call round and see what we can do for you.

On Friday evening all who were on Main St. in the vicinity of Fontaine & Anglim's store were treated to a free circus exhibition. About 8 o'clock a youth, mounted on a wild and festive specimen of ye unbroken broncho of of the plains, appeared on Main Street, with the pony about 25 per cent above regulation gait. He rode nearly to the river at the same pace and, turning came back as though trying to beat his record one-half at least. When about opposite the old post office the pony stopped quick as a shot and commenced to buck violently. The lad did not stop to argue the point but took a flying header, and for a few seconds lost all interest in the play. After vainly trying to kill the boy by viciously striking at him with his fore feet, the pony lit out for his stable. He was corralled however near the Merchants' Bank but the lad did not seem anxious to ride him again.

Sheriff Paulsrud makes a dandy marshal. Mounted on his dashing gray charger he reminds of some great general whom we never saw, Wellington, Nap. or some of them fellers as they swung aloft their bright blades, and shouted: "Let 'er go Gallagher," or words to that effect, while an entranced populace gazed on in wonder at the daring feat.

Ole Hanson returned from a trip through the Thirteen Towns this week. He reports early sown wheat looking splendidly but the later sowed needs rain. He predicts a good crop year out there which makes the prospects of the farmer brighter than ever, as it is very probable that wheat will bring a good price next fall, and with good crops good prices and a new railroad what wonder the granger regards the future with great complacency.

The Danger Before Us.

We have already alluded to the importance of housekeepers paying more attention to the kind of baking powder used in leavening their bread. This is a matter to which we cannot draw attention too often, because it is something which involves the most serious consequences to the general body of mankind. Temperance apostles tell us—and there is ample foundation for the statement—that there is disease, both moral and physical, in the intoxicating cup; and in the same way there is disease, slow perhaps, but certain, in the lime and alum leavening agents employed in many of the homes on this continent.

No punishment is too severe for those manufacturers who place these poisonous alum and lime baking powders before the public with the assurance that they are pure and wholesome articles. In the belief of the truth of such statements such baking powders are largely used in the preparation of food, and in this way the poisonous ingredients are taken into the system without a suspicion of their presence. By and by come spells of head ache, distress in the stomach, loss of appetite, a fluttering of the heart; the child is seized with an apparently causeless cough. The coating of the stomach is destroyed perhaps; One of the vital organs is rendered almost useless; the kidneys are attacked with Bright's disease. The health of the child is irreparably broken down; the adult becomes a chronic invalid. These are the doings of the modern cheap baking powders that are composed of lime and alum, or that contain sulphuric or phosphatic acids.

In view of these facts, surely all housewives should exercise the care that is, we know, now exercised by some in the selection of a proper brand of baking powder. She who does not do so, whether the neglect is the result of ignorence or recklessness, cannot free herself from the responsibility for the health, perhaps life, thereby endangered. No housewife need be ignorant of the quality and composition of the article which she uses to leaven her bread, biscuit and cake. The official reports of the government chemists, who are certainly unprejudiced, have been published and show very clearly the quality and strength of all the baking powders in the market. The Royal Baking Powder, which is accessible at every hand, is reported absolutely free from lime, alum, phosphatic acid, or any injurious ingredient. It is further stated by the most eminent authorities on food hygeine that food leavened with it is more wholesome than when raised by any other method. Its use is therefore to be commended. It is to be regretted that no other baking powder, when there are so many in the market, some of which will find their way into use, is free from all of these substances. The official analysts assure us, however, that all except the Royal contain either lime or alum. The housekeeper who regards the health of her loved ones should not only order the Royal, but make personal examination to be sure that no other brand is sent in its place.

A Norman County jury decided that Nicholas Borner is crazy and he will be relegated to the shades of St. Peter. This is the shooting case that occurred near Ada on April 23rd, wherein one Nicholas Borner shot and instantly killed his son, a young man of about 20. The young man was at work in the field and went to the house for a drink. As he was approaching, the old man called to him from an upstairs window and ordered him not to approach, he replied that he guessed that he had a right to get a drink of water and came on and entered the house. He then started to go up to take the gun away from the old man who shot him in the abdomen before he could accomplish his purpose. The old man has had the reputation of being of a very quarrelsome nature and trouble had been feared. It looks to us more like a case of pure unadulterated cussedness than insanity, but, of course his neighbors ought to know more about it than we do.

STEENERSON & McMANUS.

It pays to insure but it is essential to know that your insurance is good. The Continental is one of the old tried companies, solid as the everlasting hills and your insurance there is as good as gold.

H. H. Dickmann arrived on Thursday last and took hold of business a the Land Office like an old stager. Everything was in shape to resume and the business will now be rushed rapidly.

Insure against cyclones. The Continental is the best company for your purpose. Elias Steenerson is sole agent for this time-tried and fire-tested company and invites his friends to call and see what he can do for them in insurance of all kinds.

The first auction sale of Berthiaume & Michaud occurred on Saturday last. The attendance was not too large but was very satisfactory for a commencement. B. & M. intend to make this a regular feature in the future and will include stock of all kinds as desired. If you wish to dispose of stock or furniture or in fact anything go and see the new auctioneer firm.

Lyman Loring was up from Moorhead last week on business before the Land Office. He says that the farmers in the Red River Valley have entered an era of prosperity as yet unknown and predicts big crops and big prices this fall. He says they will be able to make up for their losses of the past five years during the next two or three. We trust that he is right about this.

The Little Cryptogram, a neat little take off on Donnelly's Cryptogram is at hand. It is written by J. G. Pyle, associate editor of the Pioneer Press in which sheet it appeared originally. It proved so taking a hit that its author decided to publish it in pamphlet form and it may now be had of the Minnesota News Company, St. Paul, or of any newsdealer. Don't fail to see the Little Cryptogram.

Elias Steenerson has engaged desk room with Christianson Bros., and is now prepared to write insurance in the old reliable Continental Company. This company will insure against losses by fire lightning and cyclones. Mr. Steenerson is the only agent for this old reliable company in Polk and Norman counties and if any other should attempt to represent this company set him down as an impostor and do not deal. Call at Christianson Bros., and consult with Elias. [5-8]

YOUNG FOLKS' CORNER

LET US GO A-MAYING.

Oh, let us go a-Maying, yes, all of us together!
Oh, let us go a-Maying in the dear old woods!
The earth is now rejoicing, all clad in tender verdure,
Spring, joyous Spring, is in her happiest moods.

Wildwood flowers are blossoming, beautiful as ever;
Let us forth to gather them—driving back the years;
As in days of happy childhood, here within the wildwood,
We will laugh with nature, will lose our griefs and fears.

In sheltered, cunning places, hide and bloom the early flowers—
Bloodroot, sweet arbutus, and pale anemone,
Hepatica and violets, in all their fragrant beauty;
Away then to the woodlands—to fields and woodlands free!

And hark! the birds are singing! all Nature is so joyful;
Let us, too, be joyous, these bright and sunny days;
In wood and field, 'tis pleasant, with springtime birds and flowers,
Then hie we gaily thither, singing merry lays.

One thought alone of sadness, is mingled with our gladness;
Of those who went a-Maying with us long ago;
To-day, ah, yes, we miss—those dear and childish faces;
They'll never go a-Maying, here, again, we know.

But let us go a-Maying, for they are nearer to us,
As here we are a-Maying in these dear old woods.
Then let us go a-Maying, for all the earth is smiling;
Spring, joyous Spring, is in her happiest of moods.

A REGULAR BOY.

He was not at all particular
To keep the perpendicular
While walking, for he either skipped or jumped,
He stood upon his head awhile,
And when he went to bed awhile,
He dove among the pillows, which he thumped.

He never could keep still a bit;
The lookers-on thought ill of it;
He balanced on his ear the kitchen broom;
And did some neat trapezing,
Which was wonderfully pleasing,
On every peg in grandpa's harness room.

From absolute inanity,
The cat approached insanity
To see him slide the bannisters, so rash;
But once on that mahogany,
While trying to toboggan, he.
Upset his calculations with a crash!

And since that bad disaster
He has gone about in plaster—
Not of Paris, like a nice Italian toy;
But the kind the doctor uses,
When the bumps and cuts and bruises
Overcome a little regular live boy!

"Boys Not Admitted."

BY M. P. P.

This notice was posted at the entrance of an attractive tennis court, in a certain pleasant city of the big village order. Four well-dressed boys were rattening themselves against the railings, as disconsolate as so many peris at the gate of Eden.

"S'pose they stick that up outside of heaven," quoth one of the four. "Boys ain't wanted anywhere. Mother sent me out of the house, and Bridget sent me out of the yard, and the old 'cop' sent me and my ball off the sidewalk. I hate vacation. What's a fellow to do with it anyhow?"

A dapper young gentleman, about to enter the court, paused to make an improving comment upon what he had overheard.

"Rob, my friend," said he, "if boys would avoid being noisy and aggressive, or in the way of their elders, they would not be, as they are in a measure, ostracised."

"Better measure his own size—shrimp!" muttered one of Rob's chums. "Come on to Smith's billiard place, he'll let us in. Come, who cares?"

A young lady in Eden had heard all that passed without the gate. She turned quickly as the dapper young man approached her, cap in one hand, racket in the other.

"How could you go and preach to those little chaps?" was her unexpected greeting. "They want something to do, and what wonder!"

"Boys are a problem," was the reply. "Why doesn't somebody suggest keeping them in barrels till they are eighteen, feeding and educating them through the bung-hole? Not a bad idea."

"I would keep them at large till that age and then barrel them," retorted the girl. "'Not noisy or in the way,' dreadful little nonentities you'd make of boys. One would think that they had no right to be, that they should be born with moustaches. Give them room and fair play, and occupation, and boys are perfectly charming. Rob! Robbie Austin!" she called, running to the gate.

Just then the man in charge of the court was "shooing off" the boys, scolding Rob particularly because as he vacillated about going to Smith's, he dug his shoes into the fresh gravel of the walk. At the sound of Miss Mabel's bright tones the quartette turned. "Boys," she said, "will you do me a favor?"

"Yes, yes," in full chorus.

"Well"—collecting her wits, "there are lots of daisies out on the South road. I should like several large bunches with long stems, and some ferns. Don't go without asking your mothers, but if they say yes, and you take the flowers to my house, you can stop and play croquet as long as you like. You will be as good as pie, and won't dig up the turf, I know. Thank you, and good-bye."

"You are the queerest girl I ever saw; what were you saying to those boys?" demanded Rob's big sister.

"Asking a favor of them."

"They will doubtless do it for you," was the half derisive reply.

"Oh! no doubt. I've heard that the Persian word for gentleman means 'the brother of sisters.' I wonder what their word is for sister of brothers."

"Martyr," laughed Rob's sister.

Mabel had no brothers, but what had just passed had given shape to certain impressions that had till now floated as nebulæ in her busy brain. Between the shouts of "vantage," "forty love" and "duce set," she was planning plans for her boy neighbors that surprised herself.

Mabel was a girl of energy and sense as well as heart. The result of that planning amid the flying balls was the formation of a club. It was christened the "L. L. P. H. Club." This stood for "Life, Liberty and Pursuit of Happiness Club." Its founders naturally felt that the more of the alphabet they put into its name the better. Originally it was but a boys' club, but at the first meeting the boys magnanimously voted to admit girls to partial membership. It was officered by young men and young ladies and had an open list of vice-presidents. The club's object was to furnish occupations for otherwise idle hours, and it aimed to enlist in these occupations at least the sympathy of all ages. The meetings and pastimes of the club were various and elastic, but nothing could be done in the club's name that had not its sanction, and no one could remain a member who violated its very catholic rules as to good conduct and propriety. The coveted tennis court was put at the boy's disposal at certain hours. A large vacant lot that had been an unsightly dumping ground was reclaimed, and, by the members themselves, levelled and made fit for a ball and drill ground. The more musical boys got up a club-band under a fairly competent leader, and their performances added much, at least, to the liveliness of all outdoor festivities. Picnics of an informal and inexpensive sort became the fashion. Some expert young men feeling the set of the tide, volunteered to conduct the rash young sons of timid mothers through swimming and rowing lessons.

Long walks into the country were frequent, the new feature being that boys were in the majority of every party. Botany classes grew out of these rambles. The ramblers gathered wild flowers to deck the churches, and also to send to the New York flower missions. The girls had till now done everything in this line themselves, but now they stood conscientiously by and let the boys do the lion's share of the bunching, boxing and directing.

For rainy afternoons and evenings there were reading circles. The Rollo books and Robinson Crusoe were chosen by the smaller members, while the rest feasted on the Waverlys. To these readings, that met at different houses, all the members of the family, where the meeting took place, were invited to be present. Not a few surprises were experienced as to the amiability and cleverness discovered, for the first time, in younger brothers and older sisters.

The by-laws of the club enjoined upon its members a respect for Sunday, a discountenance of saloons and lawless amusements, and a kindliness towards the poor and towards animals. Boys were sent out "collecting" for the christian association, and their success showed what a mistake it had been not to enlist their services before. Many were the helpful and useful deeds, at home and through the city, done that summer by the boys who had been supposed incapable of anything but mischief. This usefulness was interspersed with so much fun, such general good times, that the boys and girls, too, most in dread of being thoroughly good, found it exceedingly entertaining to be good.

The long vacation flew by, Rob declared, like the lightning-express. As winter set in the club adapted its work and its play to the season, and from season to season the club lived on. The class-feud between the boys and the rest of creation had died away, and for two reasons: the boys had grown more "like folks," and their mere boyishness was regarded with more tolerance. An understanding was established between the different "sets," that is, the different ages, that left a lasting impress upon the social life of the place. Many a home and many a character to-day bears that pleasant impress.

Mabel, the founder of the club, is now the happy mother of merry, noisy boys. No lady fair was ever more adored than is she by those same boys, and by members, active and honorary, of the L. L. P. H. Club.

Jack-a-Dandy.

We children had been wishing for a tame crow ever since reading Dicken's charming description of his pet raven. There were no ravens where we lived; but Brother Tom said crows were just as good, and could be taught to talk too.

And one day, when we were playing "Here we go round the mulberry bush" in the woods near the house, little Ikey, our colored washerwoman's little boy, came along with a live crow in his hands.

Of course we were curious to see and examine the wonderful bird, and we crowded around Ikey, who seemed bewildered at being the object of so much attention.

"Where did you get him?" "What are you going to do with him?" "How much will you take for him?" asked Tom, Josie and Fred, in one breath.

But Ikey only grinned as he answered each in turn.

"Got him out of his nest in a post-oak. Dey was more of 'em, but I couldn't get ony dis one. I'm a-gwine to raise him if mammy'll let me. But I mout sell him if I get a good chance."

The opportunity was not to be lost, and in a very few moments Ikey was trudging homeward with a handful of coppers and two nickels—all the change we could raise among us, and we proudly carried our new-found treasure to the house.

"Mercy on us" cried mamma holding up her hands. "What on earth have you got there?"

"A crow," we told her. "And we're going to tame him and teach him to talk."

"Nonsense," said mamma. "You don't suppose I'll have a crow about the house, to kill the young chickens and eat up the eggs."

But we begged and pleaded till at last she gave her consent to let us keep it.

"It'll be a great torment," grumbled grandma. "It's a young bird, and you'll have to feed it like a baby."

But we did not mind the trouble. Indeed it was more of an amusement to us to feed our pet on scraps of meat and bits of bread. It opened its mouth so wide, and cried "Caw-aw-aw!" in such a satisfactory way.

Ikey had instructed us as to the manner of feeding.

"Jess you peek it on de head, an' it'l open it's mouth like it does for de ole birds," he explained.

And we found his advice was good.

We named our pet "Jack-a-Dandy," and he grew and throve so much that he was soon able to procure his own food, which consisted of crickets and other insects.

He was so tame that we could allow him perfect freedom, without any fear of his deserting us.

As he grew older he used frequently to fly into the top of a tall post oak near the front door, from which he used to circle around and around the house, then alight on the ground, and come hopping in the door, with a cheerful "caw! caw," as if asserting that there was no place like home.

"He's better than Dick Hardy's tame squirrel," Tom used to say, "for that has to be kept in a cage."

"And Bob Rooney's pet coon has to be fastened by a chain," said Josie. "But Jack-a-Dandy is as free as we are."

But mamma was not particularly pleased with Jack, and grandma continued to grumble over his misdemeanors, especially when he would rummage in her work basket, and carry off her silver thimble or bright steel bodkin.

"He's a troublesome creature," she would declare, "and if I had my way, he'd get his neck wrung."

But we kept a good watch on our favorite to keep him from getting into mischief.

We had used our best endeavors to teach him to talk, but he was a poor scholar, and could not even learn to pronounce his own name.

Still we loved him and continued to take his part against his enemies.

Papa had never said much, one way or the other, about Jack, though he was not very favorably disposed toward the race of crows. But when the spring planting was done, he took sides with the opposition.

"If your tame thief pulls up my corn, I'll shoot him," he declared.

"If he troubles the young chickens, he'll have to go," said mamma.

"If he spoils my garden I'll wring his neck," asserted grandma.

And, as may be imagined, we suffered considerable anxiety about our pet.

One day we were eating dinner, while Jack sat perched on the post-oak near the door.

Suddenly a terrible commotion occurred in the chicken-yard caused by a hawk which had swooped down and seized a young chicken.

The hen-mother, however, attacked the marauder so furiously that it was unable to carry off its prey immediately, and before papa could sieze his gun and reach the scene of the conflict, Jack-a-Dandy had flown to the hen's assistance.

He attacked the hawk so desperately that it dropped its prey, and a terrible combat ensued, in which Jack came off the victor. But not satisfied with this, he pursued the flying enemy a long distance, attacking him sharply when occasion offered.

You may be sure we had a great many praises and a sumptuous dinner for our favorite, on his return.

Hawks had for years been a great pest to poultry raising, and even mamma espoused Jack's cause after his successful battle with a rapacious foe.

And during Jack's life not another chicken was molested by the hawks, as he kept a vigilant watch, and attacked every one that dared to venture near the premises.

He even won the good will of papa, by keeping rigidly aloof from the corn-field; but grandma was still fearful lest he might do some damage to the garden.

She was very careful of her early vegetables, and the garden spot was paled in, to keep the chickens and rabbits from making depredations on the early lettuce, peas and cabbages.

But no fence would keep Jack out. Like the wind, he went "wherever he listeth."

Much to our relief, however, he did not offer to molest the vegetables, but did good service in picking up the insects and cut-worms, which are usually such a pest about a garden.

When he fell to devouring the squash-bugs, who were sapping the life of the "Boston Marrows," grandma's last prejudice was overcome, and she declared that Jack was worth in his weight in gold.

After that she never went to the garden without calling Jack, who would give an answering "caw!" and hop gravely after her, or perch on her shoulder with all the confidence of a privileged favorite.

As long as he lived, Jack continued to grow in the good opinion of the household. But alas! he could not live forever.

One day he sat drooping on his perch, and refused to be enticed away from it. He even declined the plump crickets Fred offered him in hopes of tempting his appetite.

The next morning he was found dead under his perch. He was mourned sincerely by the whole family, from grandma down, and we buried him with great ceremony under his favorite post-oak.

Tom sodded the grave, Josie planted a "mourning bride" over it, and Fred put up a shingle for a headstone, with this verse on it, which we all thought very beautiful:

"Handy-spandy, Jack-a-Dandy Loves plum-cake and sugar candy."

Gettysburg Monuments.

The Gettysburg Battlefield Memorial Association has decided to mark in a suitable way the right and left of the lines occupied by each corps of the Union army and each division of the corps. For this purpose fifty 12-pound howitzers, in the possession of the association, will be planted, and in each muzzle will be fixed an iron tablet, showing, in large raised letters, the corps and division occupying the ground. It has been determined to call Sedgwick avenue that part which extends from Wiegart's Lane to the base of Little Round Top, and which was occupied by the Sixth Corps. From the sound end of this over Little Round Top to the Devil's Den is to be named Sykes avenue, after the commander of the Fifth Corps. Each corps commander will be commemorated by an avenue bearing his name.

Work is going on actively in the erection of the New Jersey monuments. That of the 6th N. J. has been put in its place near the Devil's Den, and that of the 8th on the western edge of the Wheatfield. Those of the 7th and Clark's battery have been put at the Trustle Farm, a little north of the Peach Orchard. The marker of the 12th N. J. has been placed at the Bliss Building, which was the most advanced position held by the regiment.

The Vermont State monument, which is 51 feet high and modeled after the Nelson monument in Trafalgar Square, London, is one of the striking features of the battlefield. The Michigan Cavalry Brigade monument is about 50 feet high and surmounted by a statue of a cavalryman. The cap shows four horses' heads in full relief. The 83d N. Y. monument is a shaft 51 feet high, surmounted by an immense bronze eagle.

Paper Bottles.

One of the most interesting of the many uses to which paper has been put is the manufacture of paper bottles.

We have long had paper boxes, barrels, and car wheels, and more recently paper pails, wash basins, and other vessels; but now comes a further evolution of paper in the shape of paper bottles, which are already quite extensively used for containing such substances as ink, bluing, shoe dressing, glue, etc., and they would seem to be equally well adapted for containing a large variety of articles.

They are made by rolling glued sheets of paper into long cylinders, which are then cut into suitable lengths, tops and bottoms are fitted in, the inside coated with a waterproof compound, and all this done by machinery almost as quickly as one can count.

They are cheaper and lighter than glass, unbreakable, and consequently very popular with consumers, while the fact that they require no packing material and are clean, handy and economical, commends them to manufacturers. Unlike glass, they can be manufactured and shipped at all seasons, and being made by machinery, the supply is independent of labor troubles, which are additional advantages to manufacturers who use bottles.

A Brave Little Woman.

Miss Mollie Green is the heroine in a thrilling scene in Parry county, Tenn. Miss Mollie is an attractive young lady of 18, who teaches school on Cypress Creek. Her father, Robert Green, lives across the Tennessee river, in Hickman county. The little log school house was quiet, and the children busy with their lessons, when a shaggy dog, foaming at the mouth, snapping and biting, dashed in at the door and made toward one of the children. The brave little woman thought only of the children in her care, sprang between them and the intruder, and told them it was a mad dog. She kicked at it. Her skirts protecting her, and by the aid of a heavy rule kept it at bay until all the children had fled. The infuriated animal repeatedly sprang at her throat, but she was agile and resolutely held her ground. When all the little ones were gone she desperately fought off the dog until she reached the door, which she pulled to after her and fell fainting outside. The children in the meantime ran to the nearest house, an eighth of a mile distant, and gave the alarm. Two men soon came and killed the dog, which had been terrorizing the neighborhood for two days. The grateful parents of the children took up a subscription and gave the young woman a fine saddle horse. Her clothes were literally torn to ribbons during her severe encounter.

Quite Candid.

Tramp—"I may as well be frank about the matter. Will you please give me 15 cents to buy a drink of whisky?"

Old Gentleman—"Can't you buy a drink of whisky for less than 15 cents?"

"Yes, I can buy it for 10, and in some places as low as 5; but Great Scott! what kind of stuff is it?"—Texas Siftings.

The Rising Sun.

Old Wimple (solemnly)—Young man, to attain success in this world we must be up and doing. Do you ever see the sun rise?

Young Man—Yes, sir, occasionally.

"When?"

"On my way home."—Texas Siftings.

THE HOMELESS.

BY H. SUTTON FRIZELLE.

Wretched and lone ones with naked feet,
Those who have drunk of Poverty's lees,
Starving and cold in the wind-swept street.

Under the drive of the blinding sleet;
O, the hard heart that never pities
Wretched and lone ones with naked feet!

Passing bright homes that glow with the heat,
While they perish of cold by degrees—
Starving and cold in the wind-swept street.

Give to them shelter, comfort and meat;
While lone hearts bereft are sighing,
While the dreary hours go!

Cover the limbs all bare to the breeze—
Wretched and lone ones with naked feet.

Tell them they're brothers; from the rain-beat
Bring them in—poor ones!—no more to freeze
Starving and cold in the rain-swept street.

Hark to the words of the Christ-king sweet,
"Me ye comfort when take ye in these
Wretched and lone ones with naked feet,
Starving and cold in the wind-swept street."

TRIFLES.

BY EVE DEST.

Just some little words of love
Spoken tenderly and low—
Just one wayward curl to tell
Which way the sweet winds blow,
Just a clasp of dainty fingers,
While the yellow moonshine lingers—
While the happy seconds go!

Just the simple marriage vows,
Which from sweet lips flattering flow;
Just a golden circlet placed
Upon a hand of snow.
Just the breath of orange flowers
Burdening the twilight hours
While the joyous moments go!

Just a heart-beat hushed and still—
Tides have ebbed that cannot flow;
Just two waxen eyelids pressed
Upon the orbs below;
Just two pale hands folded, lying,
Just one kiss and all is done—
Life is full of gloom and woe;
Just a little mossy grave
Where the daises grow;
Just each moment's smiles and tears
'Tis that fill the passing years,
While the endless ages go!

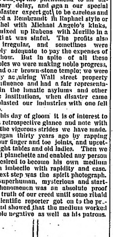
HISTORY OF SPOOKS.

The Meanness of the Inhabitants of the Spirit World.

Henry Guy Carleton in New York World.

I am now convinced that we spiritualists are having an exceedingly hard row to hoe. The unbelievers, with devilish ingenuity and great malice, have succeeded in crowding us from the celestial hosts by landing our principal means of communication in the cooler. We were having a blessed and rejoiceful time all to ourselves when the painful blow fell. We had corralled the Old Masters, and our Chromo Trust, in full running order, was capable of grinding out jewels of psychic art as fast as our hired assistants could paint them. To be sure, we had some trifling drawbacks. Sometimes our assistants would be lazy or get drunk, which would subject the phenomena to an unnecessary delay, and again our special Old Master expert got to be careless and painted a Rembrandt in Raphael style or a Raphael with Michael Angelo's kinks, and mixed up Rubens with Murillo in a way that was sinful. The profits also were irregular, and sometimes were scarcely adequate to pay the expenses of the show. But in spite of all these obstables we were making noble progress. We had our brown-stone temple; we were rapidly acquiring Wall street property and influence and had a fair representation in the lunatic asylums and other public institutions, when disaster came and blasted our industries with one fell swoop.

In this day of gloom it is of interest to take a retrospective glance and note with pride the vigorous strides we have made. We began thirty years ago by rapping with our finger and toe joints, and upsetting light tables and old ladies. Then we started planchette and enabled any person who desired to become his own medium and an imbecile with rapidity and ease. Our next step was the spirit photograph. This superhuman, mysterious and startling phenomenon was an absolute proof of the truth of our creed until some ribald and scientific reporter got on to the process and showed that the medium worked double negative as well as his patrons.



SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPHS.

We then introduced slate-writing, which, unfortunately, was exposed almost as soon as born, and then the spirits favored us with materializations of spirit forms and flowers.

This last manifestation was the most beautiful evidence of the truth of our assertions, and was utterly unanswerable and inexplicable by any scientist or unbeliever until one lamentable night when an uproarous gang of reporters and investigators artfully gained access to a seance, and at a concerted signal, while a dozen spirits were favoring us with their presence, squirted ink on the ghostly visitants, grabbed the medium by the hind leg, laid violent hold of the spirit hands, turned up the light and discovered the medium's entire family, from her grandmother down, in night-gowns, hysterics and durance vile.

These were deadly blows to the cause, but no creed so founded upon Truth as ours can be crushed by the scoffer.

We rose again—and this time with grandeur and confidence. A princess of the royal house of Bavaria, wedded to a distinguished hero, became the chosen earthly vicar of Mediæval Art and Ancient Philosophy.

Through her Cicero, St. Peter, St. Anthony of Padua, the Angel Gabriel and other grandees of the spirit world wrote to us giving wisdom and advice of immense value, particularly when counseling us to give our real estate and chattels to the cause.

Obedient to her power, Rembrandt, Raphael, Michael Angelo, Rubens and other princes of art threw their whole souls into marvellous portraits worth half a dollar per square foot.

Science was baffled. What human power could summon these dead potentates from the dark and silent tomb to the achievement of such miracles? To be sure, Rembrandt had forgotten the art of drawing, and Raphael's best productions were less striking and more gaudy than a cigarette chromo, but for paintings wrought on Sixth avenue canvas in Third avenue paints with Bowery brushes, and not as a work of art, but as a proof of immortality, they answered the purpose. Besides, it could not be expected that Michael Angelo, who was high-priced even in the dark ages, would give much more than a rough sketch for a five-dollar bill, which was all that was generally contributed.

The beautiful system adopted by the gifted medium was one calculated to place these phenomena beyond power of explanation. Only orthodox believers were admitted to see the pictures "come." It is not etiquette for us Spiritualists either to suspect fraud or watch for it, and when we watch a blank canvass until we fall asleep and are suddenly awakened to see it, or one just like it, glowing with fresh paint; or we are suddenly summoned from the room and it has been transformed before we can get back; or when it is held over our head and there swapped for another; we must refuse to have any doubts or to admit the possibility of fraud, or to even suspect that we have simply been imposed upon by a designing fat woman, for that would be a lack of faith and an insult to the cause, which no true Spiritualist would countenance.

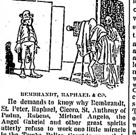
It is perfectly impossible for us to accede to the vulgar demands made upon us by the infidel.

He demands to sit in the materializing cabinet or to be allowed to construct one himself and buck and gag the medium in it himself.

He demands to be allowed to furnish a marked canvas for Raphael to work on, and will give that great artist a month to paint it through any medium, if the medium be locked in a room known to be free from brushes, paints and oils and shall have been thoroughly searched before entering.

He demands to know why the spirits invariably select swindlers and immoral outcasts for their interlocutors and why, if they are really anxious to have the truth known, they refuse to work the phenomena except in presence of persons unable to detect fraud or who refuse to try to detect fraud, and only under conditions which admit it.

He demands to be favored by some spirit with an exact account of his transactions with a friend who is dead—transactions only known to that friend and himself.



REMBRANDT, RAPHAEL & CO.

He demands to know why Rembrandt, St. Peter, Raphael, Cicero, St. Anthony of Padua, Rubens, Michael Angelo, the Angel Gabriel and other great spirits utterly refuse to work one little miracle in the Tombs Police Court to save their great priestess from the penitentiary for fraud. Earthly governments protect their ministers. Are the governments of spirit-land so cowardly and impotent that they desert their faithful servant in the hour of trial? One miracle in that court room could convert the whole world and better establish Spiritualism than a whole row of brown-stone temples.

To these impudent and blasphemous demands we have not a word to say. What could we say? We can only reply that we ourselves have investigated with our eyes closed and have seen nothing. We are satisfied. We pay our money and we get what we think is the worth of it in spookery, and that is enough.

But one sad fact is apparent. We shall have to get another racket. Materializing and this picture business have been struck by a cyclone. Rembrandt, Raphael & Co. might go into the photograph business and take original portraits, touched up in oil, but I doubt if the enterprise would pay. Cicero and St. Peter might start a night school to teach oratory and boxing, roller-skating and rhetoric, but I am not sure that they could earn enough to pay rent. The whole snap seems to be giving out. The police are on to us, and I fear me greatly we will have to take in our sign.

An Ancient Underground Chapel.

An interesting discovery has been made in an old Spanish mine of the property of the Corralitos cattle and mining company, on the Casa Grande river in northern Chihuahua, an immense estate belonging to El Paso and New York parties. The mine is called the San Pedro, and there is in it an old incline going into the mountain at an angle of forty-five degrees, and evidently following the richest ore streak in a zig zag manner. At the end of this incline a subterranean chamber was found, which had been fashioned evidently with great labor and trouble into a regular Catholic chapel. The chamber is some thirty feet high. Serts have been cut from the solid rock running all around the chapel, and so have an altar and a pulpit. The whole was found neatly whitewashed, and presented a peculiar and wierd aspect. The ancient chapel could be used at a moment's notice as a place of worship.

The whole country adjacent to the Casa Grande and Santa Maria rivers is full of objects of interest to the archeologist and naturalist. Prehistoric ruins are found everywhere, many of them clearly traceable to the Aztecs, but others evidently ante-date any authentic records of history. A richer field of exploration and investigation cannot be found anywhere in North America.—Globe-Democrat.

He Silenced the Judge.

Pettigrew of South Carolina, the great lawyer and unionist, was once practicing before a judge who was a great stickler for etiquette. When one hot July day Pettigrew came into the court room in a black coat and yellow nankeen trousers the judge took him sternly to task, asking him whether he did not know that the rules of that court required its counselors to appear in 'black coat and trousers.' 'Well, your honor,' said Pettigrew innocently, 'I submit that I am within the rule, for I have on a black coat and trousers.' 'But they're not black trousers,' insisted the judge, 'black coat and trousers means that both must be black.' 'Then,' said Pettigrew, 'I call your honor's attention to the fact that the sheriff of this court is in contempt of its rules, for they require him to attend upon its sessions in a cocked hat and sword, and while his hat seems to be cocked, his sword certainly is not.' The judge said no more about the trousers.—Philadelphia Record.

Grant's Birthplace.

The birthplace of General Grant, in the village of Point Pleasant, Ohio, is still in good repair, and used as a dwelling. With no accident it will last a century yet. The Cincinnati centennial managers have offered a big sum for the old home, and the Columbus centennial managers have offered $1,000 for its rent, with a guarantee that they will replace it unhurt upon its foundations when the centennial is over. It is not, however, on the market.

The Ruling Passion.

There is a story told of a Boston attorney who, on the eve of being married, found it impossible to reach the appointed place, and telegraphed for a "stay of proceedings," the legal phraseology of the dispatch proving that at even at such an eventful time the disciple of Blackstone and Coke could not shake off the verbal fetters of the law.—Boston Budget.

A Competent Nurse.

Mistress (to applicant)—Yes, I have advertised for a nurse. Are you competent to take care of young children?

Applicant—Oh, yis, mum.

Mistress—You never give them paregoric to quiet them?

Applicant—Niver, mum. I allers prefers laudanum.—New York Sun.

WHEN YOU ARE SAD.

When you are sad, I ask no more
The lavished rights I claimed before
When sunrise glittered on the seas,
And dancing to the wooing breeze,
The laughing ripples kissed the shore.

The morning glow of love is o'er;
Oh, rosy dreams we dreamt of yore!
I do but ask the least of these,
When you are sad.

Let the fresh darling you adore,
With joy's light footstep cross the floor;
But hear the last of all my pleas,
And shut for all but me the door,
When you are sad.
—All the Year Round.

A YARN FROM THE SEA.

Hartford Times.

We were well into the Gulf of Bengal, bound for Madras, when one morning, just as night was fading into dawn, I thought I heard a voice hailing us from the the surface of the sea. There are sea birds which cry out almost like human beings, and although I was startled by the hail, I dismissed it after a few seconds as the cry of a bird. Scarcely had I done so when it came again, and this time I knew it was the voice of a woman. There was no need to hail the mate on watch, for he had heard the cry as well. We were jogging along under easy sail, and he seized the glass and ran up to the forerigging. There was a sort of steam rising from the water, but the mate had not climbed thirty feet when he came down again, and in one breath ordered the ship into the wind, the captain and the boat lowered. We of the watch had no doubt that the ship had been hailed by castaways, but the boat was down before any of us made out a lone woman in a sort of canoe craft about two cables length away on our port bow. She had neither paddle nor oar, and her craft was driving with the wind and sea, while she sat cowering in the stern. Our boat was soon alongside of her craft, and woman and canoe were soon aboard of the Admiral Nelson. The watch below had turned up, and everybody was on deck to see what was going on. The woman was white, and, as we soon ascertained, American. I say white, but bronze would be the better term, for it was evident that she had long been exposed to tropical weather. She was of medium size, regular features and about forty years of age, and at one time had been good looking.

"Who is the captain?" she snapped, as she reached the deck.

"Here ma'am," replied our old man, as he stepped forward.

"I want to talk to you in your cabin," she continued, her fingers working nervously and her eyes snapping fire.

They had not been gone a quarter of an hour when both reappeared on deck. I was at the wheel, and therefore heard all that was said. It appeared that the woman, whose name was Mrs. Thomas, owned and sailed a trading schooner, which had been left her at her husband's death. It was a strange vocation for a woman, but it seemed she liked it, and also had a good business head on her. She had a crew of six, her mate being an Englishman and the others Lascars, and she had been sailing between nearly all the towns on the Gulf.

Three days before we picked her up her schooner had left Sumatra bound for the Indian coast. The crew seemed to be perfectly quiet and content, but the mate, they had suddenly laid violent hands on her and sent her adrift without water, food or a paddle. The intention was to run away with the schooner and cargo and sell them, and this plan might have been carried out but for her rescue.

She was the spunkiest little woman I ever saw. She was so mad she couldn't stand still for three seconds at a time. What she wanted was for our ship to go in pursuit. Her schooner was armed with two brass six pounders, while we had four twelves, and she expressed her entire willingness to see her craft sent to the bottom before the mutinous crew should benefit by their acts. Captain Wheeler was pretty well along in years, very careful on the question of insurance, and his mind was not made up until after breakfast. Then he decided to luff up towards the Andaman Islands in search of the schooner, and he almost promised to give her a taste of our metal if she should be sighted and would not surrender.

The little woman managed to eat a dozen mouthfuls of breakfast and then returned to the deck to almost assume control. She ordered a man aloft, bossed the job of casting loose the guns and getting up powder and shot, and every ten minutes she was hailing the lookout to know if anything was in sight. Luck was in her favor. While we had been jogging along all night the schooner, being farther to the east, had been almost becalmed. We raised her almost dead ahead about noon, and as luck would have it again we had plenty of wind, while she had none until the vessels were not two miles apart. The schooner could have no suspicion that the woman was aboard of us, and we flew a signal that we wanted to speak to her. She at once lay to, and as we ran down to her I saw Mrs. Thomas grit her teeth, clench her hands, and show other evidences of her feelings. She had borrowed the mate's six shooter, donned a hat and coat to disguise herself, and as we lay about a cable's length away no eye could have made out her sex. "Schooner ahoy!" called our captain.

"Aye, aye, sir! This is the Nancy Lee, bound from Sumatra to the mainland."

"Are you the captain?"

"No, sir, he's very sick in his berth."

"Run out those guns!" whispered the old man to us, and down went the port of shutters and out went the big barkers, and such of the crew as were not at the guns rested their muskets along the rail.

"I've got your captain here, and she'll be put aboard of you!" shouted our captain. "If you attempt any resistance I'll sink you!"

The Englishman ordered his crew to man one of the guns, but they refused to obey, every man of them skulling forward and disappearing down the hatch. The fellow left the deck long enough to arm himself with a cutlass, and as we lowered a boat he called out that he would split the head of the first man who attempted to board the schooner.

Our first mate, the boatswain, and two of us foremast hands went in the boat with Mrs. Thomas, and as we hooked to the schooner's chains the boatswain pulled a revolver and climbed over in the bows. The mutineer retreated aft, and then we all boarded. The woman had not spoken a word since leaving the ship. She was as pale as death, and her eyes glared like a tiger's. As she dropped from the rail to the deck she cocked the weapon in her hand, walked aft and right up to the mate, and as he flourished his cutlass and commanded her to keep off, she shot him dead in his tracks.

"It's the law of the sea," she quietly remarked as she turned to us. "Now to rout out those Lascars."

"But you won't kill them," said our mate.

"No, not quite was her grim answer, as she handed him the smoking revolver.

Casting a look at the dead mutineer, to be sure that he was dead, she went forward, took a belaying pin out of the port rail, and approaching the hatch she called down:

"On deck here, every man of you, and be quick about it!"

They came up one after another, and as each man touched the deck she gave him a crack over the head which made him see stars. They went down on their knees and begged for their lives, and after knocking them about in a liberal way she finally agreed to extend pardon. Under her direction the mate's body was searched, and as she anticipated, all the money aboard the schooner was found. She then ordered the body flung overboard, and as it touched the water one of the biggest white sharks I ever saw seized it and bit it in half. While the Lascars were cleaning the deck the little woman ran down into her cabin and brought up a dozen bottles of wine, six boxes of cigars and a lot of dried fruits for us to take back to the ship. Then she gave each of us a shake of the hand, and as we entered the yawl, she sprang upon the port rail, held fast to the main shrouds with one hand and shouted to our captain:

"Good bye and God bless you, Captain Wheeler. I've got my craft back, thanks to you, and I'll keep my eyes open after this!"

Then she jumped down and went to the wheel and gave orders to get the schooner on her course, and in a couple of hours the craft was lost sight of behind one of the islands as it made for the inside of the route. Two years latter I saw the woman at Singapore, and she still owned the schooner, and was said to have a comfortable fortune in bank. A year later I heard that she had sold her schooner, purchased a brig, and putting in a cargo on her own account, had sailed for home.

The Woman Who Was Afraid

A man was once walking along one road and a woman along another. The roads finally united, and man and woman, reaching the junction at the same time, walked on from there together. The man was carrying a large iron kettle on his back, in one hand he held by the legs a live chicken, in the other a cane, and he was leading a goat. Just as they were coming to a deep, dark ravine the woman said to the man: "I'm afraid to go through that ravine with you; it is a lonely place, and you might overpower me and kiss me by force." "If you were afraid of that," said the man, "you shouldn't have walked with me at all. How can I possibly overpower you and kiss you by force when I have this great iron kettle on my back, a cane in one hand, a live chicken in the other, and am leading this goat? I might as well be tied hand and foot!" "Yes," replied the woman, "but if you should stick your cane in the ground and tie the goat to it, and turn the kettle bottom side up and put the chicken into it, then you might wickedly kiss me in spite of my resistance." "Success to my ingenuity, Oh, woman!" said the rejoicing man to himself. "I should never have thought of such expedients." And when they came to the ravine he stuck his cane in the ground and tied the goat to it, gave the chicken to the woman, saying, "Hold it while I cut some grass for the goat, and then lowering the kettle from his shoulders, imprisoned the chicken under it, and wickedly kissed the woman, as she was afraid he would!—Notes and Queries.

What a Whang Really Is.

In the wisdom of the ages there has come to be something in a name. A good housewife in a suburb of Lewiston, whose reputation is of thrift, and whose wits are as keen as the razor's edge, issued cards not long ago, it is said, for an afternoon party at her house, terming it a "whang." A "whang" is an unknown term in that vicinity, although they had heard it employed in a metaphoric, or symbolic, or hyperbolic sense many times to the country jubilee of various kinds. The good ladies who were summoned didn't know what to do, or how to dress, but they went just the same, full of curiosity, and in their most stunning toilets. The hour was early—namely, 1 p. m.—when the larger part of them started. Bets were even against the field that it was a quilting bee, one to three that it was a rug bee, and even against the field that it was just an ordinary party. When they got there, they found the house in disorder and everybody scrubbing for dear life. A "whang" is a housecleaning party, and some of the ladies are sorry that they didn't dress accordingly.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Clever Thieves in Mexico

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

Points could probably be given to the slickest of London pickpockets by his ragged, miserable-looking confrere of Mexico. At fairs, in churches, at the markets, wherever throngs do congregate, it is most prudent to divest one's self of watch, eyeglasses, etc., and, in the case of ladies, of floating ends of ribbon or bows which may readily be detached. The wife of a prominent Mexican general, while kneeling at mass not long ago, had the pocket cut from her dress so skillfully that she had not the faintest sense of it, losing a considerable quantity of money and two diamond rings. A pretty little American bride keeping house there was particularly unfortunate. Every time she went to market, she would surely be caught in a crowd of the lower orders, who would close in around her in such a fashion as to press her arms down to her sides, and, when she was released, she would find her handbag open and empty. No violence was employed; it was apparently only one of the jams natural to such places.

During the deadlock in Congress, Representative Taulbee, of Kentucky, was the victim of a practical joke which gave him a severe cold. One night he fell asleep in the House, in a big chair near a window. Some wicked colleagues found him there, took off one of his shoes and placed his bare foot on the window sill. A few hours afterward he awoke, and found his shoe hanging on a gas bracket at the other side of the chamber, while he had caught cold through the exposed foot.

A will contest in progress at Burlington, Vt., wherein a grand nephew seeks to set aside the testament of Ephraim Griswold, recalls the murder of the later's wife, twenty-three years ago. The story is that Mrs. Griswold, who had made a small fortune as a cook for the California miners during the gold excitement, was killed by a man named Ward, at the instigation of her adopted daughter's husband. Ward was finally hanged for the crime, and the adopted daughter and her husband died while languishing in prison.

Grottkau, the notorious socialist of Milwaukee, will have to serve a year in the house of correction for inciting riot. Grottkau was sentenced May 7, 1887, but his case was appealed and delayed in the courts so that he was not committed until April 5. Grottkau's attorneys held that his term of punishment commenced on the day of his sentence and not on the day of his commitment, but Commissioner Ryan held otherwise.

It is reported from Boston that Harry Phillips, John L. Sullivan's manager, had seized the proceeds of the big fellow's benefit in that city. This report aroused new interest in the stories that have been current in reference to Philips's past life. Detective Haynor of New York who traveled with Philips in Europe under the name of Beckwith, says Philips is a burglar and was one of the men who planned the robbery of the Grand Trunk vault at Montreal. Philips' confederates were arrested for their complicity in the robbery and Haynor is going to Montreal to testify against two of them. The detective says he has a plan by which he hopes yet to secure the extradition of Philips for his share in planning the Grand Trunk robbery.

Nuggets of Foreign News.

The Vatican journals note that Catholic publications in America unanimously approve the papal rescript.

Advices from the island of Tahiti say that a party of natives surprised a French patrol and killed an officer of marines and two sailors.

Archbishop Corrigan has failed to obtain from the Pope a condemnation of Henry George's works, which have now been formally delivered at the Vatican for judgment.

Dr. Gurdertz, of Berlin, the royal librarian, had discovered a manuscript record of the visit of John Dewitt to London in 1596, together wity drawings of the theaters of the time of Shakespeare. Herr Muller of Bremen will publish the record, which will be a literary sensation.

The Brazilian legation has received information from Roderigo Silve, minister of foreign affairs, that the Brazilian parliament has aproved the government bill completely abolishing slavery, and that it was sanctioned by the regent on the 13th inst. The minister states also that this action met with extraordinary manifestations of rejoicing.

The Record of Casualties.

The great dam at Rock Island gave way on the 14th inst., and placed 200 or 300 families in great danger. There was, however, no loss of life.

A special train on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad containing 110 Baptists enroute from Minneapolis, Minn., to Washington, collided with a freight train pulling in on a siding, near Mount Vernon, Ohio. The passengers were shaken up severely, but none seriously injured. Ex-Gov. Pillsbury of Minnesota was on board.

A cyclone of tremendous force whirled over a portion of northern Indiana. At Winslow siding, on the Nickle Plate railroad, a train of sixteen freight cars was lifted from the wheels and distributed in piecemeal across the surrounding prairies. Information has been received that at Wanatah a number of houses were unroofed and much timber in the country uprooted.

A Northern Pacific freight train of twenty-five cars was wrecked near Superior, Wisconsin, recently. The engine and five freight cars were thrown in the ditch and badly demolished. A car of wheat was destroyed and several thousand feet of lumber piled into the ditches. The engineer and fireman escaped death by jumping from the cab. A misplaced switch was the cause of the accident.

Emma Seibert, a young girl employed in the Mankato fiberware works, was very seriously injured at Mankato, Minn. Her dress became entangled in some cog-wheels and she was drawn into the machinery. Her injuries were mostly internal and their full extent is only to be conjectured, not having been fully ascertained by the physicians.

A terrific explosion occurred at the powder house at the Prattsville brownstone quarry near Stockton, New Jersey. One man was killed; several others were injured, a number of houses were wrecked and considerable property was destroyed. The report was heard 20 miles away. Three hundred kegs of powder exploded. The explosion was caused by workmen dropping a keg of powder.

General News Items.

Work is about to be commenced on Minnesota's second state prison, at St. Cloud.

The Northern Pacific railroad company has voluntarely reduced its passenger rates from four to three cents a mile.

The Methodist conference in session at New York, voted that hereafter it shall require a two-thirds vote to constitute an election of bishop.

The managers of the Northwestern roads met in Chicago and agreed to advance rates between Chicago & St. Paul from 20 to 35 per cent. taking effect June 4.

There are now five bad breaks in Sny levee, and the whole of the Sny bottoms, reaching from opposite Louisiana, Mo., to Hannibal, Mo., is inundated. The flood covers an area 400 miles long and five miles wide.

The gap in the Sny levee, through which the whole Missisippi is now pouring, has widened almost 300 yards. The Sny basin contains 120,000 acres of fine farming land and it is estimated that fully 75,000 will be inundated. Of the submerged lands 50,000 acres are in crops and the majority in wheat.

The seventh annual report of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern road for the year ending Dec. 31, 1887, has just appeared. The total length of track at present is 1,046 miles. The gross earnings of the company, including all leased roads and branches, is $3,005,962.73. The operating expenses, including taxes, insurance, and rental, were $2,225,905.77. Leaving net earnings, over operating expenses, $780,056.96. The earnings of the railroad for 1887 were about $75,000 more than for for 1886. This is entirely due to the leased lines, and the earnings having increased over $200,000, while the earnings of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern proper decreased $130,000 during the year. The operation of the interstate commerce law has injured the property, as it debars it from participating in any business, on which rates are too low to be applied on local business—the main line earnings having fallen off $175,000 in the last nine months of the year from this cause.

The completion of the auditorium in time for the national Republican convention, June 19, is now only a question of carpenter work. The roof over the auditorium portion is in place, the flooring is all laid, all of the big galleries are completed, and work is now in progress on the smaller galleries.

The Labor Conclaves.

The Union State party met at Cincinnati. John Seitz of Ohio occupied the chair. Ex-Congressman Weller of Iowa tried to pass a resolution against fusion with the Republican or Democratic party, but failed. The committee on resolutions reported the following:

Land—While we believe that a proper solution of the financial system will greatly relieve those now in danger of losing their homes by mortgage foreclosure and enable all industrious persons to secure homes, we oppose land monopoly in every form, demand the forfeiture of unearned grants and the limitation of land ownership. We believe the earth was made for the people and not to enable an idle aristocracy to subsist through rents upon the toil of the industrious; that corners in land are as bad as corners in food, and that those who are not residents or citizens should not be allowed to own land in the United States. Homesteads should be exempt to a limited extent from execution or taxation.

Transportation—Means of communication and transportation should be owned by the people, as is the United States postal system.

Money—Full legal tender should be issued directly to the people, without the intervention of banks, or loaned to citizens upon land security at a low rate of interest. Postal savings banks should be established. We should have free coinage of silver. We demand the immediate applications of all idle money in the United States treasury to the payment of the bonded debt, and condemn the further issue of interest-bearing bonds.

Labor—Arbitration should take the place of strikes and other injurious methods of settling labor disputes. The letting of convict labor to contractors should be prohibited; the contract system be abolished in public works; hours of labor in industrial establishments be reduced commensurate with increased production by labor-saving machinery; employes be protected from bodily injury; equal pay given for equal work for both sexes, and labor, agricultural and co-operative associations be fostered and encouraged by law.

Pensions—We demand the passage of a service pension bill to every honorably discharged soldier and sailor of the United States.

The platform also favors an income tax and woman sufferage, and denounces the Democratic and Republican parties for creating and perpetuating usury, monopoly and trusts.

The first plank, which was adopted, practically excludes the United Labor party from joining the Union Labor. At the afternoon session Dr. McGlynn reported the failure of the effort to unite the two conventions. He said the ultimatum of the United Labor party had been rejected by the Union Labor committee on platform and the joint committee had dissolved.

The entire platform was finally adopted. The roll was called for nominations for president of the United States. Arkansas nominated State Senator A. J. Streeter of Illinois, president of the Farmers' alliance. The Colorado delegation named Gen. Weaver of Iowa, but a peremptory letter of refusal from him was presented. Streeter's nomination was made unanimous. Charles E. Cunningham of Arkansas was nominated for the vice presidency. He is a mechanic sixty-five years of age.

FROM GREAT FALLS.

The Last Spike Driven in the Great Falls & Missouri River Railroad—Ceremonies Attending It.

GREAT FALLS, Mont., Special Telegram, May 18.—This afternoon the last spike was driven in the Great Falls & Missouri River railroad, as the new track to the works of the Montana Smelting company are called. Locally this road is in the Manitoba system and will be used for the ore, coal and bullion traffic collected by the reduction works. The tracks begin here near the railroad bridge and follow the west side of the Missouri. It runs near the Black Eagle falls and other great cataracts of the Missouri. The last spike was driven by Paris Gibson in presence of Messrs. McLay, Collins and other leading citizens. General Manager Child entertained the party. A party of Neihart miners have been arriving with silver ore, which will be stored to await the opening of the reduction works. The maps, illustrations and descriptive matter regarding Great Falls in last Sunday's PIONEER PRESS excite much interest and elicit general admiration. Ex-Mayor Sullivan of Fort Benton arrived, on his way to the Republican territorial convention. Burleigh of Helena is the choice for delegate to the Chicago convention of the North Mautana delegations.

After Peruvian Richness.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, May 17.—A very general subject of conversation in financial circles to-day was a report that the Peruvian bondholders, of which ex-Mayor Grace and his brothers are the chief operators, had accomplished an arrangement by which they were to receive payment from the Chilian government for the claims which they had against it for certain valuable property contained in deposits of nitrate which were recently ceded by Peru to Chili by a treaty of peace. The arrangement involves the payment of several million dollars to the bondholders, the control of the valuable Peruvian guano beds, and the further vast wealth that is likely to be derived from the building of railroads in Peru and subsequent development of its incalculably rich mineral resources. It has been learned from an absolutely authoritative source that a number of prominent American business men are also interested in the scheme, and that the business is an Anglo-American affair. The completion of the unfinished railroads in Peru will make them traverse one of the richest mineral sections of the world.

Wants to Be Vindicated.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, May 17.—Col. F. D. Grant has offered to pay Gen. Adam Badeau his claim for $10,000 in full, provided he would drop all litigation in the matter, but the offer was refused. Badeau did not take the money because he said that he wanted "to be vindicated." Those who claim to be familiar with the matter say that Gen. Badeau could have had the money, but refused, against the advice of his former counsel, S. G. Clark, who, in consequence of his client's refusal, gave up the case.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Senate and House.

SENATE.

Senator Edmunds reported favorably the house bill fixing a term of the United States district court at Duluth. The bill was amended, however, by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the senate bill, which reads as follows:

That hereafter and until otherwise provided by law there shall be held annually on the second Monday in September a term of court in the city of Duluth in said district, said term to be in addition to the terms now required to be held at the cities of St. Paul and Winona in said district, and a grand and petit jury may be summoned to serve at said term of court hereby established.

This cuts out the provision for separate terms of district and circuit court at each of these places, and makes no change in the time of holding court at Winona or St. Paul, as did the house bill.

Senator Sabin offered in the senate today an amendment to the bill to encourage the schools which have been giving some attention to Indian education in the West and to advance the cause of education among the Indians.

In the senate Mr. Spooner presented a petition from citizens of Stockholm, Wis., asking an appropriation of $15,000 for the repair of the pier at that place. It is represented that the water in the lake was higher than ever this spring and that the pier was partly carried away by the wind and ice. The money is needed this year to repair it if it is not to be swept entirely away.

The senate in secret session decided not to open the doors when the fishery treaty is under consideration, nor to admit even official reporters. This is a rejection of both the Hoar and Riddleberger resolutions.

HOUSE.

Mr. Hatch, of Missouri, spoke eloquently upon the industry of agriculture.

Representative Matson of Indiana, the chairman of the house committee on invalid pensions, reported from the committee a bill extending the time for filing claims for arrears of pensions so as to give the benefit of them to all claimants who file their claims after the expiration of the time limit, or who may yet file claims before the passage of this bill. If the bill should be enacted the cost to the government will be $250,000,000.

SENATE.

Senator Spooner offered an amendment authorizing the secretary of war to make a survey of Minnesota Point at the west end of Lake Superior and to ascertain, if possible, the probable cost of the condemnation and purchase of this point as a reservation to be used in the preservation of the harbors at the head of the lake.

In the senate the report of the committee on privileges and elections in the matter of Senator Turpie of Indiana was adopted and the committee discharged from further consideration of the memorials and remonstrances on the subject.

The house bill to limit the hours of letter carriers passed the senate. It provides that hereafter eight hours shall constitute a day's work for letter carriers.

Senator Allison presented an amendment on the river and harbor bill providing for an expenditure of $150,000 on that portion of the Missouri lying between the Omaha & Council Bluffs bridge and a point five miles above in the river. It also provided for the expenditure of $150,000 at and opposite Sioux City, Iowa.

In the senate Mr. Davis reported favorably from the committee on pensions a bill to grant a pension to Ellen St. Cyr, widow of Lieut. Abner St. Cyr, who was killed in a tornado at St. Cloud some years ago. A similar bill has passed the house.

HOUSE.

Mr. Butterworth, spoke against the Mills bill.

The house passed the senate bill to allow the Washington & Idaho road right of way through the Cœur d' Alene Indian reservation in Idaho.

SENATE.

The following bills were passed: Bill introduced Feb. 16 by Senator Sabin, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri river at or near Forest City, Dak., by the Forest City & Watertown Railway Company; authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Red River of the North by the Dakota & Pacific Railroad Company; authorizing the construction of a railroad, wagon and foot passenger bridge across the Mississippi river at or near Muscatine, Iowa; also, one across the Mississippi river at or near Clinton, Iowa.

After morning business the Senate took up the Vest resolution providing for a select committee to examine the questions touching meat and meat products of the United States. After a long discussion by Senators Vest, Manderson, Cullom and Plumb, the resolution was extended so as to make the investigation embrace the trunk line association, the central traffic association, and other agencies of transportation, and was then adopted.

HOUSE.

In the House today, absolutely nothing was done outside of tariff discussion.

SENATE.

The senate passed two house bills, relating to tresspass upon Indian and other reserve lands, that will go far toward protecting the reservations from the encroachments of white persons who have heretofore looked upon these lands as their natural tramping ground.

The proposition made by Senator Spooner to attach the direct tax bill as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill is being considered by the senate committee on appropriations, and will probably be adopted.

HOUSE.

This was a great day in the house, tariff debate being lifted from the rut of monotony in which it had run so long. Three of the principal members spoke, and each voiced the sentiments of his party or faction with great power—Randall for the protectionist Democrats, McKinley of Ohio for the Republicans and Breckinridge of Kentucky for the Democratic majority. No other business was transacted.

SENATE.

The senate has decided to devote its attention to the calendar, which has grown to include several hundred measures, many of which are of a general character. Then the bills establishing a department of labor admitting to statehood North Dakota, Montana and Washington, will be taken up, probably in the order named. Considerable time will be devoted to consideration of the fisheries treaty, and within a week Mr. Allison will call up the Indian appropriation bill.

HOUSE.

The house has set aside for a week or 10 days the tariff bill, so as to give consideration to the appropriation bills, of which there are four on the calendar, in this order: Diplomatic, District of Columbia, postoffice and legislative, executive and judicial. The legislative bill is to come up first, as it generally requires a week for debate in the House, and sometimes 10 days or two weeks are given it. There will be a caucus of the majority members in a few days and their action may change the turn of office. Should an agreement be reached whereby the Mills proposition to vote directly on the republican and then on the democratic tariff bill without debate be accepted, the tariff may come up and be disposed of in a day at any date.

Letters have been received at New York from Mr. Blaine's party in Europe indicating that the ladies will not take coaching trip in Scotland with the Carnegies. Mrs. Blaine expects to sail for home on the French line June 16. She will be accompanied by her daughter, by Miss Abigail Dodge (Gail Hamilton), and by Misses Elkins and Davis. The two young ladies last year have been making a tour and extending to Turkey. They joined Mr. Blaine's party in Rome.

MINNESOTA DEMOCRATS.

They Meet in Convention, Make a Truce and Build a Platform.

The Democrats of Minnesota have for some time been troubled by a war between the Michael Doran and Dr. Ames footing, and a vigorous contest was looked for in the State Convention which met in St. Paul. But in that the people were disappointed, for though there was a lively shuffle the feud was partially healed by the election of both Doran and Ames to the St. Louis Convention. The delegates and alternates were as follows:

Delegates at large: Michael Doran, of Le Sueur; Albert A. Ames, of Hennepin; Robert A. Smith, of Ramsey; John Ludwig of Winona.

ALTERNATES.

Frank L. Morse, Hennepin; E. W. Durant, Washington; William Quinn, Wright; John Adams, Dodge.

THE PLATFORM.

The following resolutions were passed:

The Democrats of Minnesota, in harmony with the Democracy of the Union, declare that the longer continuance of taxes levied for the conduct of a war which ended nearly a quarter century ago is a needless and unjustifiable burden upon the people of this country.

To the already accumulated $150,000,000 surplus lying unused and useless in the treasury there is being added under our existing revenue laws an increasing surplus of $80,000,000 each year. This money is not needed for any legitimate purposes of government; it is withdrawn from circulation; it plays no part in the business transactions of the people; it is a constant temptation, a standing inducement for schemes of plunder and corrupt extravagance.

We demand as a right that the people shall be at once and forever relieved from this unnecessary and oppressive burden. Superfluous taxation is tyranny.

The time has come for a thorough revision and a radical reduction of the existing revenue taxes. We insist that this work be at once began and speedily consummated without farther evasion or delay; and that in the doing of it the following principles shall be adhered to as the true basis of genuine revenue reform, viz.:

First—That taxation is not a public blessing, nor an element of national prosperity. That while sufficient revenue should at all times be collected for the support of an economical government in the discharge of its legitimate functions, for the payment of the public debt, and liberal pensions to deserving veterans of the Union armies, not one dollar of superfluous tax should be imposed for the purpose of enhancing the prices of commodities consumed by the people, and as a tribute to the private business of a favored few.

Second—That whatever taxation it may be necessary to retain for governmental purposes, should be imposed as far as practicable upon articles of luxury and indulgences which mainly minister to the enjoyment of the rich and the habits of the dissolute.

Third—That the taxes should be greatly reduced, and, when practicable, altogether abolished upon all articles and materials in such general use as to be rightly classed as necessaries for our people, which are essential to their health, comfort and prosperity, which enter into their domestic life, their industrial pursuits, and their personal happiness.

Fourth—That the purchasing power of the products of our labor shall be no longer diminished by a tax upon the things for which we exchange these products; the value of what we sell no longer curtailed by enhancing the cost of what we buy with the proceeds of our sales; that a tax upon imports is in effect a tax upon exports, and that the best way to render our agricultural and manufacturing industries profitable and prosperous is to increase the purchasing power of their products in the markets of the world by abolishing taxes upon the things purchased.

Fifth—That our foreign and internal commerce should be increased and the cost of transportation reduced by repealing taxes upon the materials which enter into the construction and equipment of the railways and marine.

Sixth—That our manufacturing industries should have the benefit of untaxed raw materials used by them, thus enabling them to dispose of their surplus products in other markets than our own.

Seventh—That the workingmen in these industries should have that steady employment and fair remuneration which can never exist so long as the sale of the products of their labor is confined to the limited demands of an easily overstocked home market.

Eighth—That the cunningly complicated system of specific and ad volorem duties upon the same article, whereby the heaviest taxation is imposed upon the cheaper grades of materials used mainly by our working people, should be wholly abandoned, and the millionaire compelled to pay at least an equal percentage of taxation with the poorest laborer.

Ninth—Finally, that all taxation shall be equal and impartial; that our people shall have free access to the markets of the world to buy as well as to sell to the best advantage and with equal terms with the peoples of other lands; that our power to produce and our ability to purchase shall no longer be confined to a monopolized home market, influenced by combinations and at the mercy of pools and trusts.

This is what we mean by revenue reform.

The existing traffic was created and is now maintained by the aggregated selfishness of the particular interests which have so long and bounteously fattened upon its profits. Originally imposed as a necessary "war measure," it has since been perpetuated and its enormities concealed by deluding a credulous people with false issues and keeping alive the sectional hatreds engendered by the war. For more than twenty years the bloody shirt has protected "protection" from scrutiny and popular indignation. A combination of favored monopolists, so powerful and so deeply interested in the maintenance of such a system is not to be easily broken. Inch by inch the cause of reform must win its way. We therefore welcome and endorse the Mills bill now pending in congress as the first aggressive advance, which deserves the united support of all men who honestly favor revenue reform.

While we recognize the growing sentiment for tariff reform among the Republican voters of Minnesota, we hereby call their attention to the recent utterance of the platform adopted by the late Republican state convention—a platform which makes no demand for a reduction of tariff taxes, but is an outspoken endorsement of a protective tariff. But we respectfully suggest to them that such a reform is not to be expected at the hands of men who are beneficiaries of the abuses to be reformed, but can only come from those who are in hearty sympathy with the reform to be accomplished.

In conformity with these principles we specify as among the articles which should be placed upon the free list salt, coal, lumber, sugar, iron and steel, glass, binding twine material, drugs and medicines, wool and all wearing apparel, carpets and household goods, tools, implements and machinery used in agricultural and mechanical employments, and all raw materials consumed by our manufactories.

While we are not unmindful of the growing interest of the people of the State of Minnesota in this great question, we declare our firm conviction that tariff reduction is not a local issue merely, but one of transcendent national importance affecting the prosperity, welfare and happiness of all the people of the whole country; it was made so by the fearless and unequivocal position assumed by President Cleveland in his last annual message. Tariff reform under his leadership is the vital, single issue of the present campaign. With such a cause under such a leader we cannot fail.

The bureaux of the French senate have elected a committee to examine the Panama canal lottery loan bill. A majority of the committee favor the bill.

John Gorres, charged with murder, was taken from Redwood Falls to the New Ulm jail. Mrs. Rosenkranz, the wife of his victim, arrived at Redwood Falls. She says they were married about four years, and had one child, which is now dead. They lived together about two years when her husband left for Minnesota, but promised to send for her. Since his absence she lived with her father, Nick Wilger, at Barton, Wis., until eighteen months ago when she went to Chicago where she is now working out. She says that some friends of her husband had made trouble between them, and that he refused to send her money as promised. She did not know that he had been murdered until recently. Her father accompanied her, and the special object of their visit is to recover $1,300 sent from Germany to Rosenkranz since his marriage, which is now in the bank at Springfield.

MINNESOTA REPUBLICANS.

After a Stormy Session in State Conventions, they Nominate Delegates and Electors.

The Republican State Convention met at St. Paul, and after a long and acrimonius fight between the young and old wings of the party, the young men shelved W. D. Washburn, H. A Castle and all the other well known leaders of the party. The delegates elected were as follows:

Frank F. Davis of Hennepin, Joel P. Heatwole of Rice, G. G. Hartley of St Louis, C. G. Edwards of Fillmore.

ALTERNATES.

C. E. French of Wright, W. A. Sperry of Steele, J. E. Brown of Blue Earth, H. G. Finkle of Clay.

The following electors were also put in nomination:

At large: Capt. Mons Grinager of Minneapolis, Hennepin county, and H. W. Stone, Sr., of Stevens county.

Districts—First, W. H. Yale, of Winona; Second, E. R. Smith of Le Sueur; Third, W. A. Foland of Swift county; Fourth, Alvah Eastman of Anoka; Fifth, John Cooper of Stearns county.

THE PLATFORM.

The following resolutions were adopted:

The Republican party in Minnesota deem it unnecessary, on the eve of a national convention, to make a formal and extended declaration of principles further than to reaffirm those laid down in the national platform of 1884, and to express the conviction that the interests of the people throughout the land would be greatly promoted by a change of administration.

It is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people. The largest diversity of industry is most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people. But while adhering to the principle of protection to American labor and productions we demand that the duties on imports shall be so adjusted as not to foster monopolies, and in the adjustment of such duties such protection shall be afforded to the various industries of the country as will best promote the general welfare.

We desire to especially emphasize the fact that President Cleveland's wholesale removals from office on party grounds, and his failure to recommend to congress even the slightest legislation to improve the civil service law show his complete surrender to the spoils policy; that the present civil service law was enacted and faithfully administered during a Republican administration; and we urge the senators and representatives from Minnesota to support measures that will uphold and extend the principle of civil service reform based on qualification and merit.

The Democratic party has become merely an organization for official spoils. It has unblushingly violated all its reformatory promises. It is not entitled to the confidence of the people. The president solemnly pledged himself to carry out civil service reform, but, with the full approval of his partisan supporters, he has converted this reform into a shallow pretense. He committed himself to the one term principle in his letter of acceptance, but is now actually using the federal patronage to secure a re-election. His partisan confederates proclaim devotion to equal suffrage rights, while they trample those rights under foot in the South.

The Democratic party professes attachment to state sovereignty and home rule, but ruthlessly denies both to the American citizens of Dakota, fearing that the votes of that people may be cast for the Republican candidates at the coming presidential election. It professes love for the Union soldiers and sailors, but its continued policy has been to refuse relief to the suffering defenders of the nation and their dependents. It holds the national house of representatives, which alone can originate changes of tax and revenue bills, but it has done nothing in its past six years' control of that body to reduce the surplus accumulation of money in the treasury, or to relieve the people of unnecessary taxation.

Its proposed tariff legislation is a glaring subterfuge and an attempt to destroy the American policy of protection to American industries and labor in the interests of foreign countries which, if successful, must necessarily bring disaster upon the business of this country, and tend to reduce the American rates of wages to European standards. It has provided no seaboard defense against foreign invasion. Its administration of foreign affairs has been weak to the verge of humiliation. Our nation is now represented abroad by men who either sought its dismemberment or openly sympathized with its foes.

The postal service affecting every interest has become a disgrace to the country. Partisan spoilsmen, in violation of civil service reform principles, have displaced trained, competent and faithful officers, many of them ex-Union soldiers. Every function of the government is made subordinate to partisan ends.

That the convention denounce the present administration, which has had control of the house of representatives for the past five years, in its efforts to disfranchise the people of Dakota for political reasons only. We believe that it is unjust and criminal to longer deprive Dakota of statehood.

For these and other reasons of public importance we believe and here record our earnest conviction that a change of administration is the pressing need of the country, and that it is so demanded by the people.

We desire to especially emphasize the fact that President Cleveland's wholesale removals from office on party grounds, and his failure to recommend to congress even the slightest legislation to improve the civil service show his complete surrender to the spoils policy; that the present civil service law was enacted and faithfully administered during a Republican administration; and we urge the senators and representives from Minnesota to support measures that will uphold and extend the principle of civil service reform based on qualifications and merit.

A Terrible Story.

The Danbury News has a strange story from Southbury, a rural place in the North part of New Haven county. Mrs. Maria Yucat, who lived in a handsome residence was found dead one morning about a year ago at the foot of the celler stairs.

Mrs. Yucat was reputed to be quite wealthy and lived a very retired and secluded life. When her body was found at the foot of the stairs Medical Examiner Burritt was summoned. Dr. Burritt was an old gentleman not very careful in his investigations, and when he saw the position in which the body lay he made little or no examination, and returned a finding of accidental death from falling down stairs.

Since that time the people of Southbury have done a great deal of thinking about the case, and many theories were evolved. Facts have come out showing that the body could not have been where it was found by any accidental fall. A Southbury man claims to have a solution of the affair.

Mrs. Yucat had a nephew, a wild, reckless spendthrift. He bothered her continually with demands for money. The nephew visited her home the night before she was found dead. When there began to be a good deal of talk of murder, the nephew, it is said, suddenly left. Before he left he and another person visited the cemetery, which is situated in an isolated spot, one dark night, and dug up Mrs. Yucat's remains. The coffin was opened, and the neck of the corpse broken. Then the coffin was replaced and the grave placed in as good order as before.

It is said there was an eye-witness to this ghoulish proceeding who did not dare speak of what he had seen at the time

All the camp equipment and office furniture of the Duluth, Huron & Denver railroad have been sold at auction under sheriff's execution at Sauk Center, Minn., to satisfy the claims of parties who sold the company on credit. Most that will be heard of the "D., H. & D."

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The steamer S. B. Barker got out of the ice on her trip from Ashland and safely reached Duluth, after she left Two Harbors ran to Duluth without much difficulty, keeping close to the shore. The wind shifted to west and northwest and is carrying the ice away from the north shore.

An enthusiastic meeting of the special board of trade committee of Winona appointed to get up a Fourth of July celebration in Winona was held. It was decided to have an immense celebration. A general plan of work was laid out and committees of prominent business men were appointed to take charge of the work.

It is thought that the heavy rains have effectually disposed of chinch bugs.

The opening spring term of school at Dodge Center was delayed on account of diptheria.

A young man employed in H. Jacobs' clothing store at Austin, was shot by a burglar, and lies in a critical condition. Schafer slept in the store and was awakened by the noise of the burglar opening the safe, and fired twice at him. The burglar returned the fire, the shot penetrating Schafer's lungs. The burglar escaped, but without any booty.

Several reports have been made by Wabasha county farmers that the grain which they put in about the time of the commencement of the heavy rains two or three weeks ago, has rotted and they will have to seed over again, which will incur considerable loss, as the acreage which they had planted was quite extensive.

The residence of W. L. Webster, of Red Wing, was destroyed by fire. The building is a total loss and the contents nearly so; no insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown. The family were awakened just in time to save themselves.

Winona has organized a home stock company to build a hotel to cost $100,000, and for which other citizens will contribute a bonus of $12,500. Messrs. H. Choate, H. J. O'Neill, A. B. Youmans, Charles Horton and W. H. Laird were appointed a sub-committee to direct the organization of the company. A $100,000 hotel has been a pet project of Winona. Last year a cash bonus of $40,000 was raised for a $200,000 hotel and opera house, but the contractors, got into financial straits, and were unable to carry out the contract. Since then the feeling has been strong for a home company to build the hotel, and the plan will without doubt be carried out at once.

The county board of Goodhue county are considering applications for aid to rebuild and repair the roads and bridges damaged by the spring flood. Over $6,000 has already been asked for, and the road tax next year will be unusually heavy, probably reaching nearly $10,000. Last year it was only $2,500.

Peter Memahon and Pete Lemelle were drowned in Lake Vermillion, near Tower. The men were going exploring and a sudden wind capsized the boat. They were unmarried. The bodies have not yet been recovered.

At a meeting of the directors of the M. E. church of St. Cloud, it was decided to erect a new edifice, costing between $10,000 and $15,000, as the old church is not large enough to accommodate the constantly increasing congregation.

The residence of N. Kingsley was burglarized at Austin. A valuable gold watch and some money were taken.

Fire broke out at Faribault in the building on Front street, owned by Mr. Humphrey, occupied by August Gardner, who, being nearly insane, is supposed to have set it on fire, oil being found near the house. Loss, $1,000.

At a special meeting of the Owatanna council the saloonkeepers cited to show cause why their licenses should not be revoked for violation of law appeared with Amos Coggswell, their attorney. L. L. Wheelock, city attorney, appeared in behalf of the city. The council, five to three, deferred further action until other citations with specific charges might be served. The information was obtained through an informer, against whom there is very strong feeling, and it was feared that he would suffer bodily harm but he was placed in safe keeping by the authorities. The council chamber was densely crowded, and threats were made.

Extravagant.

The story of the Cape Cod youth who spent a week in finding ten cents on the street in Boston has brought the Listener another story of a Cape Cod boy who must have been a relative of that one. He happened to be visiting in Boston, a good while ago, on the Fourth of July, and went out on the Common to see the sights. He returned in an hour rather rueful.

"What's the matter, Silas?" he was asked.

"Gosh, all hemlocks!" he exclaimed; "this is the most extravagant place I ever see."

"What has happened?"

"Wal, you know that quarter of a dollar you give me this morning?"

"Yes. Well?"

"Spent it, by hokey, all but twenty-three cents, slap dash for molasses cakes."—Boston Transcript.

Her Hour of Triumph.

Dr. Meanwell—And how are you feeling to-day, Mrs. Moribund?

Mrs. Moribund—Poorly, doctor, poorly. When I am gone I hope you will look after the health of Johnnie and the baby.

Dr. Meanwell—Oh, I wouldn't take so hopeless a view of the case. You will be better.

Mrs. Moribund—No, doctor; I will not feed upon false hopes. In fact, I do not wish to live. Mrs. Sickles has always tried to make out that her health was more seriously affected than mine. When she sees my pulseless form and all these empty medicine bottles on the closet shelves she will have to acknowledge that I came out ahead.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

The Brooklyn Divine Discusses the Dangers of Infidelity and Modern Atheism.

He Warns Doubting Thomases to Shake Off All Fears and Gird the Gospel Armor On.

Dr. Talmage's subject on the 13th, was "Obscuration," and his text:

The sun shall be turned into darkness.—Acts ii. v. 20.

He said:

Solar eclipse is here prophesied to take place about the time of the destruction of ancient Jerusalem. Josephus, the historian, says that the prophecy was literally fulfilled, and that about that time there were strange appearances in the heavens. The sun was not destroyed, but for a little while hidden.

Christianity is the rising sun of our time, and men have tried with the uprolling vapors of skepticism and the smoke of their blasphemy to turn the sun into darkness. Suppose the archangels of malice and horror should let loose a little while and be allowed be extinguish and destroy the sun in the natural heavens. They would take the oceans from other worlds and pour them on this luminary of the planetary system, and the waters go hissing down amid the ravines and the caverns, and there is explosion after explosion until there are only a few peaks of fire left in the sun, and these are cooling down and going out until the vast continents of flame are reduced to a small acreage of fire, and that whitens and cools off until there are only a few coals left, and these are whitening and going out until there is not a spark left in all the mountains of ashes and the valleys of ashes and the chasms of ashes. An extinguished sun; a dead sun; a buried sun. Let all worlds wail at the stupendous obsequies.

Of course, this withdrawal of the solar light and heat throws our earth into a universal chill, and the tropics became the temperate, and the temperate becomes the arctic, and there are frozen rivers and frozen lakes and frozen oceans. From arctic and antarctic regions the inhabitants gather in toward the center and find the equator as the poles. The slain forests are piled up into a great bonfire, and around them gather the shivering villages and cities. The wealth of the coal mines is hastily poured into the furnaces and stirred into rage of combustion, but soon the bonfires begin to lower, and the furnaces begin to go out and the nations begin to die. Cotopaxi, Vesuvius, Etna, Stromboli, Californian geysers, cease to smoke, and the ice of hail-storms remains unmelted in their crater. All the flowers have breathed their last breath. Ships with sailors frozen at the mast and helmsmen frozen at the wheel and passengers frozen in the cabin; all nations dying, first at the north and then at the south. Child frosted and dead in the cradle. Octogenarian frosted and dead at the hearth. Workmen with frozen hand on the hammer and frozen foot on the shuttle. Winter from sea to sea. All-congealing winter. Perpetual winter. Globe of frigidity. Hemisphere shackled to hemisphere by chains of ice. Universal Nova Zembla. The earth and ice-floes grinding against other ice-floes. The archangels of malice and horror have done their work, and now they may take their thrones of glacier and look down upon the ruin they have wrought.

What the destruction of the sun in the natural heavens would be to our physical earth, the destruction of Christianity would be to the moral world. The sun turned into darkness. Infidelity in our time is considered a great joke. There are people who rejoice to hear Christianity caricatured, and to hear Christ assailed with quibble and quirk and misrepresentation and badinage and harlequinade.

I propose this morning to take infidelity and atheism out of the realm of jocularity into one of tragedy, and show you what they propose and what, if they are successful, they will accomplish. There are those in all our communities who would like to see the Christian religion overthrown, and who say the world would be better without it. I want to show you what is the end of this road, and what is the terminus of this crusade, and what this world will be when atheism and infidelity have triumphed over it, if they can. I say, if they can. I reiterate it, if they can.

In the first place, it will be the complete and unutterable degradation of womanhood. I will prove it by facts and arguments which no honest man will dispute. In all communities and cities and states and nations where the Christian religion has been dominant, woman's condition has been ameliorated and improved, and she is deferred to and honored in a thousand things, and every gentleman takes off his hat before her. If your associations have been good, you know that the name of wife, mother, daughter, suggests gracious surroundings. You know there are no better schools and seminaries in Brooklyn or in any city of this country than the schools and seminaries for our young ladies. You know that while woman may suffer injustice in England and the United States, she has more of her rights in Christendom than she has anywhere else.

Now, compare this with woman's condition in lands where Christianity has made little or no advance—in China, in Barbary, in Borneo, in Tartary, in Egypt, in Hindostan. The Burmese sell their wives and daughters as so many sheep. The Hindoo bible makes it disgraceful and an outrage for a woman to listen to music or look out of the window in the absence of her husband, and gives as a lawful ground for divorce a woman's beginning to eat before her husband has finished his meal. What mean those white bundles on the ponds and rivers in China in the morning? Infanticide following infanticide. Female children destroyed simply because they are female. Woman harnessed to a plow as an ox. Woman veiled and barricaded, and in all styles of cruel seclusion. Her birth a misfortune. Her life a torture. Her death a horror. The missionary of the cross to-day in heathen lands preaches generally to two groups—a group of men who do as they please and sit where they please; the other group women hidden and carefully secluded in a side apartment, where they may hear the voice of the preacher, but may not be seen. No refinement. No liberty. No hope for this life. No hope for the life to come. Ringed nose. Cramped foot. Disfigured face. Embruted soul. Now compare those two conditions. How far toward this latter condition that I speak of would woman go if Christian influences were withdrawn and Christianity were destroyed? It is only a question of dynamics. If an object be lifted to a certain point and not fastened there, and the lifting power be withdrawn, how long before that object will fall down to the point from which it started? It will fall down, and it will go still further than the point from which it started. Christianity has lifted woman up from the very depth of degradation almost to the skies. If that lifting power be withdrawn she falls clear back to the depth from which she was resurrected, but not going any lower because there is no lower depth. And yet, notwithstanding the fact that the only salvation of woman from degradation and woe is the Christian religion, and the only influence that has ever lifted her in the social scale is Christianity—I have read that there are women who reject Christianity. I make no remark in regard to those persons. I make no remark in regard to them. In the silence of your own soul make your observations.

If infidelity triumph and Christianity be overthrown it means the demoralization of society. The one idea in the Bible that atheists and infidels most hate is the idea of retribution. Take away the idea of retribution and punishment from society and it will begin very soon to disintegrate; and take away from the minds of men the fear of hell, and there are a great many of them who would very soon turn this world into a five hundred Christian people on board go down through a drawbridge into a watery grave. I would not want to see five hundred Christian people go into such a disaster, but I tell you plainly that I could more easily see that than I could for any protracted time stand and see an infidel die, though his pillow were of eider-down and under a canopy of vermilion. I have never been able to brace up my nerves for such a spectacle. There is something at such a time so indescribable in the countenance, I just looked in upon it for a minute or two, but the clutch of his fist was so diabolic, and the strength of voice so unnatural, I could not endure it. "There is no hell! there is no hell! there is no hell!" the man had said for sixty years; but that night when I looked in the dying room of my infidel neighbor, there was something on his countenance which seemed to say: "There is, there is, there is, there is hell." The majority of those who are indignant against the Bible because of the idea of punishment are men whose lives are bad or whose hearts are impure, and who hate the Bible because of the idea of future punishment for the same reason that criminals hate the penitentiary. Oh, I have heard this brave talk about people fearing nothing of the consequences of sin in the next world, and I have made up my mind it is merely a coward's whistling to keep his courage up. I have seen men flaunt their immortalities in the face of the community, and I have heard them defy the judgment day and scoff at the idea of any future consequence of their sin; but when they came to die they shrieked until you could hear them for nearly two blocks, and in the summer night the neighbors got up to put the windows down because they could not endure the horror.

I would not want to see a rail train with The mightiest restraints to-day against theft, against immorality, against libertinism, against crime of all sorts—the mightiest restraints are the retributions of eternity. Men know that they can escape the law, but down in the offender's soul there is the realization of the fact that they cannot escape God. He stands at the end of the road of profligacy, and He will not clear the guilty. Take all idea of retribution and punishments out of the hearts and minds of men, and it would not be long before Brooklyn and New York and Boston and Charleston and Chicago became Sodoms. The only restraints against the evil passions of the world to-day are the Bible restraints.

Suppose now these generals of atheism and infidelity got the victory, and suppose they marshaled a great army made up of the majority of the world. They are in companies, in regiments, in brigades—the whole army. Forward, march! ye hosts of infidels and atheists, banners flying before, banners flying behind, banners inscribed with the words: "No God! No Christ! No punishment! No restraints! Down with the Bible! Do as you please!" The sun turned into darkness.

Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists. And first of all you will attack the churches. Away with those houses of worship! They have been standing there so long deluding the people with consolation in their bereavements and sorrows. All those churches ought to be extirpated; they have done so much to relieve the lost and bring home the wandering, and they have so long held up the idea of eternal rest after the paroxysm of this life is over. Turn the St. Peters and St. Pauls and the temples and the tabernacles into the clubhouses. Away with those churches!

Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and next of all they scatter the Sabbath schools—the Sabbath schools filled with bright-eyed, bright-cheeked little ones who are singing songs on Sunday afternoons and getting instruction when they ought to be on the street corners playing marbles, or swearing on the commons. Away with them! ye great army of infidels and atheists; and next of all they will attack Christian asylums—the institutions of mercy supported by Christian philanthropies. Never mind the blind eyes and the deaf ears and the crippled limbs and the weakened intellects. Let paralyzed old age pick up its own food, and orphans fight their own way, and the half reformed go back to their evil habits. Forward, march! ye great army of infidels and atheists, and with your battle-axes hew down the cross and split up the manger of Bethlehem.

On, ye great army of infidels and atheists! and now they come to the grave-yards and the cemeteries of the earth. Pull down the sculpture above Greenwood's gate, for it means the resurrection. Tear away at the entrance of Laurel Hill the figure of Old Mortality and the chisel. On, ye great army of infidels and atheists, into the graveyards and the cemeteries; and where you see "Asleep in Jesus" cut it way, and where you find a marble story of heaven blast it, and where you find over a little child's grave: "Suffer little children to come unto Me," substitute the words "delusion" and "sham," and where you find an angel in marble strike off the wing, and when you come to a family vault chisel on the door: "Dead cn.o. dead forever."

But on! ye great army of infidels and atheists, on! They will attempt to scale heaven. There are heights to be taken. Pile hill on hill and Pelion upon Ossa, and then they hoist the ladders against the walls of heaven. On and on until they blow up the foundations of jasper and the gates of pearl. They charge up the steep. Now they aim for the throne of Him who liveth forever and ever. They would take down from their high place the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost. "Down with them!" they say. "Down with Him from the throne!" they say. "Down forever! Down out of sight! He is not God. He has no right to sit there. Down with Him! Down with Christ!"

A world without a head—a universe without a king—orphan constellation—fatherless galaxies—anarchy supreme—a dethroned Jehovah—an assassinated God—parricide,—regicide, deicide! That is what they mean. That is what they will have if they can—if they can—if they can. Civilization hurled back into semi-barbarism, and semi-barbarism driven back into Hottentot savagery! The wheel of progress turned the other way and turned toward the dark ages. The clock of centuries put back two thousand years. Go back, you Sandwich Islands, from your schools and from your colleges and from your reformed condition to what you were in 1820, when the missionaries first came. Call home the five hundred missionaries from India and overthrow their two thousand schools, where they are trying to educate the heathen, and scatter the 14,000 little children that they have gathered out of barbarism into civilization. Obliterate all the work of Dr. Duff in India, of David Abeel in China, Dr. King in Greece, of Judson in Burmah, of David Brainard amid the American Aborigines, and send home the three thousand missionaries of the cross who are toiling in foreign lands, toiling for Christ's sake, toiling themselves into the grave. Tell these three thousand men of God that they are of no use. Send home the medical missionaries who are doctoring the bodies as well as the souls of the dying nations. Go home, London Missionary Society. Go home, American Board of Foreign Missions. Go home, ye Moravians, and relinquish back into darkness and squalor and filth and death the nations whom ye have begun to lift.

Oh, my friends, there has never been such a nefarious plot on earth as that which infidelity and atheism have planned. We were shocked a few years ago because of the attempt to blow up the parliament house in London; but if infidelity and atheism succeed in their attempt they will dynamite a world. Let them have their full sway and this world will be a habitation of three rooms—a habitation with just three rooms—the one a madhouse, another a lazaretto, the other a pandemonium. The infidel bands of music have only just begun their concert—yea, they have only been stringing their instruments. I to-day put before you their whole programme from beginning unto close. In the theatre the tragedy comes first and the farce afterward, but in this infidel drama of death the farce comes first and the tragedy afterward. And in the former atheists and infidels laugh and mock, but in the latter God Himself will laugh and mock. He says so. "I will laugh at their calamity and mock when their fear cometh."

From such a chasm of individual, national, world-wide ruin stand back. Oh, young men, stand back from that chasm! You see the practical drift of my sermon. I want you to know where that road leads. Stand back from that chasm of ruin. The time is going to come (you and I may not live to see it, but it will come, just as certainly as there is a God, it will come) when the infidels and atheists who openly and out and out and out and above board preach and practice infidelity and atheism will be considered as criminals against society, as they are now criminals against God. Society will push out the leper and the wretch, with soul gangrened and leborous and vermin-covered and rotting apart with his beastiality will be left to die in the ditch and be denied decent burial, and men will come with spades and cover up the carcass where it falls, that it poison not the air, and the only text in all the Bible appropriate for the funeral sermon will be Jeremiah xxii, 19: "He shall be buried with the burial of an ass."

A thousand voices come up to me this morning saying: "Do you really think infidelity will succeed? Has Christianity received its death blow? and will the Bible become obsolete?" Yes, when the smoke of the city chimney arrests and destroys the noonday sun. Josephus says about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem the sun was turned into darkness; but only the clouds rolled between the sun and the earth. The sun went right on. It is the same sun, the same luminary as when at the beginning it shot out like an electric spark from God's finger, and to-day it is warming the nations, and to-day it is gilding the sea, and to-day it is filling the earth with light. The same old sun, not at all worn out, though its light steps 190,000,000 miles a second, though its pulsations are 450,000,000,000,000 undulations in a second—the same sun with beautiful white light made up of the violet, and the indigo, and the blue, and the green, and the red, and the yellow, and the orange—the seven beautiful colors now just as when the solar spectrum first divided them.

At the beginning God said: "Let there be light," and light was, and light is, and light shall be. So Christianity is rolling on, and it is going to warm all nations, and all nations are to bask in its light. Men may shut the window blinds so they can not see it, or they may smoke the pipe of speculation until they are shadowed under their own vaporing, but the Lord God is a sun! This white light of the gospel made up of all the beautiful colors of earth and heaven—violet plucked from amid the spring grass and the indigo of the southern jungles, and the blue of the skies, and the green of the foliage, and the yellow of the autumnal woods, and the orange of the southern groves, and the red of the sunsets. All the beauties of earth and heaven brought out by this spiritual spectrum. Great Britain is going to take all Europe for God. The United States is going to take all America for God. Both of them together will take all Asia for God. All three of them will take Africa for God. "Who art thou, oh great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Hallelujah, amen!

The Language of Animals.

They all utter, or at least they all seem to utter, the same sounds to express the same emotions. The love cry of the nightingale, the low by which a cow recalls a straying calf, the grunt of a pig when it sees food, the mew of a cat who wants the door opened—that is, wants to attract attention—the bark of a domesticated dog to testify recognition, and the howl of an uncivilized dog as the moon rises, or of a civilized dog when the church bells begin, are all, to human ears at least, unchanging sounds, sounds with one meaning and no other, and containing always the same notes. The creatures, in these instances at least, utter definite sounds, and it is hard to believe that they do not do the same on other occasions. The little parrots called minas, when angry with one another, swear at each other perceptibly—that is, scream with a note wholly distinct from the one they use on any other occasion—and crows, when setting their sentries or warning their comrades of danger, utter a sound more like a bark than a caw. Oxen employed in field work listen to one another's lows and raise their heads to attend to the sounds, which, when they are collecting to go home, are so regularly the same that even human beings can understand their meaning. The creatures, in fact, "speak" in a limited way; and as a few of them—dogs and horses, for example—understand the words of men, some words even when not addressed to them, they probably understand one another. But if they utter sounds with meaning and always the same meaning, they use language, in however a limited degree, and by what a priori reason is it shown to be impossible to learn that language? Why, for example, is it ludicrously absurd to suppose that a man studying the jabber of an ape for twenty years as some of the missionaries have studied the "clicks" of the clicking races, should learn to know with much accuracy what that jabbering meant? If it were impossible for men to learn an unknown tongue without an interpreter the answer would be easy, but we know that this is not the case, for uneducated men cast among savages, have in repeated instances learned to speak their language. Cortez's Mexican mistress, too, learned how to speak and comprehend Spanish, though neither Cortez nor any other Spaniard knew, or by possibility could know at first, a word of Mexican.—The Spectator.

Healing Waters of the West.

Two hundred and fifty-nine years ago, says Indian tradition, an epidemic of great violence attacked all of the Indian tribes of North America, and it soon became manifest that the whole race would become extinct if the fell destroyer was not arrested. The great medicine men exerted all their skill and power, both with medicines and incantations, but without avail. The healing qualities of mineral waters had long been known to the Indians, and they resorted to the waters of the east and south in their dire distress, but with little success. At this period of their great affliction, when their ranks had been decimated, when hope was almost extinguished, a messenger arrived from the great west with news of a wonderful water which he said had been touched by the finger of the great spirit, and that this water would cure all manner of disease. With the same eagerness that the people of all ages have seized upon a dernier resort for ills, the Indians accepted the hope, and repaired by thousands to these most wonderful waters, and were saved. From that time these waters have been the great resort for the Indians. It is a well-known fact in the west that the Indians to this day believe that the Black hills of Dakota are the abode of the great spirit.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Rewards of Literature.

Pope Sextus V. deprived a satirist of his tongue.

Helvetius suffered capital punishment for writing a farce.

Peconianus, a pretty verse maker, was strangled for satirizing Tiberius.

De Foe was imprisoned and had his ears cropped for an ill-judged political pamphlet.

George Withers, the author of "Abuses Stript and Whipt," was confined for years in the Marshalsea prison.

Emperor Augustus condemned the poet Cassius to instant death, and banished Ovid for fear of his truculent pen.

Domitian ordered Homogenes of Tarsus to be executed for some satirical reflections on his history and the copyists who transcribed the work shared the same fate.

In the winter of 1879 the czar punished an author living in Moscow who laid bare some of the iniquities of Russian statecraft, by compelling him to follow out the Baconian precept—namely, that "some books are to be chewed and digested"—and literally eat his own book.

Olympian Sports

The number of the different kinds of games, including those for boys, amounted eventually to no less than 14. At Olympia the foot race or stadium—the race in which Corœbus was the first victor, at the institution of the Festival by King Iphitus—appears to have been the earliest, and for some years to have continued to be the only contest. From it and from its victor was derived the Greek computation of time, in quadriennial periods called Olympiads, and (marvelous to say) it continued to form the basis of the National Calendar till A.D. 1304, the sixteenth year of the Roman Emperor Theodosius, that is for nearly 1,200 years; and during all that length of time not only were the games regularly kept up, but the successful competitor continued to give his name to the quadriennial. Moreover, the foot race supplied to Greece not only the measure of time, but the measure of space. The course called stadium was equal to the eighth of a mile, and all distances among the Greeks were measured by stadia, as they are now measured by miles.

But if the foot race at Olympia was the earliest of the sports and in one respect at least was attended with the greatest fame, there can be little doubt that the chariot race was, upon the whole, the most attractive and the most exciting, and, on some occasions, exciting to a very painful degree. For instance, we learn from the Fifth Pythian Ode, written in honor of the chariot victory of Arcesilaus King of Cyrene in Africa, that not fewer than 40 chariots engaged in the contest came to grief. It appears, also, from the same and other odes, that the owner of the equipage, who was very rarely his own charioteer, carried off much the greater share if not the whole of the glory of success, though his sole merit consisted, like the merit of our nobles and lairds upon the turf, in bearing all the expenses connected with the race, in the encouragement which he gave to the sport, and in the honor which by his victory he won for his city or native land. No builder of a chariot is mentioned by Pindar; no jockey; one successful horse, and only one named Pherenicus (Ol. i. and Pyth. iii.)—The National Review.

Guarding Diamonds

From the London Figaro.

When the French Crown jewels were sold by auction last season, it is well known that the finest and most historical of the gems, including the famous "Regent" diamond, were reserved, and these may now be seen in the Louvre in the gallery called after the well-known statue of Apollo, which is such a prominent object in it. Before these priceless gems were exposed, however, a committee of skilled officials and experts was appointed in order to decide on some plan for rendering their loss by theft virtually impossible. And this is what the committee decided upon.

The jewels are exhibited in a showcase, the glass plates of which are exceptionally thick and the iron framework of which is abnormally strong, and an attendant has been appointed to specially keep watch over the precious exhibit all day long. Should he have the slightest cause to suspect any visitor or visitors he has only to touch a button easily within his reach, whereupon the glass case promptly disappears from view and sinks into a specially constructed shaft, over the top of which the same automatic machinery causes thick covers, formed of thick metal plates, to close with a sharp snap. The ingenuity displayed in carring out this plan is remarkable, and the fact that the clockwork apparatus has cost close upon £800 will convey some idea of its complicated character.

"The spring overcoat is not worn long this season," says a fashion sharp. No, indeed. Just as you get comfortably settled in it and the lappels nicely fixed so that the silk facings will show, spring gives a double back-action twist and you are fain to hie yourself homeward and get into your fur-lined ulster with the Siberian collar.—Philadelphia Call.

An Extraordinary Phenomenon.

No other term than the above would apply to the woman who could see her youthful beauty fading away without a pang of regret. Many a woman becomes prematurely old and haggard because of functional derangement. What a pity that all such do not know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will restore their organs to a normal state, and make them youthful and beautiful once more! For the ills to which the daughters of Eve are peculiarly liable the "Prescription" is a sovereign remedy. It is the only medicine sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be returned. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

What a dreadful thing it is to wake up in the middle of the night suffering from cholera, the nearest doctor a mile away, and no one to send for him. Imagine a more distressing domestic situation, if you can. The trouble, however, would never have become serious if the man of the house had a bottle of Perry Davis' Pain Killer at hand.

Information comes from the tobacco growing counties of Western North Carolina that two-thirds or more of the young plants were killed by recent frosts. Vegetables and wheat were greatly damaged at numerous points in the mountains. The mercury went below 30 and in one instance 25 degrees above.

"That Miss Jones is a nice-looking girl, isn't she?"

"Yes, and she'd be the belle of the town if it wasn't for one thing."

What's that?"

"She has catarrh so bad it is unpleasant to be near her. She has tried a dozen things and nothing helps her. I am sorry, for I like her, but that doesn't make it any less disagreeable for one to be around her."

Now if she had used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, there would have been nothing of the kind said, for it will cure catarrh every time.

A Fair Trial

Of Hood's Sarsaparilla for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, is sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. The following statement is right to the point:

"My daughter Mary was afflicted with scrofulous sore neck from the time she was 22 months old till she became 6 years of age. Lumps formed in her neck, causing great annoyance, and two of them, after growing to the size of a pigeon's egg, broke and discharged. One became a running sore for over three years. We decided to give a thorough trial. After she had taken five bottles, all suppuration had ceased. We then waited three months, when, as a new lump was beginning to form, we again gave her Hood's Sarsaparilla. After she had taken less than two bottles the lump and all indications of scrofula had disappeared. J. S. Carlile, Nauright, N. J.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Worst Type of Scrofula

"My son was afflicted with the worst type of scrofula, and on the recommendation of my druggist I gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla. To-day he is sound and well, notwithstanding it was said there was not enough medicine in Illinois to effect a cure." J. Christian, Illipolis, Ill.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

Nay, speak, no ill, a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind;
And oh, to breathe each tale we've heard
Is far beneath a noble mind.

Full oft a better seed is sown,
By choosing thus the kinder plan;
For if but little good be known,
Still let us speak the best we can.

Then speak no ill, but lenient be
To others' failing as your own;
If you're the first the fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.

For life is but a passing day,
No life may tell how brief its span;
Then oh, what little time we stay
Let's speak of all the best we can.

My Brother-in-Law's First Wife.

Frona W. Colvin in Yankee Blade.

My Sister Agnes had made what I should call the great mistake of marrying a widower. Not that I had any spite against grave, good-looking Henry Mayne, yet he was not the sort of man that I could ever bring myself to "love, honor and obey," if I were a woman, even if he had never been married before. He was always wont to repeat the good qualities of his wife when he used to come to our house, before he was my brother-in-law, and I don't know but I thought, at that time, that it was very commendable in him to pay such tribute to his departed companion; but there came a time when this constant allusion to "Maggie" made me disgusted.

I have often heard my father say that it was never safe to marry a widow unless her first husband had been hung, and even then she was liable to declare that hanging was too good for number two; and to effect this remark, I will add right here, that in my humble opinion, it is never well to marry a widower unless his first wife has eloped with some other man, and even in that case perhaps number two would get informed that the only thing lacking to cause her to do likewise was a chance.

Henry Mayne was holding a preemption next to our claim when we first made his acquaintance, and about all we knew of him was that he was an honest, industrious, prosperous farmer, was a widower, with one child who was staying with his married sister in Chicago, till his younger sister, Mamie, should finish her education and come to keep house for him, and bring his little girl. He informed us that Mamie had made her home partly with him and partly with the other sister since she was fifteen, at which time they had been left orphans.

We had known Mr. Mayne over a year when it came time for him to make final proof of his claim. On a pre-emption one can make proof at any time, after living on it six months, within thirty-three months. Mr. Mayne had stayed the entire time, but now that the limit was reached he made his proof. I was never more surprised in my life than when Agnes, having followed me one morning when I went out with the herd of cattle, informed me that Henry was going farther west to take a homestead and timber-claim and she was going to be married to him and go with him. I had no objection to the man, but I set before her the difficulties of a step-mother. I consider the rearing of other people's children about as thankless a task as anyone can undertake.

"But someone must take care of her, and I don't know but I am as capable of doing so as anyone" urged Agnes.

"I never for a moment doubted that, my little sister. You will be a model step-mother; but the question is, how about the child. Will she prove a model step-daughter?"

"Henry is good-natured, and he always says his first wife was a saint," replied Agnes meekly, "so I think the child ought to have a pleasant disposition. Father and mother think it will be a good match, and I am twenty-five, you know."

Well to make a long story short, they were married and went to Kansas to take more land. I was twenty-one pretty soon after, and as they knew I intended taking claims when I should have reached my majority, they wrote me to come there."

They had been married six months when I went. Henry had been after little Becca instead of waiting till Mamie had graduated, as he at first intended, and it was just as I feared, she was a little terror.

"I can't see where the child takes that evil temper from," said Henry, a few minutes after I arrived, when Becca threw herself on the floor and kicked and screamed and then held her breath until she was black in the face because I would not allow her to pound my watch with a hammer. "I am sure Agnes will bear me out in saying that I never display my temper, and as for the child's mother—well, Maggie came the nearest being an angel of any woman I ever saw. I may say, she was the very best person I ever met."

I glanced at Agnes. There was an expression on her face which caused me to believe she had heard "Maggie's" praises sung often, but she looked very much embarrassed when she saw how annoyed I was at hearing her husband praise another to the disparagement of herself.

"If she was better than Agnes she must have been sufficiently good not to need masses said for her soul," I remarked, nettled.

Henry glanced first at me and then at Agnes.

"I was not making my comparison," he said, probably observing that I was jealous for my sister, even if she was not for herself.

At supper I praised Agnes' biscuits. They were made of sour cream and I considered them delicious. Then, too, I knew she must have remembered my partiality to that kind and had made them expressly to please me.

"Rather too rich to be light enough," observed her husband. "Maggie made the lightest biscuits I ever saw, I think."

Agnes looked at me imploringly, so I said nothing, though I awfully longed to. I was disgusted at his overlooking the perfections of my excellent sister and constantly whining about the former Mrs. Mayne. If he thought so much of her, why had he not been true to her memory and remained a widower? It seemed to me it would have been more to the point to have bestowed a meed of praise upon the living wife occasionally, instead of constantly canting about the virtue of her predecessor. But in the first ten days of my stay I never heard a single compliment paid to Agnes by her husband, and if I tried to make up the deficiency myself, "Maggie was always lugged in, and her goodness extolled till I was sick and disgusted. I would have called him to order on the first night of my arrival but Agnes had made me promise not to, and every day kept reminding me of my promise."

"He does not mean anything offensive. It is right enough for him to love and admire his first wife. I am sure, if I had been a first wife it would have been a pleasant reflection that, if my husband survived me, he would still admire me and remember my virtues, even if he married again," was the way she excused him.

"Stuff and nonsense! A man or woman ought never to mention a first companion in a way to cause jealousy on the part of the second—for if you were like the majority of human beings, you'd be perfectly green with jealousy by this time. I'll venture to say, now, if you had been Mrs. Mayne No. 1, and Henry had extolled you to 'Maggie,' supposing her to have been Mrs. Mayne the second, to the extent he has her to you, she would have flown into a rage, and pulled every hair out of his head long ago."

When I had been with them about ten days Mamie came home from school.

"You'll find Mamie somewhat giddy," Henry remarked to Agnes as he was preparing to drive to the station to meet his sister. "She was always so in spite of Maggie's wise counsel and good example to help her."

I devoutly hoped that, giddy or not she would not join in the refrain when Henry chanted the former Mrs. Mayne's praises; for, hard as she struggled against the feeling and tried hard to hide it, I saw that this sort of thing was making Agnes' life miserable. I was prepared to detest Miss Mamie, but I was agreeably disappointed in her. She was a spirited brunette, whose only tendency to giddiness—at least all I could discover—was a habit of laughing unrestrainedly and using school-girl slang.

"How awfully much Becca is growing to look like you," she said to Henry one day when she had been there nearly a week.

"Do you think so? Now I think she more and more resembles her sainted mother every day."

Mamie looked puzzled a moment then burst out laughing.

"Fancy the Madonna with a turn-up nose!" she exclaimed.

"I don't understand you," said Henry.

"Didn't I understand you to say she looked like the Virgin? You said 'her sainted mother.'"

"I mean her natural, not her spiritual mother."

"Well, I reckon you wouldn't try to make Mag out a saint? If you would, what would you call Agnes?" she asked, with a frankness that seemed to annoy her brother.

"Agnes is a good woman, too," he replied, gravely.

"I should think so!" exclaimed Mamie, "Why, if you had made remarks about the pancakes to Mag as you did to Agnes this morning, she would have thrown the whole plateful in your face. So would I, for that matter. I shouldn't have been surprised to hear you call her a saint, but I think you must be losing your memory if you imagine Mag to have possessed any such thing as saintliness. My goodness, how she used to rake you over the coals!" rattled on the young lady, greatly to my amusement and Henry's discomfiture." I should think you'd miss something out of your life if Agnes is always like she is since I've been here. Never a day went over but you and Mag had a quarrel when I was at your house during her lifetime."

"I was entirely at fault," he said with a very red, embarrassed countenance. "I have tried to be very different with Agnes."

"Well," laughed Mamie, "It does me good to hear a man acknowledge that he is at fault about anything, but I can't say I entirely agree with you in this case. Now, there was that time she hit you over the head with the skillet because you insisted upon her wearing heavy shoes in wet weather. I don't really think—"

"Maggie is dead, you must remember," broke in Henry. "Would it not be well to let her rest peacefully in her grave?"

This same thought had sometimes occurred to me, during my stay there, when he had been constantly dragging her name into the conversation in most uncalled for places.

"I know it's customary to say nothing but good of the dead," replied saucy Mamie, "but I couldn't help calling these things to mind when you intimated that Mag was of an angelic disposition."

I could have embraced Miss Mamie for these utterances. However they may have wounded her brother's feelings, they were balm to mine. I will even admit that they were impudent and irreverent, but I thought they were deserved, and they had the good effect to save me from the annoyance of hearing anything more about the "departed angel" for some days.

One morning when Henry had gone to town, I sat in the sitting-room reading, Agnes was combing Becca's hair, and Mamie was idly turning over the books and looking through them.

"What an odd creature you are!" she exclaimed, suddenly turning to Agnes," "Here, you've got Mag's picture next to Henry's in your Bible."

"That was hers. Henry gave it to me a few days after we were married with a request that I leave it just as it was," replied Agnes.

"What did he give it to you for if he wanted to keep it undisturbed? To be aggravating?" inquired Mamie, indignantly. "If ever I have a husband you can bet your basic shekel no other woman's picture will have a place next his—request or no request. What excuse did he have the cheek to make for such a request, anyhow?"

"He said he should always love me next to—to—his first wife, and he gave me the Bible because it was hers, and I was the only person he felt willing should have it," exclaimed Agnes, embarrassed.

"And you didn't throw it at his head?" inquired Mamie, wonderingly. "Well, I must say you are a—shall I say a saint or simpleton, Mr. Harlen?" she asked, turning to me.

"Both," I said, half impatiently. Agnes' submission annoyed me.

"I don't see what makes Henry so ridiculous about his first wife," Mamie said, after Agnes had quitted the room. "I can see that it hurts Agnes to have him always making out that Mag was superior to her; but she wasn't by a long way. When they were first married she did seem real good, though no one could ever convince mamma that her goodness was sincere. She always declared she was a hypocrite, but she and Henry got along all right till old Dame Pigeontrot—that's Mag's mother—put in her appearance. I'll never forget what a spectacle she was the first time she came to see them. They were over at our house and she came there to see them. She was the hardest looking specimen of the human race I ever laid my eyes on. She wore a black dress sewn with white thread, a pair of shoes that certainly never had been blacked, and they were laced with wrapping-twine twisted and doubled. Her dress came to her shoe-tops in front and reached the floor behind her. But her looks were the best part of her. She was a Jezebel, let me tell you.

"Henry would have given anything to have kept us from finding out about her at home, but it was the talk of the neighborhood what a disagreeable old woman she was, and of course it reached our ears. Henry still held up for Mag, declaring she was not at all like the rest of her folks till one day mamma gave him her opinion, that it was possible, yet hardly probable, that a dove could be reared in a hawk's nest. You see we had heard about how the old lady was so aggravating, and set Mag up to such meanness that Henry had been obliged to ask his mother-in-law to leave; she had refused to do so, he had insisted, and when he went outside to work, Mag and her mother locked the door on him and kept him out until he agreed to maintain the old lady in a house of her own. He not only had to provide for her, but for all the rest of the family who made it a point to stay either at his house or at old Mrs. Pigeontrot's all the time.

"Mamma died about a year before Mag, and I lived with them part of the time, and I must say I can't see how Henry can forget the abuse he suffered at that woman's hands. She was the poorest cook and the most slovenly housekeeper I ever saw, yet I have heard him brag about her being perfect in both respects to Agnes since I've been here. It's more than I can do to hold my tongue, it aggravates me so to hear him."

"It is natural," I replied "to think and speak only good of the dead, though I am like yourself, I cannot see the justice in it. I presume the tragic manner of her death affected him greatly, and I have noticed in such instances a tendency to endow the dead with only good and forget all faults and failings."

"He told you about her being drowned, then?" she inquired.

"Yes."

"I presume he didn't tell you how it came about, did he?"

"He said she was going to her mother's on horseback, and when crossing the bridge across a deep narrow creek the bridge gave way."

"Oh, yes; that's all true. But her own stubbornness brought it about. Becca was only three weeks old at the time, and it had been raining all day; so when Mag took a notion to go to her mother's in the evening, Henry didn't want to take the baby, nor she either into the damp air. He told her the bridge was rotten and they would not dare cross it after such a deluge as had been that day, and they would have to go four miles around to the other bridge—too long a journey for either herself or the child on a stormy night. Well, she flew into a rage when she found he was not to be over-persuaded, and raved and stormed and pronounced all manner of imprecations upon the baby for ever having come into the world to bother her, and finally telling me to mind it went out doors. Pretty soon we heard the sound of a galloping horse and Henry ran out and saw her riding away towards her mothers. He followed in hot haste, hoping to reach her before she got to the bridge, but she beat him by a few rods and rode right on though I could hear him screaming to her not to venture clear to the house. The horse got out all right but it was too late when at last they got Mag's body. She was dead.

"When the tidings was carried to Dame Pigeontrot, she wanted to have Harry arrested because she declared it was all his fault. She pretended to take it awfully to heart, though she and Mag always quarreled and fought so before Mag was married that she couldn't stay at home. She finally contented herself by carrying away everything there was in the house, and even raised a row because she couldn't find Mag's fine shoes. I expect she thought Sister Callie or I hid them back, but they wouldn't have done either of us any good, as we both wear number three and hers were sixes, though I heard Henry tell Agnes last week that Mag wore twos and a half.

"When 'Mother Pigeontrot' found Callie and I were to take charge of the child, she was in a fine rage. She wanted Henry to let her keep it and pay her four dollars a week for doing so. He wouldn't do it, and she only shows herself once a year since. She pertends to come to see Becca, but really to get a few dollars from Henry. I heard she and her son were out west some place holding claims."

Not long after this bit of information was given me, Madame Pigeontrot appeared at Henry's in all the glory of a Mother Hubbard made of curtain calico, a pair of plowshoes, her hair done in a knot the size of a walnut, underneath a brown walking hat trimmed in green. She rode a lean, patient-looking broncho and affected the manners of a man. She, insisted that now, since Henry was married again, she should be intrusted with the care of Becca and be paid twelve dollars a month for her "keep," as she termed it. When Henry refused to comply with her demand, she heaped upon him, and Agnes likewise, epithets which were neither well-chosen nor elegant, and rode away shaking her fist at her ex-son-in-law and consigning his soul to the shades below.

He could scarcely look any of us in the face for a week or so, and, from that day to this, I have never heard his first wife's name pass his lips.

Feeding Wild Birds.

An English family has a custom of feeding wild birds regularly after breakfast. Opening the dining room window, they ring a bell, and immediately all kinds of birds, and sometimes even squirrels, come to the feeding place. A curious result of the custom is that numerous applicants are seen each morning waiting the sound of the bell, like many patients at a hospital.—New York Graphic.

MABRY AND MABRY.

The civil war of 1861, like all civil wars, furnished many instances of families and kindred taking opposite sides, and occasionally of their personally meeting and recognizing each other in the clash of arms or in matters connected directly with the struggle, so long and bravely persisted in by both sides. So many who entered the war to defend the government had connections in the south, who either voluntarily or through compulsion were in arms to sustain secession, that friend sometimes encountered friend, and brother raised his hand against brother. Even in the Southern States themselves there were differences of opinion, and relatives and even families divided themselves into Union and Confederate, backing up their opinions by joining the army of the side they preferred, and going into a conflict in which they might chance to meet face to face.

There lived in early times in Tennessee a man named James Patrick. An honest and sturdy pioneer, he lived to see a family grown around him and to caress a number of grandchildren, heirs to his many virtues, but died before the strife came on when the South assailed the Union.

His descendants had grown and multiplied, and scattered in the course of years, as all families will, until the younger members hardly knew each other. One of his daughters had intermarried with a Mabry, and this name was well known in North Georgia and East Tennessee at the time of the war, and, for that matter, is by no means extinct yet.

One of these Mabrys, a tall and stout man of about thirty years, of decided Union proclivities, became a member of the First Alabama Cavalry, a Union regiment. The fortunes of war had not been kind to him and in the winter of 1864-5, he found himself one of the prisoners of war in Andersonville, Georgia, having been captured in one of the numerous engagements which marked the march of Sherman to Atlanta.

It was there that I made his acquaintance. I found him a royal good fellow, full of pluck and endurance, and thoroughly inbued with Union principles. Even in that terrible stockade, where disease reigned unobstructed, and where the strongest felt that death was only a question of time, he was stout hearted and unflinching as if he knew how to baffle the approaches of the grim harvester who gathered his sheaves on every hand. If life might be prolonged Mabry was the man who would put forth every effort to prolong it.

He was one of the few Southern men who had the inventive talent of the Yankee. Had one not been sure he was a native of the South, he would have been supposed to be a New Englander by birth, for his ready adaptation of means to ends in the forbidding circumstances in which he was placed. He made combs of the horns of cattle, obtained by some means from without the stockade.

His tools were primitive, consisting mainly of a thin bladed caseknife, notched like a saw, a pocketknife, and pieces of wood between which he fastened the plate of horn while he laboriously sawed out the teeth by hand. He cut the horns into oblong strips with his pocetknife, applied heat to each piece, until it uncurled and became straight and flat, and then placing it in the wooden clamps, he used the caseknife saw to make the teeth, working with a patience and persistency which won him praise from the crowd of comrades who looked on, and who considered his work that of a born genius. The combs when complete would bring twenty-five cents each, greenback, or one dollar in Confederate money, and were disposed of to the gaurds by a process of smuggling, similar to that by which he obtained the raw material. Mabry could make about four combs a week when he could get horns promptly, and this number never overstocked the market.

Once as I was strolling about the stockade, which at that time, owing to deaths and delegations sent to Florence, Salsbury and other prisons, was not at all crowded, a good part of the thirty acres inclosed being but thinly inhabited, I had occasion to call my friend Mabry by name, as he was at a little distance. As he came toward me the Confederate guard, who was stationed in the sentry box, at the top of the stockode, and quite near us, though some twenty feet above our heads, called out:

"Hello, Yank, is your name Mabry?"

My fellow prisoner looked up surprised, for the guards were forbidden to talk to us, and said:

"Yes, Johnny, my name is Mabry, First Alabama Cavalry, Union."

The last words were spoken with some emphasis, as there was a Confederate First Alabama, with which he had not the least desire to be associated.

Guard—"Wall, Yank, my name is Mabry, too, I'm in the Third Georgia Militia here. It's odd you and me has the same name! What might your Christian name be?"

Prisoner—"My first name is James."

Guard—"Wall, I be blest if my name ain't James, too."

Prisoner—"Is it possible! Your name James Mabry! Have you any middle name?"

Guard—"Yes, I have, and proud of it. My full name is James Patrick Mabry."

Prisoner—"Good gracious! That's my name to a dot, James Patrick Mabry. We are different men, that's certain; but we must be some kin, I reckon."

Guard—"I was named James Patrick for my grandfather, who lived in East Tennessee."

Prisoner—"And I was named for my grandfather, James Patrick, who lived and died in East Tennessee."

To me, as doubtless it now appears to the reader, this was a peculiar incident, and full of lively interest. I looked at the stalwart Alabama cavalryman, tall, broad-shouldered and light-haired, and at the Third Georgia militiaman, about as tall, but lanker, of darker complexion, and black hair, but could see no resemblance. Yet each was named after the same James Patrick, a mutual grandfather, one was clothed in the blue of the Federal forces, now much soiled and ragged by constant wear in prison life; the other in a strong and new suit of home-made cotton cloth, tinged of a butternut color and decked with wooden buttons. No likeness there. One was a soldier of the United States the other one of the Georgia militia, which Governor Brown had so much contention to keep from Confederate control.

More striking than all else—one was a prisoner of war in the hands of enemies, subject to all the abuse and privations of such a condition—the other with musket in hand, guarding the prison and executing the stern decrees of military power upon its helpless inmates. There was no resemblance in their appearance, clothing or situation; in fact, a marked contrast throughout. Yet their names were identical and they were of the same ancestry.

During these engrossing reflections of mine their conversation had been continued. They had traced each other's lineage by mutual question and answer, and found they were in fact first cousins. The details of names of uncles, aunts, cousins and kin of various degrees, with occasional exclamations of astonishment, or corroboration, spun out their conversation to a great length and in minuteness not now remembered.

But there were the two Mabrys—one on guard, the other in the prison pen; one Union, the other Confederate—each with the same name exactly, and cousins.

How many more interviews they had I can not say, but my belief is that my Mabry laid the foundation for obtaining a more regular supply of horns, and a better market for his combs, and devoted himself with greater industry than ever to their manufacture.

* * * * * * *

About the middle of March, 1864, came orders to remove all the Federal prisoners from Andersonville. As usual, we were told this meant exchange, but we had been too often deceived to trust to such an announcement, though it was "a consummation devoutly to be wished." Nobody, however, grieved to leave Andersonville, for it was well known that any other prison would be, in some respects, an improvement, certainly none could be worse. The vast graveyard just outside the prison gates, which had received the bodies of some thirteen thousand of our comrades, always seemed speaking to us in the language of the old hymn—

"Ye living men, come view the ground:
Where ye shall shortly lie."—

Prisoners in detachments had been leaving Andersonville for a week before our turn came to march out. Mabry and I had become fast friends, and as soon as we were put on the cars for transportation to Savannah, as was told us for exchange, we determined to use every opportunity for escape. Our route lay nearly north to Ft. Valley, at which point the road to Savannah was to the eastward. Instead our train was headed to the west, which seemed to mean no exchange but another prison. Our plan of escape was soon made, though it took some time to execute.

We were confined in box cars, with four rebel guards to a car, two at each door with muskets crossed. In the end of the cars there was not much light even in day time. Our design was to escape by sawing a hole in the floor of the car near one end large enough to allow us to pass through, and then crawl out and spring off the train when it was going slow on an up grade.

We commenced work soon after leaving Ft. Valley, and from there to Opelika did not stop. The main trouble was to get even a small hole through the boards. By dent of working continuously with a pocket knife we at last succeeded and could feel the cool air coming through the crevice.

Now Mabry's comb saw, came into good service, and we worked with a will.

Cramped fingers and blistered hands were not regarded. The rattling of the train in motion drowned all the noise we made at work. How far beyond Opelika we were when we finished our labors, we did not know, but we knew we had been working all night, and it was toward morning. Now came the crisis of all our labor, and I being the smaller ventured first. I let myself down through the hole, found something underneath to cling to until I worked myself to where I could come up between the cars. I climbed up and signaled Mabry as agreed, by three taps on the end of the car that I was out and ready to disembark as soon as he joined me. Then he followed, and soon stood beside me. No guards were in sight, the train was running slowly; so far success had attended us. I jumped first and he followed me, both alighting safely. We lay down until the train had all passed, and then immediately took to the woods.

Once more we were free, at least, masters of our own movements for the time, but hundreds of miles intervened between us and the Union lines, and to whatever point we might travel our way led through a hostile country where the greatest watchfulness would be needed to avoid recapture.

After consultation, we decided to shape our course towards Pensacola and endeavor to enter our lines there. For three days we traveled through lonesome woods, waded streams and threaded our way through thick underbrush and swamp, approaching occasionally a negro hut or a plantation for means of subsistence or to inquire our way. The slave was our fast friend, ever ready to help as far as able, and to the kind ministrations of the blacks we were indebted constantly. They gave us food, guided us in by paths, hid us in the safest places while we slept and passed us on to others as faithful and willing as themselves.

One day we struck a road on which evidently troops had passed a short time before. Listening intently we heard the sounds of others approaching, and quickly concealed ourselves in the underbrush by the side of the road. The tramp of horses, the jangling of sabers and the hum of voices came nearer and nearer, and soon troops of some kind were passing us. Mabry peered out, gave one glance and then immediately sprang up, waved his hat and shouted:

"Hurrah! for the United States!"

Telling me to follow him, he stepped boldly into the road to find a line of Union cavalry stretching as far back as we could see. Thank God, soldiers; friends, comrades! What emotions of joy surged through our hearts. It was a detachment of General Wilson's army making the last raid of the war.

They came around us, surprised at our appearance, and hardly knowing whether to take us for friends or foes. General Long, commanding an Ohio cavalry brigade, came riding up, stopped, questioned us sharply and ordered us to be held under surveillance until the arrival of the First Alabama Cavalry, which was further back in the column, and the meantime to treat us well and supply our pressing wants.

In an hour Mabry's old regiment appeared, and he was joyfully recognized. Both of us were soon clad as the rest, mounted on spare horses and riding in the ranks, rejoicing in the swift and fortunate change that had come upon us, and telling the story of our prison experience and escape to eager listeners. We also had questions to ask, as to how the war was progressing and what was the purport of the present raid. They told us they had been riding through from Northern Alabama to Selma, had captured that city after a sharp fight, had turned east to Montgomery, which had yielded, and the course was now toward Columbus, Georgia, and where else was not known.

In less than two days we reached the Chattahoochie River, opposite the city of Columbus. Here were signs of opposition. A strong line of intrenchments seemed full of men, prepared to resist us, while the long bridge over the river at Columbus, well guarded, was all of cotton and inflammable materials, ready to be fired as soon as the occasion required. General Long sent a regiment, dismounted, to slip cautiously down a ravine which led to the bridge, and as soon as they were in view of the enemy to charge on the bridge furiously. This was done, and it was taken in spite of opposition. The charge was continued across the bridge until the whole of it was gained by the National forces, and Columbus was virtually in our hands. In the meantime a brigade had been formed in line to assault the intrenchments. The First Alabama taking a part in this, Mabry and I participated. A few irregular volleys had no effect upon our advance, and we soon, with loud cheers, gained the breastworks and found the rebels in full retreat. They were followed and nearly all captured, proving to be a regiment of Georgia militia, lately from Andersonville.

Recognizing one of them as lately a gate sergeant at Andersonville, a fat and rather good humored man, whom we in the prison had nicknamed "Chuffy," I spoke to him, and, after reminding him who I was and how I knew him, I asked him what he thought of the Yankees now.

"When we were guarding you'uns in Andersonville, you were tame Yanks, and not much trouble to boss you around. But these wild Yanks, with guns in their hands, don't stop fo' nobody. We shot owah guns off at 'em, but they nevah stopped comin', so we thought we'd bettah run. I don't take no stock in wild Yanks, and I wish this wah was done stopped."

"Are not you the man who said to us prisoners often at Andersonville, 'We'll fight you as long as we see you, and then lick the ground where we last seed you?"

"Wall, if it was me, I'm gwine to take it back. There is one tune sung befoah fightin', and another one sung aftah bein' whipped. I'm in fo' peace, now, and if I get through with this, I'll promise nevah to try to break up any mo' gov'ments."

I had lost sight of Mabry in the excitement of the assault and pursuit, and after some search found him in charge of a squad of newly captured rebels. He called my attention to a lank, cadaverous looking Confederate, exclaiming:

"Sergeant, see this prisoner, this is my double. He's the very identical Johnny, who has my name, and stood guard over me at Andersonville on the old stockade! But," he added with pardonable exultation, "things have changed; the bottom rail is on top. I'm on guard now, and he's my prisoner. But I'm going to treat him better than he and his folks did me."

Thus the two James Patrick Mabrys had met again. The guard had become a prisoner and the prisoner had become a guard. The fratricidal nature of the war had again been exemplified.

Columbus was ours. We moved on Macon, Georgia, sending a detachment to Andersonville which captured the notorious Captain Wirz, keeper of the prison, and some of his subordinates. At Macon, the news met us of a cessation of hostilities, as Johnston's and Lee's armies had surrendered, and the war was virtually over. Only one more exploit was allowed us, that was the capture of the Ex-President of the Southern Confederacy by a portion of our force. Then we separated, I going to Ohio to be mustered out, the Mabrys each a different way as ordered. Though I have never met them since, they have doubtless met each other in peaceful homes, and recounted to their children the incidents I have here related of how Mabry met Mabry. May the name of James Patrick still continue among their families to future generations.

The Vampire of Roumania.

Blackwood's Magazine.

In the "nosferatu," or vampire, every Roumanian peasant to this day as a firm believer, and doubtless much of his cumbrous funeral ceremonial is intended to prevent the dead from entering upon evil courses after their burial. This terrible plague of vampire is as contagious as the small-pox. Let a vampire once get out of his grave and suck the blood of an innocent person, that person is at once inoculated and only waits for his death and burial to break out for the gratification of his unclean tastes and to propagate the plague in fresh quarters. A village where vampirism was prevalent on a large scale must have enjoyed the same cheerful sense of security as a district feels when it lies in the path of an advancing wave of cholera. The common remedy is to open the grave of the vampire and drive a stake through the body, which, we have been told, is always fresh, plump and in good condition, or, in cases of extreme obstinacy in this reprehensible practice, to "cut off the head and replace it in the coffin with the mouth filled with garlic; or "to extract the heart and burn it, strewing the ashes over the grave." Less irreclaimable vampires may be settled by firing a pistol-shot into the coffin, or even by walking round the grave smoking on the anniversary of the vampire's death. A thorny sprig of wild rose laid across the coffin is also of service.

It is reported that 45,000 Poles and Hungarians landed in New York recently and were shipped to the coal mines of Pennsylvania.

The Derisive Snort of Satan.

Once, while traveling horseback through a rough section of Tennessee. I "fell in" with a nomadic preacher, He was one of the courageous evangelist who fight down every physical disadvantage that they may spread spiritual consolation, and neither cold winds nor the greasiest and most dyspeptic fare could turn him from an apostolic course which he had mapped out. In the course of two days' travel together we became somewhat confidential. I told him I was traveling in the interest of a great nepspaper, writing up the peculiarities of the people; he told me he had with him five hundred dollars, which a former congregation had just paid him for one year's service.

"Don't you think," said I, "that you acted unwisely in bringing the money with you?"

"No, for I had no place to leave it,' he replied. "I am but little acquainted with the ways of business, but I know enough of banks not to have any confidence in them.'

One night we stopped at a wayside house. We occupied the same room.

"Don't you think," said I, as we were preparing to go to bed, "that it would be better to put your money under your pillow?"

"No, I don't think so," he replied. "I am but little acquainted with the ways of the world, but I know that under a man's pillow is about the first place a robber searches."

He placed a candle and some matches near the bed. It must have been about midnight when the pop and flash of a match startled me into wakefulness. A negro stood in the center of the room, holding the preachers pantaloons in his hand. My friend sprang out of bed, but before he could say anyting, the negro sank upon his knees, held up his hands and said:

"Marster, lissun ter me one minit. I knows dat I oughter be sent ter jail, but fo' you sends me jes' let m cummunercate er little. Shortly after you genermen went ter bed, ole Satan got inter my heart he did. He tole me dat dar must be money in dis yere room. Says I, Mr. Satan, you git right straight behind me now, case what is it ter me ef dar is money in dat room? It doan 'long to me, Mr. Satan, an' you oughter know dat fack. Go on erway an' let me erlone.' 'Silas,' says he, you'se er fool; you'se been workin' fur white folks all yo' life an' you ain't got nothin' yit. How long you gwine go on dis way? Gwine let de folks grind you un'er da feet?' 'Mr. Satan,' s' I, 'wush you would go on erbout yo' bizness, fur I ain't got no conwersation wid you,' but he kep' ergittin' closer ter me, an' at las', not bein' able ter stan him, I slipped up yere, tuck yo' money an' went down. Satan wuz gone, an' I gunter think, an' den I gunter pray. Sunthin' 'peared ter say, 'Whut's de use'n prayin' long ez you got dat stolen money in yo' pocket?' an' den de tears o' sorrow gunter gush outen my eyes. Oh, I felt that my po' soul waz dun los', and it peared to me dat I hearn old Satan er-standin' at de corner o' de house er snickerin' fit ter kill hisse'f. Marster, I couldn't stan' it no longer an' I creeped back up sta'rs an' wid er pr'ar in my heart, I wuz puttin' de money back in yo' britches w'en you woke up an' lit dat can'le. Now, sah, you may me take ter jail. Jes take me er way an' I won't say er word, fur I'se lessened ter de voice o' old Satan, an' hab described it all. Put er rope roun' my naik, marster, an' lead me er way."

He bowed his head and tears gushed from his eyes. The preacher was deeply moved. "Poor creature," said he, you yielded to a temptation, but your determination to replace the money proves that you have an impressive and generous soul. I will not have you sent to prison—I will forgive you, will pray for you."

"Oh, marster, marster, may de Lawd bless you fur dis. I will go back ter my cabin, sah, an' pray."

I was also deeply moved, for I could see that the old negro was sincere. He shook our hands just before leaving the room, and in his own peculiar way, begged us never to forget that we had seen a man whose soul had been stricken. When he had gone my friend said:

"I do not believe in a personal devil and yet there is almost enough proof to convince me there is. That poor old negro suffered just as much as though he really heard the derisive snort of Satan."

Next morning, as we were dressing, the preacher remarked: "I hope that negro slept well after his agonized repentance. I have done so much at the mourner's bench that—merciful heavens, I have been robbed! my money is gone!"

We hurried down stairs and informed the landlord. The old negro was gone. A party of men volunteered their services, and late that eveving the old rascal was captured. He showed us the place where he had hidden the money. My friend did not again refer to the "derisive snort of Satan."—New York Mercury.

Where Alligators are Badly Needed.

From the Fort Myers Press.

Since the year 1870 water has not been so scarce on the cattle range as it is at the present time, so it is reported.

In the indiscriminate killing of the alligators one great source of supply of water has been obliterated from the cattle country, because when the 'gators held a water hole they always kept the mud pushed up the banks, and when even hundreds of cattle would come to the 'gator wallows to drink, and by crowding and pushing succeeded in filling it up, Mr. Alligator and his family would soon repair the damage by digging and pushing back the mud.

Now the cattle stand around these old wallows, which are almost entirely dried up, waiting patiently for rain. As it is, they exist only by eating the grass nights and early mornings that is heavily coated with dew.

If rain does not come soon the cattle men will be forced to dig for water, and, as there are a great many thousand cattle it would seem an almost impossible task to supply them. Another plan is to drive them to the rivers, but on account of the numbers of the cattle scattered over hundreds of miles it would be an endless task, and could scarcely be accomplished in time to do any good. A great many cattle are going into the everglades in search of water.

Our Prospects.

Never before in the history of Polk County has the outlook for a prosperous season for the farmer, (and hence for every other business interest) been so bright as this spring. While in many localities the spring has been extremely backward, owing to snow, cold weather and excessive rains the season here, while somewhat colder and later has been very favorable for seeding operations and our wheat has all been sown under very favorable conditions. The threatened drouth that many feared has been broken by refreshing rains and there now seems nothing to prevent our usual good crops if, indeed, we may not expect a better one. Then, everything indicates a good price in the fall. The surplus proves to be many millions less than was confidently counted on, winter wheat, it is said will be, if not an almost (entire failure, a very poor crop; the area sowed to spring wheat, (except in Minnesota and Dakota) is far less than usual, owing to the discouraging past and cold and wet; then we have a good prospect of the establishing of an independent line of elevators, capable of handling all of our wheat which will create a healthy competition and do more to establish a fair price for wheat than all we have been able to accomplish by legislation. So bright indeed are the prospects, that we think it safe to predict a prosperous future for our new country, the dawn of which prosperity is already breaking and we are justified in taking courage afresh and looking with great confidence to the future. There are at least hundreds of places where the prospects are still discouraging and there is none with a brighter future than the valley has before it.

Oh! Let Up!

Bro. McGrew, in his issue of the 15th made a bad blunder but the Bulletin, in attempting to defend Thompson, makes a worse. Mr. McGrew was mistaken in his diagnosis of the case and his expressions only showed that great and good men CAN make mistakes, can get mad, and when their mad is up can make a very ridiculous mess of it, but all the same that does not furnish the Bulletin any excuse for opening its mud batteries upon him in the style that it did, and the attack will injure the Bulletin by far the most. Mr. McGrew is known to be as honest and upright a man as there is in Polk County and he must be a very superior kind of a man who can injure him in the minds of all who know him. We are sorry to see this spirit crop out in this campaign. It can do no good and may do much harm to the party. It is certainly very unseemly for a young man like Mr. Knappen, an almost entire stranger in the county too, to attack a man of Mr. McGrew's age and standing in the community—a man who was valiantly fighting to save his country when the boy was not yet out of his swaddling clothes. If the Bulletin is guided by wisdom it will let up on that style of journalism.

It is Not Blaine.

Again Mr. Blaine repeats that he is not before the American people as a candidate for President and yet there are those who in face of all this still insist that he is not in earnest but would accept if nominated. We should think this thing had been rendered emphatic enough so that even his most enthusiastic friends would begin to tumble by this time and look elsewhere. We believe Mr. Blaine sincere, and that, should the nomination be given him he would decline. This would throw the nomination into the hands of the committee and no matter what kind of a ticket they put in the field it would be liable to defeat. We do not think Mr. Blaine could have been elected in any event and far less if he should accept after the stand he has taken. While Mr. Blaine is one of the leading minds of the age and has a hold upon the American people that amounts almost to idolatry yet his well-known position on the tariff renders him unavailable as a candidate. Four years ago this subject had not been forced home upon the people as it has since been and if he could not be elected then it is the height of folly to attempt it now. No, it must be some other mind that shall lead the Republican party to victory and we believe that mind is found in Walter Q. Gresham. He is the man we wish to see nominated because with him we believe the Republican party can win the victory.

Self Defence.

Fisher Bulletin: In an article in the last issue of the Chronicle, Mr. McGrew, amongst other things, accuses me of being an aspirant for representative in the forthcoming legislature. Now while I do not desire that my friends should think I would not duly appreciate the honor of a nomination, yet I wish it particularly understood that my business is such that I am unable to, and I would not under any circumstances accept the distinction, and where Mr. McGrew got his information as to my reputed ambition I am unable to conceive, unless it were out of his own fertile imagination. With regard to the slate the angry editor has fixed up for me, however imaginary it may be one thing I will say, they are all good men, and did they receive or whoever does receive the nomination at the hands of the party at the forthcoming convention, will have, as they always have done in the past my undivided and hearty support. Moreover not one of the names of the gentlemen mentioned on Mr. McGrew's slate ever occurred to me as aspirants to office, nor did I ever mention the point to them. For the last eight years I have gone into the convention of Polk County and asked for the recognition of some of my friends by the party, and have as invariably met with rebuff. Yet I would ask Mr. McGrew if he or anyone else ever heard me make the remark that my rebuff "would be the bursting up of the republican party in Polk County?" a statement he made in the last convention when suffering under defeat. On the contrary, I have always submitted to the action of the convention, and went out and devoted my time and means to the good of the party as expressed in the convention, and shall always continue in the same line of duty.

Respectfully,

HUGH THOMPSON.

The democrats in the fifth district showed good sense when they chose Wm. Anglin as delegate to St. Louis. He is one of the solid men of the county and a credit to any party.

That Missing Girl.

We have seen in several papers the statement made that the girl that was lost on the praire last fall has been found; that she had been captured by Indians, taken to Manitoba and kept all winter; that she was found with a wandering band and reclaimed by her friends. This statement undoubtedly refers to Oleanna, the little daughter of Bernt Abrahamson who was lost near Russia Station last fall and while we should rejoice if the story was true, we fear there is nothing in it. Mr. J. H. Locken, who took great interest in the case last fall discredits the story as he has interviewed several of Mr. Abrahamson's neighbors and they say that a white boy was seen with a strolling band of Indians recently and this fact doubtless gave rise to the story. Mr. Locken is of the opinion that if the girl had been found Mr. A. would have notified him at once so that the public might be informed.

Obituary.

Gjermond T. Eiken, who died in this city on May 14th, 1888, was born March 9th, 1847 in the southern part of Norway. He came to America in 1851 and settled in Houston County. From there he removed to Moorhead in the spring of 1877, living there until the spring of 81 when he came to this city engaging in the hardware business in company with his two brothers Andrew and K. T., continuing thus until Jan. 1st, 87, when Andrew retired. By strict attention to business the firm has built up a good and growing trade. Mr. Eiken was the oldest of a family of five boys and three girls, six of whom are now living. He was a faithful and consistent member of the Norwegian Lutheran church, highly respected by all with whom he came in contact. For some years he has been in feeble health, threatened with consumption, and he had also suffered at times from the disease that finally carried him off. For the last few days of his life his sufferings were fearful to behold but all through it he manifested a brave spirit of christian resignation, expressing a readiness to die if so it pleased his Master. His life, though short in years, was replete in christian graces and his was a noble example of the power of christianity. His funeral on Wednesday was largely attended, a procession of 56 carriages following the remains to the last resting place.

The 17th of May, Norway's Independence Day was duly celebrated on Thursday. The parade formed at 1:30 in the following order:

Marshall of the Day, Sheriff Paulsrud
Platoon of Police
Crookston Cornet Band
Crookston Fire Department
Norden Society
Citizens in Carriages.

After parading through the principal streets the procession proceeded to Dobson's grove where merry-making, speeches &c. were the order of the day. Speeches were made by Hon. Halvor Steenerson, J. G. McGrew, D. Hatlestad Esq. and the orator of the day, F. A. Husher Esq. In the evening a grand ball was given at McKinnon's Hall. The ardor of Crookston's Norwegian citizens was dampened by the sad scenes of the 16th, when they followed the remains of one of their most prominent members to his last resting place.

We find it our duty to let the public know that we are agents for the best sewing machine, Domestic. We also have in stock two lighted windows and a general stock of sash and doors.

"The White is King."

The ladies of Crookston and vicinity are invited to attend a decorative art reception to be given by the White Sewing Machine Company at the store on Robert Street recently occupied by Peter Berg, on Saturday, May 26th, Monday, May 28th and Tuesday May 29th. This display comprises a varied and expensive array of etchings and embroideries executed in arrasene, tinsel, gold thread, crewell, chenille, silk, etc. Call and see how you can make your home more beautiful by embellishments of your own creating.

The Indian Summer Time.

A beautiful son and chorus by Will L. Thompson, author of Gathering Shells on the Sea Shore, Come where the Lillies Bloom, etc.

It is one of the prettiest songs ever published; any music dealer will mail it for 40 cents, Published by Busted Dams.

News reached the city last week that one of T. B. Walker's dams on the Clearwater had given way and hundreds of logs were scattered about over swamps and inaccessible places. We asked Mr. Taylor about it later and understood him to say that the whole dam business had gone out, but as yet they had no knowledge of the extent of the loss and what effect it would have on the summer's cut. He is inclined to think that a dry summer would limit the cut very materially.

Tough On The Boys.

Mr. McGrew, in the issue of the Chronicle of May 15th says:

"This farce of Mr. Thompson's meant, in his mind much more than many have supposed. It meant that he (Thompson) is to be a candidate for representative next fall, O. A. Thorson for county treasurer, E. E. Lommen, perhaps for auditor, Mr. Williams, county attorney &c., &c., through the whole list."

Commenting upon this in his last issue, editor Knappen, of the Bulletin remarks that such a ticket would be liable to be busted into everlasting smithereens, and, as a clincher adds:

"We doubt if a single politician in Polk County, excepting the editor of the Chronicle, is IDIOTIC enough to make such a slate!"

Well, now that is pretty rough on McGrew, but don't it strike you as pretty tough on the boys, Knap? It looks like a sort 'o double-back-actioned business that kicks harder at one end than tother, ain't it?

Excursion Rates.

A very complete list of tourist round trip rates and routes to western points for 1888, has just been issued for free distribution by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. P. M. & M. Ry, St. Paul, Minn. [4-9]

Letter From D. Hatlestad.

[CONCLUDED.]

From Woonsocket, by way of Mitchel, the county seat of Davison county, to Chamberlain I passed over high and well drained prairies. This land is of good quality and from the test put to it by eight to ten years continual cultivation by settlers occupying it, the land has proved to be of a quick and fertile quality as well as durable. It lies in the southern part of Dakota and stretches from the eastern part or boundary of the territory to and beyond the Missouri river in the reservation of the Sioux about 50 or 60 miles which is as far as I went beyond that famous stream. On the east side of this river over that wide country numerous towns and villages have sprung up as it were by some magic power, and what is more strange, that same country, though far from timber and the markets of the world, has supported and is to-day proving to the unbelievers of the east that it, from its own resources still continues to support thousands of happy homes and cities, and even the extravagant territorial officials to a great extent have been upheld and supported by this tract of country. Nobody visiting this part of the country can tell to what extent it will rise in wealth, enterprise and importance. The lamp of Patrick Henry undoubtedly has been followed by enterprising people who have made out of a wilderness a garden and abode for mankind, where churches school houses and society now grow up together, in harmony and prosperity. The products here consists mainly of wheat, oats, barley, corn, vegetables of all kinds, and stock-raising. The corn raising and cattle seem to take the lead, as the season is long and warm well suited to raising corn and to make the expense of wintering stock very reasonable by cutting the winter short. The long, narrow corn-cribs on the farms and at railroad stations, the corn-shellers run by horse power or steam, the rolling surface of the land and the mild and steady climate all remind the traveler of some such country as Iowa or Wisconsin. Now I wish to state that the country extending on either side of the Missouri about 6 to 8 miles is quite hilly and broken, with high and tapering hills, between which small, narrow and fertile valleys abound. By following these valleys you will be surprised to find that they by a gradual rise will carry you to some elevated rolling prairie land in the interior. The bottom lands of the Missouri in places are quite extensive as for instance at Chamberlain, where the banks of the river are very high, from 30 to 50 feet, at the level of which a fine sloping plain bounded by the hills on the east and the river on the west is a fine and romantic place for a town of any size. The river here is about one mile wide. In the center of this river in front of the town of Chamberlain there is an island about four miles long and one mile wide which divides the river in two parts of equal volume and half mile of water on either side of the island. On this island there is heavy timber all over the level surface. This island belongs to the town of Chamberlain and is intended for a public park. Chamberlain is the county seat of Brule county and has about 1000 inhabitants. The buildings are of lumber and red brick, the latter being manufactured there at home. Opposite Chamberlain is the big Sioux reservation, and the southern boundary of that part about to opened to settlement is about 12 or 15 miles south of Chamberlain. About seven miles southwest is the Brule agency located on the Missouri. In company with Mr. Pearson, a jeweler, and Mr. Murrill, a blacksmith, I started across the river to visit this agency and the adjoining country. At the agency there is quite a number of houses, such as churches, schoolhouses, stores, carpenter and blacksmith shops, doctor office and residences, all built at the government's expense. We visited the school and found two lady teachers, among 25 or 30 pupils. We listened to the recitations and had to confess that we were happily surprised in learning that the pupils by far surpassed our expectations, and the teachers informed us that these little Indians were just as easily governed as any white children and that they were just as apt in music as well as any other branch. The stores except the drug store were managed by Indian clerks. Likewise Indians were blacksmiths, wagon-makers, carpenters, and painters, machine experts, as well as expert farmers on the farm managed in connection with this industrial school. The Indian police of the Brule agency are always vigilant. Of course we were some greenhorns from some tribe foreign to these Indian police and knew not their ways and customs, consequently we walked about their little burg up one street and down the other, when suddenly to our great consternation one burley painted looking Indian police called, "How—you walk here, no pay." This was about dinner time, the sun was shining brightly, and everything with the exception of our new companion was indicative of peace, yet this "How" caused us to shiver in our boots. But finally he made us understand that we should see the doctor and he would tell us where dinner was to be had for money. We took his advice and paid twenty-five cents for a good dinner, and both the Indian and we were happy. The tract of land to be opened stretches from the Missouri River west to the Black Hills country, and lies between the Cheyenne, on the north, and White River, on the south. This country is well watered by many streams, tributaries of the rivers mentioned. This tract is divided into counties, named in order, from east to west, Lyman, Fresho, Stanley, Pratt, Jackson, Nowlin, Sterling and Yrebach. At right angles with this tract, extending to the north, the following counties will be opened in the same bill: Scoby, Delano, Rinehart, Chateau, Wagner, Martin and Hettinger. This tract is said to contain over eleven million acres, and all of it is in close reach of the pine, mineral and coal fields of the Black Hills. The Northwestern road and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road are both pointing for the Hills, and without doubt will build their roads as soon as they will be permitted. The bill provides, among other things, that this land shall be opened to homestead settlers only, who shall reside on their claims four years and pay fifty cents per acre before final proof can be made. The intention is that every quarter section shall be open for different settlers, and instead of allowing the land to be taken by a few, it affords equal chance to the many who will swarm in there for lands and homes. But it will take some time before the land will be opened and settlers allowed to settle. The first that remains to be done is the appointment of a commission who are to deal or treat with the Indians for their consent. To agree on commissioners and to get some western man may cause some delay, and may take two or three months. To make the treaty may take another two months, and finally, to make the proclamation and fixing the land offices at Chamberlain and Pierre, in compliance with the law passed in 1886, will perhaps take four months more. To give reasonable time for every move, I think six or eight months will be required before entries can be made. But after the treaty is made and the Indians have given up their title in the lands, then the squatters will settle on their claims.

This is a short description of what I observed and learned on my trip beyond the great Missouri, and it will conclude my letter, and my promise contained in my former letter to THE JOURNAL, has been fulfilled.

D. E. HATLESTAD.

Our usually honest and candid neighbor of the Chronicle is very evidently spoiling for a controversy with THE JOURNAL, or else he has not recovered from his severe attack of dyspepsia yet and this week he still insists that it was a Thompson caucus and that we were terribly wicked in being in it or taking active part. We do not desire a controversy with him in the matter and do not propose to have one but when he so persistently misrepresents us, it is but an act of justice to reply still we shall not do so in the spirit that he manifests, for we can see very plainly that he is very angry and an angry man is hardly responsible for the things he says in the heat of anger. Yes, we said, and we repeat and we can prove if necessary that "the delegates met in caucus on Friday morning where everybody was free to express an opinion and made up a list of delegates to each convention," and we will add that all who wished to expressed their opinion freely and made nominations, some of the McGrew clique even nominating candidates. Is there anything out of the way with a caucus? Did Mr. McGrew never participate in, or hear of one before? "If this be so why did he deny in convention that a slate had been made up?" Because it is false, as charged, and we repeat the denial for the same reason. Mr. McGrew approached us in great excitement in the convention and charged that we had been instrumental "with a few persons in a back room, at night in putting up a slate with which to gag this convention!" This accusation made by him we as emphatically denied then as we do now and now Mr. McGrew is trying to distort what we did say into the denial of the existence of printed caucus tickets. Yes sir, we did say that a different set of delegates were elected all round than were nominated in the caucus, for instance on the caucus ticket we were not mentioned for the Crookston convention but after Mr. McGrew made his ferocious and wholly uncalled for attack upon us in the convention we decided to try and get into that convention if we could. There were other changes made also which can, if necessary be easily shown. We were not aware that our suggestions, before the convention, that that body send no one but a man in sympathy with the views of Polk County on the tariff was an attempt to "gag anybody," and Mr. McGrew's great effort to distort and pervert our sayings and actions in this instance is a fair sample throughout his whole article. Again he says: "we did object to the statement that there were a few men in Crookston who wanted to name all of the delegates—a statement that the editor of THE JOURNAL knew to be false when he joined in with it." How we could join in with a statement we never heard made puzzles us to see clearly, but we must confess that anyone seeing Mr. McGrew's position in that convention could hardly be blamed if he got that idea. That Mr. McGrew made mistakes both in and after the convention is clear to be seen; that he was bitterly disappointed in furthering his own personal plans is quite evident but how he can hope to benefit himself by such gross misrepresentations of others, and such unseemly exhibitions of spleen we fail to see. The only solution we can arrive at is that "Mac is mad," and when mad is very liable to act like other human beings.

Wheat has taken a tumble of two cents, making one hard 70 cents.

Farmers about through seeding except a little barley in a few cases.

The long looked for rain is here and farmers wear smiling faces.

Wm. Cronkhite, assessor, has been sizing us all up this week.

Frank Platte expects to start for his home in Nebraska soon. He has been visiting cousins here, the Misners and Chapins.

H. C. Misner has been making quite extensive additions to his residence which is fully appreciated by the ladies of the household.

Mr. McLosey was taken very sick again last week, but is now reported to be on the mend.

Mr. C. C. Knappen of the Fisher Bulletin visited this place on Tuesday in the interest of his paper.

Mrs. H. G. Losey has decided to continue the grocery business at this place. She has taken hold herself since the death of her husband.

Miss Katie Kennedy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archy Kennedy, died at their home on the ridge, Sunday evening, of consumption. Miss Kennedy has been a sufferer from this terrible disease for many months and her parents and friends have been expecting her death for some time. She leaves an aged father and mother and several brothers and sisters as well as a host of friends to mourn her loss.

Mr. Breshear, a Sunday School Missionary, has been visiting Rev. J. R. Crum for a few days. He delivered a a very able discourse from Rev. Crum's pulpit last Sabbath. We predict a bright future for the young man.

A number of ladies and gentlemen met at the residence of Mrs. H. C. Misner last evening for the purpose of a good old fashioned sing, and judging from the noise they made, they must have had it.

Charlie Misner has been visiting our city for a day or two. Charlie still retains his natural gift, even the dumb brutes seem to remember him. C. E. Harrington's Jack demonstrated his recognition of him as soon as he appeared on the street. Come often Charlie.

E. C. Murney, our village blacksmith reports business rushing, and says there is a fine opening for a wagon maker here.

M. E. Kirsch returned from the convention at St. Paul looking happy. Hard to tell which the Judge is most pleased with, the convention, or the balcon ascension.

E. Taylor & Co want 10,000 bushels of oats at market prices. Go and see them.

J. A. Moad, carpenter and joiner, says he has all the work he and his crew can do at present. Sie is a rustler.

Fred Tiedt has put up a swing to help pass away the time. Merchants are having a vacation during seeding time. Fred and the swing are popular with the girls.

Robt. Teal the new proprietor of the Keystone House reports business quite lively. We would say to the traveling public that the house is first class in every respect, is neat, orderly, and is unsurpassed in the county outside of the cities. Call and see him.

Mr. Casmey, brother of Robert Casmey, is going to Canada for his family soon. That's right, we need all of such families we can get. We will be glad to welcome them.

Quite a number of our young folks went to Fisher on the 16th to see and hear Eli Perkins. They report Fisher a promising little burg, and say that "Eli got there" in fine sape.

Dr. McGillan, of Warren, came down Friday for a day, to visit partner Dr. Chapin and other friends here. The Doctor is doing well, we are pleased to hare.

Col. George Post, No. 173, Is Organized With Proper Ceremonies.

Fertile Journal: On Monday last quite a little stir was noticable on our streets owing to the arrival in our midst of several distinguished gentlemen from Crookston, who came down for the purpose of assisting in the organization of a Grand Army Post in Fertile. Prominent among these gentlemen were: O. H. Lucken, County Treasurer; B. F. Zaracher, ex-sheriff; W. H. Peake, W. H. Jennings, G. H. Holt, and Thos. Harris.

In the evening while the organization ceremonies were in progress, the Fertile band in full uniform, marched up in front of the hall and tendered the "vets" a serenade by playing some of the old patriotic airs. Flags were immediately waved from the windows, and an adjournment took place, Mr. Lucken thanked the boys in behalf of the Grand Army and particularly the Col. George post, saying that the sound of the old pieces made them all forget their age and seem young again.

The post starts out with a very fair membership. The list of members is: J. H. Pelham, Geo. Wagner, Geo. Chase, E. W. Winslow, Ole Renne, D. W. Cable, W. K. Bartlett, H. C. Burdick, A. J. Hamre, John Dunn, Geo. W. Johnson, A. Lafeb.

Geo. Wagner was elected Officer of the Day and Geo. Johnson Quartermaster. The next regular meeting of the post will occur on the afternoon of May 30th, at which time appropriate services will be held.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

Warren Register: Guy Aubol, the hardware man, met with an accident on Monday, that resulted in the loss of that fierce mustache which he has so long worn, and which was his special pride and pet. While throwing shavings into the stove from a box, the flames burst out of the door with the explosive force of gunpowder, burning his mustache off to the skin in some places, also his eyebrows and hair on the front part of his head, necessitating a close shave of the mustache and a close clip of the hair, to even up things. It was a "close shave', for his eyes when the flames struck him in the face, but fortunately they were not injured.

C. E. Ford received a telegram last Friday announcing the death of his eldest daughter in Des Moines, Iowa. He left on the evening train for that city. Since he has been in business here he has made many friends and they all sympathize with him in his sorrow.

F. Snyder, wheat buyer at Fertile, for Stowell & Thorpe, spent Sunday with his old friend, D. E. Fulton.

Miss Julia Sullivan, of Kittson, spent Sunday with her parents.

A dance was held at the Davis hotel Saturday evening. All who attended say they had a splendid time.

Three of a Kind.

K. O. Flakne was injured in trying to stop his runaway team, Chas. Swebb's horse got frightened and stepped on his foot and C. M. Ohl was thrown from a broncho in a race. All have painful bruises, but are able to be out.

Deidrick Aansen's house was nearly destroyed by fire yesterday morning. Had it not been for the timely assistance of Mr. O. N. Olslund we believe it would have been destroyed.

One day last week Mr. Herriott benefitted the county and helped to beautify his already pretty place by planting over one hundred trees.

Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of New York, an ally of the Democratic party lectured on prohibition at the Beltrami school house last evening.

At the meeting Saturday evening of the James G. Blaine Republican club, H. B. Budd was elected vice president. It was voted to hold the regular meetings every other Saturday, at 8 p. m. The next meeting will be held at the depot on Saturday, May 26th, 1888. All who will support the nominee of the next Republican convention whoever he may be are requested to join the club.

Scandinavian Elevator Company.

Farm, Stock and Home.

From Buffalo papers we learn that C. C. Wolcott, secretary of the Scandinavian Elevator Co., and Mr. St. Croix, the American agent of the English stockholders, are in that city making arrangements for the proper and honest handling of No. 1 Hard wheat. The arrangements may include the building of an immense elevator in Buffalo. English millers seem to be determined to get No. 1 Duluth (as they call it) wheat. They recognize that it is the best wheat in the world, know its value to mix with the softer varieties of other countries, and are evidently willing to pay accordingly, but they want the pure article, and propose to have it if any reasonable opportunity is given them to get it. While Liverpool makes the price for Minnesota and Dakota wheat, it is manifestly the highest duty of its growers to get their product there in its purity and be paid for it accordingly. Sending inferior stuff to England in the name of No. 1 Hard and letting that make the price on the genuine to our own millers is one of the many infamous outrages to which Northwestern agriculture has been subjected. The new deal is not relished by the cities, but it is high time the country began to have something to its taste.

Proposed Amendment to the Inter-State Commerce Law.

The Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce, which has for several weeks been considering Senator Cullom's bill proposing a series of amendments to the Inter-State Commerce Act, has framed a measure in the nature of a substitute, which Senator Cullom reported on Wednesday.

The sixth section of the Inter-State Commerce Act is proposed to be amended so as to require that the printed schedules of rates shall be kept "open to public inspection" and "accessible to the public:" that reductions in the published rates shall only be made after three days' public notice, instead of without previous notice as at present, and that the provisions in regard to advances and reductions in rates shall apply to joint tariffs made by connecting roads as well as to the tariffs made by individual roads. It is proposed to amend the tenth section of the act, the criminal-penalty section, by making those convicted of violating the act liable to imprisionment for not exceeding two years, in addition to the fine already provided for, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. when the offence is an unlawful discriminationn in rates for the transportation of passengers or property.

The Committee proposes three provisions in regard to 'underbilling.' The first is that the officers, agents, or employees of a railroad who, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, knowingly and wilfully assisit or willingly suffer or permit any person to obtain transportation at less than the established rates, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The second is that any person, or the officer or agent of any corporation, who delivers property for transportation to any common carrier subject to the provisions of the act, or for whom as cosignor or consignee such carrier shall transport property, who shall knowingly and wilfully, by false billing, false classification, false weighing, or false report of weight, or by any other device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of the railroad or its agents, obtain transportation for property at less than the established rates, shall be deemed guilty of fraud, which is declared to be a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not exceeding two years, or both in the discretion of the court. The third provision makes subject to the same penalties any person who, by the payment of money, etc. or by solicitation, shall induce any railroad or any of its officers or agents to discriminate unjustly in his favor as against any other consignor or consignee in the transportation of property, and also makes such persons liable with such railroad in an action on the case to be brought by any consignor or consignee discriminated against for all damages resulting therefrom. The only other amendments of general interest proposed are one to permit railroads to carry free destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies, and another to permit railroads to give reduced rates to municipal governments for the transportation of indigent persons.

Two Bulls For Sale!

The Thoroughbred Shorthorn Bull, "Red River Valley," bred by Sam'l McCreary, Neshannock Falls, Lawrence Co., Pa., by whom he was sold to the late Geo. C. Reis, of Edna, in 1879, and by him brought to the Red River Valley. He was born May 30th, 1878, and his pedigree shows him to be in one of the very best Shorthorn families in existence. As my herd is all akin to him and I have now no further use for him, I will sell him at a bargain or trade for horses or other stock; also a thoroughbred son of his, one year old. These animals are both A 1 as their pedigree, which may be seen at my residence, clearly shows.

Half Fare Excursion;

We take special pleasure in calling attention to the excursions to points in Minnesota & Dakota via the St. Paul Minneapolis and Manitoba R'y, from St. Paul or Minneapolis and points South and East which have been announced, leaving St. Paul May 9 and 23 and June 6 and 20, and points South one day earlier, when tickets are to be sold at the low rate of one fare for the round trip. These tickets will be limited to thirty days from date of issue, good ten days going and five for return with stop over within limits. This will enable friends or intending settlers to visit this country during the early spring and summer, at a very small cost. Further particulars can be obtained by addressing

CONTRACT WORK.

Sealed bids will be received by the City Council of the city of Crookston at the office of the city clerk until June 12, 1887, at 6 P. M. for building side walks and street crossings in the city of Crookston for the ensuing year. Parties tendering must specify first common lumber in their bids.

A bond of five hundred dollars to be approved by the City Council must accompany each bid, Said Council reserves the right to reject any or all bids. [4-6]

Going West.

The general interest that has been taken in the opening of the Montana Indian Reservations is shown by the large numbers of people who have already gone to Great Falls to investigate the mineral and agricultural resources of that wonderful country. The low excursion rate announced by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Agent of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, makes the expense of exploring this country merely nominal, and will undoubtedly result in a still larger number following. [4-11]

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

[First publication April 19th, 1889.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty dollars ($60) installment of interest, which became due and payable on the 24th day of December, 1887, upon a certain mortgage made, executed, and delivered by John N. Ives and Annie Ives, his wife, of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 28th day of June A. D. 1884, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 30th day of June 1884, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 202, 203, 204 and 205.

And whereas a further default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the mortgagors failing and neglecting to pay the the taxes assessed against and levied upon the premises covered by said mortgage, prior to the date of the sale of lands for the payment of taxes, and the mortgagee, to protect the lien of its said mortgage, has been compelled to pay, and on the 2d day of May, 1887, did pay in satisfaction of the taxes then due and delinquent on said premises, the sum of twelve and 75-100 dollars ($12.75,) and the said defaults having each continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of such default and declaration aforesaid, there is claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and ninety-two dollars and twenty-nine one hundredths ($692.29,) and no action or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼) of Section thirty-two (32.) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less, according to United States Government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest, taxes and fifty dollars attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on the 2d day of June A. D. 1888, subject to redemption at any time within one year, in manner provided by law.

Dated at Moorhead, April 12th A. D. 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication May 10th 1888.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Joseph Fortin, mortgagor, to Mrs. Mary A. Allen, mortgagee, dated the 7th day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of June A. D. 1882, at four o'clock p. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 430, 431 and 432 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred forty 60-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. There is due on said mortgage the further sum of twenty-five 40-100 dollars for taxes paid as by said mortgage provided.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or by his duly appointed deputy, on Friday the 22d day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The south half of the northeast quarter (s½ ne¼) and also lots one and two (1 and 2) of Section three (3,) all in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north of Range forty-four (44) west, containing one hundred fifty-nine 33-100 (159 33-100) acres, according to the government survey thereof.

Dated at Crookston, Minn., this 3d day of May 1888.

MONTANA SHORT LINE.

When traveling every one should consider well the questions of economy, comfort, safety and speed, these questions being of the same importance in a journey of an hour as in one of several days' ride. An examination of the map will convince anyone that this is the most direct route to and from all the principal points in Central and Northern Minnesota, Northern Dakota and Montana.

ST. PAUL MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILWAY.

Our equipment and time are excellent. Our rates are the lowest, but this fact is something which speaks for itself. Definite figures and maps can be obtained by applying to any Agent of the Company, or the General Passenger Agent.

The following are a few of the Principal Points reached via this Line:

St. Cloud, Sauk Centre, Fergus Falls, Crookston, St. Vincent, Hutchinson, Paynesville, Morris, Appleton and Breckenridge, Minn.; Watertown, Aberdeen, Ellendale, Wahpeton, Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau and Buford, Dakota; Glasgow, Dawes (Ft. Belknap), Assinniboine, Ft. Benton, Great Falls, Helena and Butte, Montana; Winnipeg, Manitoba, and all Pacific Coast Points.

Parties seeking farms or business locations will find unusual opportunities for both on this line in Northern Dakota and Montana, also in Minnesota where the Company has for sale at low prices and on favorable terms 2,000,000 acres of excellent farming, grazing and timber lands. Pride of the Valley.

St. Paul, the Flourishing Young City, Justly Entitled to That Claim.

She Sits in the Center of the Finest Farming Section in the State.

A City With Every Public Improvement Necessary to Comfort and Pleasure.

A Good Start as a Railway Scenter—Abundance of the Best Building Material.

A GROWING CITY.

St Paul, the Center of a Magnificent Farming Country- A Future Railway Scenter.

St. Paul, the county town of Ramsey County, has an admirable location on the Mississippi River, near the southern part of the county. For miles in all directions there is not a level prairie as in many places it is rolling around sort 'o careless like, also having considerable wood "AS THE COUNTY IS WELL WATERED," and the license is only $1000.

This is the most compactly built city in the Northwest, and has a specially desirable location, the ground being high and dry, with every chance for drainage. This is certainly an advantage over any of the prairie cities. Then the streets are especially wide, some of them being ninety feet, and none less than seventy-five. They are laid out right, and the business blocks, being almost all of brick, give the city quite a metropolitan appearance. The growth has been steady, and the city has never had to suffer the disastrous effects of a boom, and the six thousand of a population which it now has is ample evidence that its growth has arisen from the grand facilities which it has. At this point the river makes a sweep. This adds to the beauty of the city. The river is crossed by three excellent iron bridges, and there is no danger from the river rising high enough to carry them away. The Mississippi River in this respect differs much from any river in this great valley, the water in it keeping pretty regular all the year.

THIS IS ACCOUNTED FOR

by the extent of country it drains and large lakes upon its upper waters. However, it is the intention to make a government dam near a post-office station, called Minneapolis, in an adjoining county, to assist navigation from that point to Lake Glascow, as in the fall the flats from that lake has not enough water for small steamers. There is not much depth there at any time, the outlet being wide with a hard smooth bottom. This will also assist in getting the vast supplies of the very best pines which surround the lake to market, because when logs once float past the outlet there is no difficulty in driving them. There is very little homestead lands now near St. Paul, although there is upwards of 400,000 acres in the district, composed of prairie as well as timber lands, there being a larger proportion of the latter. The lands are on the upper waters of the Glascow Lake country and towards the Canadian boundary, yet the soil is all that can be desired, and the new section is also well watered. Being farther from the low prairie land the water contains but little alkali. It is certainly a good section for stock farms, there being an abundance of the choicest grasses with plenty of wood shelter. But so long as good farms may be found near the city, which will not cost as much as it does to improve these new lands, the latter will not be in so great demand. This is by all odds the having everything within itself that any city could desire, water works, electric light, churches, banks, excellent schools, in fact anything that the large cities in the East have. These Western towns are certainly a surprise to parties coming from the East, as here there is as much improvement in a year as will be found there in a decade. The people move with elastic step, showing that their hearts are in whatever they undertake, and, as energy cannot fail in succeeding, these rustlers come out on top. This city is a model of what push can do, backed up by a good agricultural country. Although begun during the present generation it has far outstripped its sister cities of Northern Minnesota, and to aid them in this they had the grand Mississippi River flowing through the new town, and a $1,000 license. The owners of property acted liberally toward those who wished to became residents, and the mistaken notion of keeping business and other lots up at fancy prices did not prevail here. The consequence has been that settlers crowded in, purchased property, grew up with the town, and now all reap the benefit of the wise policy. In towns that have booms real estate goes away beyond its value, consequently there is a crash, and the place is set back, but here nothing of the kind has ever happened, and the consequence is the credit of the town stands high, while its merchants can readily obtain from the wholesale houses just as many goods as they want; as they are sure pay. Failures in business are of rare occurrence, which is something of which but few cities can boast.

FIRST CITY IN NORTHERN MINNESOTA,

A RAILWAY SCENTER.

This city has extra railway facilities and is one of the main points on the Manitoba system. Besides the main line to Winnipeg, this is also the converging point for the thousands who are now hastening to fill up the new country opened last year west of Minot in Dakota; thence to the rich ranch lands of Montana, and the great Indian reservation just opened. This line crosses the Mississippi at the post office station called Minneapolis, and the trains sometimes stop to put off or take on a letter, that may by chance have been sent to or from that post office. In addition, fifty-five miles of a new road have been graded and will have the rails laid this year if the company don't forget it. The Northern Pacific, that crosses the Mississippi near the post-office station called Minneapolis will have its line to this city when it gets here, so St. Paul will become a certain sure railroad scenter. The Manitoba has here now quite a extensive round-house, emplaying several men and that plant shows signs that some day it may be slightly increased a good deal.

BUILDING MATERIAL.

Within the city there is an abundant supply of hardheads, undoubtedly of of glacier orgin, but these are not in sufficient amounts to be of any practical use. This is a resource that cannot be taken away, and will add to the city's wealth.

POINTS OF INTEREST.

The Natural Advantages of the City and What Is Being Done to Impove Her Good Looks.

St. Paul, having a situation considerably higher than the surrounding prairie, shows many points of interest. The court house, on Wabasha Street, is one of the best in the state, and as it occupies a commanding position, shows up well. It is built of stone with heavy cornices. The jail is in connection with it. The citizens are fully alive to the necessities of a public park, and have secured something over ten acres. It is a delightful spot, and when improved will be the finest in the West. It comprises a level tract beside the river, with an abundance of large oak trees, and but little underbrush. It has a sufficiency of shade, and makes a choice resting place. It will be laid out with walks and fountains, with park chairs, and a clear ground for games. It has always been the principal picnic resort of the town. The opera house is a frame structure, and was built some time since, and no doubt will soon be replaced by a more modern building. With the many excellent brick blocks in the city, this certainly does not compare favorably. The drive around the city is very fine. it resembles a race course, and the flyers go round at a great rate. The views along the river are very fine, the heavy timber lining its banks adding much to its beauty. St. Paul has certainly many cosy nooks, with the choicest scenery, and as the city is so well kept, and such order maintained, it makes a most desirable home. But

THE LOVER OF GOOD HUNTING

and first-class sport will certainly find this neighborhood all that he can desire. Here, in their season, will be found myriads of prarie chickens, and sportsmen are found here from Crookston and other cities having a good time shooting. It is a favorite resort for such. Ducks and geese are here also in the spring and fall, and the local Nimshys are kept busy. But those who wish larger game will find plenty of deer, as well as bear, about ten miles up the Mississippi river, as well as at the lake, while smaller game may be found at all seasons. The fisherman who goes out can have something more than "fisherman's luck," as here it is throw in your hook and line and pull your fish out. Pike and pickeral, with smaller species of fish, are the most plentiful, while monster surgeons, weighing from 80 to 120 pounds are are often caught. How would you enjoy pulling one of them out? It would be more probable that somebody would be pulled in. It takes several persons usually to land one of these, and then only by the aid of boat hooks and after a severe tussle. For instance, a Minneapolis surgeon required the full strength of the Hennepin County delegation assisted by many County delegates to pull him out, and he was by no means the biggest fish landed safely in St. Louis.

SCHOOLS.

St. Paul schools stand high among the educators of this state; in fact, its high school is of a superior grade. There is a central and four ward schools, giving employment to sixteen teachers beside the superintendent. In the central school there are nine rooms, and it is certainly a well-arranged building heated with steam and thoroughly ventilated. Being on high ground, the sewerage is of the very best. There is a total school population of nearly 1,600, while 1,200 pupils are enrolled. The high school prepares its students for the universities, and the course is most thorough. This school was erected at a cost of over $25,000. The ward schools are two-roomed frame structures, supplying tuition for the younger children in their respective localities. The high school has a complete scientific apparatus, a well-filled library, and a choice mineral and fossil cabinet. The citizens are justly proud of their schools.

POSTOFFICE.

This is the main distributing point for mail matter in this section, there being thirty three outside offices to which mail is fowarded. The following will give some idea of the importance of this point:

Postal funds	$7,818 93
Money orders	$47,896 87
Registered	$12,578 96
Pieces handled	1,798,763

It is an international money order office, and has a through mail pouch.

FIRE PROTECTION.

The St. Paul Water Power and Electric Light company supply the city with its water as well as with its light. The system is the Holly, giving a supply of 2,500,000 gallons per day. There are now six and a half miles of water main laid, forty double hydrants, two fire companies, volunteer, with forty members, also a hook and ladder company. The fire pressure is 150 pounds, while the domestic pressure is 60. Water is forced by two wheels at 75-horse power each, and in case the water race way is out of repair, there is a 100-horse power steel shell boiler, with an 80-horse power engine ready to do the work. The water works building is of brick, 40x44, with an annex 22x22, the whole costing $164,000. The dam here gives a twenty-foot head. The electric light, Vandepole system, supplies ten arc lights for the streets and thirty for private use, each of 2,000-candle power, and there are two and a half miles of wire. Thus it will be seen that this city has sufficient fire protection, as well as being well lighted. Incandescent lights are also about being added.

WHAT ST. PAUL HAS.

In addition to the saw mill, there is a foundry employing twenty men, a sash and door factory, a large brewery, a creamery, soap factory, cigar factory, packing house, oat meal mill, two large wagon shops and a planing mill. Then there is a

LARGE ROLLER FLOURING MILL

with a 250-barrel daily capacity. This is an imposing building, being 40x72 feet and five stories high. There are also several elevators, so that so far the city has quite a number of industries. The Manitoba shops and round house employ quite a number of hands. The power for the roller mill is supplied from the river, there being a constant head of water at the dam of twelve feet. This uses only a small percentage of the water, and there is power enough left to run several large mills and factories.

ST. PAUL SOCIETY, "THE BEST PEOPLE ON EARTH" LIVE THERE—SOMETHING ABOUT CHURCHES.

Although St. Paul is a new city she has a society equal to any of the older cities. The conservative methods which she has always had in doing business has tended to this, and none of the usual lawlessness so common to new places has she had to experience. You will here find several as well-educated ladies and gentlemen as can found anywhere, and one attending any of the society meetings will be surprised to hear the way in which scientific questions are discussed. The city has a large sprinkling of college and university graduates of both sexes, and these give a tone to its society not usually found. The religious wants of the people must be fully supplied, if one judges by the number and size of the churches. The various bodies appeared to try which would have the most handsome church, and the great number are of fine architectural designs. It may be called a city of churches. There are eleven of them, being the Congregational, Baptist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian, two Catholic, two Norwegian Lutheran, Methodist Episcopal and German Reformed Lutheran. Nor are the secret societies neglected. Here you find the three orders of Masonry—Blue, Royal Arch, and Commandery; Odd Fellows, with a lodge and encampment; Grand Army of the Republic, Knights of Honor, Womans' Christian Temperance association, with several national society clubs. The W. C. T. U. have a free reading room and library, out of debt and doing good work. They own the building which is on free ground, and whenever the ladies get up any entertainment for the benefit of the reading room, it is most liberally patronized, irrespective of nationality or church. There is not a more pleasant place to live than this, the best of order prevailing, the streets kept clean, the schools first-class, churches to meet anyone's belief, a healthy climate, a city free from fires, and a society second to none.

A HOME FOR FARMERS.

The Country About St. Paul Well Adapted to All Kinds of Farming.

A Good Chance to Buy Improved Farms at Reasonable Prices and Good Terms.

MIXED FARMING.

Land About St. Paul Adapted to All Kinds of Crops—Stock Farming.

In a county so large as Ramsey County it is to be expected there will be considerable variety in the quality of the land; and so there is. Oats, barley, peas, and other small grain ensure good crops, with a good market. Farmers who engage in mixed farming always succeed best. Turnips and rutabagas are the best root crops, and of the yellow turnips farmers will find the herd species, such as Swedes and yellow top, the best; although they are not as large as the white, they are more nourishing, and excellent winter keepers—when they don't freeze. Cattle and sheep, as well as horses, must have good care and attention to make their raising profitable, regularly fed and kept clean, and the farmer who does the work faithfully will find his farm yield him more than ever it did. To those who wish to engage in stock raising or in agriculture, the country tributary to St. Paul offers special inducements. Here may be found just such land as you require, either improved or not. Near the city you cannot take up a homestead, as all the land has been entered several years ago, but you can easily procure what you want, and at much less price than it would cost you to proceed to the frontier, break up the soil, get up your house and barn, and, after two or three years' work, would not have made such advancement as you would find here ready, and at less price than the buildings would cost. You may be surprised at this, and naturally ask the question, how is this possible? In this, as in every other country, there are a certain number of persons who appear to be contented only when they are on the move, or like the miner wish to pull up stakes and go to another digging. So these farmers get the fever to move, sacrifice the improvements they have made, sell out for a mere song, and you may be the lucky one to step into the home they have left. If you decide to go on one of these farms, only a small amount, in many cases, will be required to be paid down, but the more you pay down the better it will be for you, as interest accumulates fast. You see yourself established in your new home, everything required around you, good schools at a reasonable distance, and with a market at hand you at once begin to realize cash from your poultry and cows. How much better is this than burying yourself far from neighbors, with not a single advantage for improvement for several years, no market nearer than miles, nothing to enliven the monotony of your existence but work, work, all the time.

THESE IMPROVED LANDS

may be secured at from $4 to $10 per acre, a less price in many cases than the buildings cost. You can find no better wheat country anywhere, and as for the coarse grains they yield most abundantly. If you decide on stock in addition to agriculture, you will be equally well suited, and, as cheese factories and creameries are being established through the country, you have a market at the door without the labor of either making your cheese or your butter. You have this section now before you either for farming or stock raising, and, if it meets your approval, come right along and you will be made most welcome. To the others who prefer to go into any of the manufacturing lines, you have also the resources which this section supplies before you, and, if any of these suit you, why the place is open and you may fill it. You know for which you are best fitted, so engage in that one; don't meddle with what you don't understand, as you will make a mess of it, give the place a bad name and lose what you have invested. But if you understand your business here is the place for you, as you can make money. The raw material will cost you less than at any other point, while you have 300 miles the advantage in being so much nearer the place of consumption, making an extra profit equal to the freight saved. This point is well worthy being looked into, and should you come to St. Paul the chamber of commerce or board of trade will give you every information and will give you pointers not mentioned here.

WHAT ST. PAUL NEEDS.

P. S. We nearly forgot to mention that the enterprising citizens of St. Paul held a meetin' in the brick meetin' house to consider the project of starting a newspaper. A great deal of enthusiasm was raised, and when enthusiasm gets above par no doubt a paper will be started.

"Decoration Day."

The years that have elapsed since the close of the civil war have served to obliterate all sectional feeling, and a united and prosperous nation joins in keeping green the graves of all its beloved dead. It is in this spirit that the New York Family Story Paper has had written a thrilling and pathetic romance, peculiarly appropriate to this national holiday, entitled "Faithful Lenore; or, His Grave Kept Green." In the same paper will also be found a weekly instalment of the "Life and Adventures as a Showman of P. T. Barnum," written by himself, and equally interesting to the young folks as well as heads of families. These are rare literary treats, and those of our readers who are not already enjoying them will do well to obtain No. 766 of the New York Family Story Paper of their newsdealer or send directly to the publisher, Monro's Publishing House, Nos. 24 and 26 Vandewrter Street, New York, and receive the paper four months for one dollar, postage free.

Douglas County News: While Congressman Nelson has positively stated that he is not, and will not be, a candidate to succeed himself, and that he is not in fact a candidate for any office, and probably wants none, he has not however said that he will not accept any that the people might confer upon him. He ought not to be allowed to retire at present and we suggest that he be promoted to the United States Senate, where his acknowledged ability and large legislative experience would be of great service to the people of the State.

'Round Home.

Read the inducements offered for settlers near St. Paul—but do not go there hoping to find money growing on bushes.

Uncle Knowles was in from Maple Bay country this week taking in the institute.

Prof. Elliott left for St. Cloud on Monday evening, to attend the commencement exercises of the Normal school.

Register H. H. Dickmann went below after his family this week. His manner of discharging his duties gives great satisfaction.

The Gun Club is expecting big crowds in attendance at the tournament. Many clubs of more than local fame are expected to attend, and we may look for some tall shooting.

On all loans we make, interest payable at our office in Crookston.
STEENERSON & McMANUS.

Wheat dropped off to 69 then touched 70 where it rests serenely this morning. The prospects are good for a slight advance during the week though it is not impossible for it to drop away a point or two.

The Boston One Price clothing store issues a neat magazine each month which they will send free to any one sending address to Jos. McKey & Co., corner of Third and Robert Sts., St. Paul, Minn.

Christianson Bros. report sales of farming lands more numerous than last year and prices fifty per cent better. Should the price of wheat be good this fall there would be such a boom in real estate as never before occurred.

Stewart & Laurence desire to call attention to the merits of the Baker Barbed Wire, which for durability and economy cannot be discounted in this or any other market. Read what they have to say elsewhere in this issue.

Our write up of St. Paul has a wonderful similarity to the Press write up of Crookston—but we can't help that, it is the fashionable style nowadays. A stereotyped block, mortised so as to allow change of names is all that is needed.

Though not as largely attended as we should like to have seen, the institute was fairly well attended the first day and the interest increased to the end, Many of our farmers had not completed sowing oats and barley, so could not be in attendance.

The Maggie Fielding Co. will return again June 6th and 7th, when the prices will be put down to 25, 50 and 75 cents which will give all an opportunity to listen to this excellent troupe. The plays will be "Ranch .10" and "2:15" both excellent plays.

Frank T. Haselline took a force of men on Saturday and went over to the residence of M. E. Bartlett, in Fairfax, and set out 2,000 thrifty cottonwoods. Every quarter section in Polk County should have a grove of trees upon it.

At the Michaud sale on Saturday the grade Shorthorn cow and half-blood Holstein heifer calf sold for $40. cash. This was extremely cheap as the calf alone is worth $25 to raise, as it comes from a line of choice butter-makers in which are to be found cows that will make from one and one-half to two pounds per day in two-year old form. Such calves as that pay well to raise.

Saake, the jeweler, has brightened up his store with paper and paint, and, to entertain his patrons and friends has engaged a Mikado opera company, who are ready to give a matinee at any time. They are all on deck, the "Three Little Girls," "Yum Yum," the "Lord High Executioner" and all, supported by Saake's full orchestra. It is worth a quarter to see the show.

In the case of Ole G. Swanberg vs the St. P. M. & M. R. R., tried at Warren last week, the jury gave an award of $15,000. for the plaintiff. Hon. H. Steenerson appeared for the plaintiff, and Wilkinson & Campbell for the road. Mr. S. sued for damages incurred at Argyle in 1882 wherein he was seriously injured, and from which injuries he never recovered; he alleges that he was roughly ejected from the train while the train was in motion and was caught between a coach and the platform, suffering severe injuries, from which he will never fully recover. He brought suit for $25,000. The case will be appealed to the Supreme Court.

St. Cloud Times: The Fielding company closed a three night's engagement at the Casino last evening, with the presentation of the well known comedy "2:15." The performance, as a whole, was the best of the three given by the troupe, Misses Fielding, Pike and Austin, in the leading roles sustaining their parts in an admirable manner. Where all are good it is unnecessary to notice each in particular, but we cannot refrain from mentioning the admirable manner in which Miss Fielding and Mr. D. L. Lacy performed their respective roles. Miss Fielding and Miss Lillian Austin charmed the audience with their singing, both ladies receiving several enthusiastic encores to hich they gracefully responded.

Ole Bang was up from the west side this week.

Dr. Just returned from his visit below on Sunday.

Capt. E. A. Sawyer is up looking after his business interests here.

Ole Estenson and E. A. Bradish, from the west side took in the institute this week.

The Board of County Commissioners met in special session on Tuesday to consider roads and bridges etc.

Herb's place was a wilderness of banners on decoration day. Herb always comes to the front upon occasion.

The cool weather for the past 'steen days is excellent for our No. 1 Hard wheat—if we don't get too much of it.

Geo. Q. Erskine is fixing up the Milette block. We are told that he intends making a boarding house of it.

Alderman Jerome is hauling part of his farm over from the Addition to make a back yard for the St. Louis hotel.

The hotels this week are enjoying a bonanza, what with the farmers institute and the shooting tournament they will reap a rich harvest.

If the Bulletin has anything to say and can be manly about it it will be more deserving of a reply. Its grimaces and innuendoes are unworthy of notice.

Knute H. Rollag was down from Willewater this week to attend the farmers' institute. Says the crop prospects in the Thirteen were never better.

Dont forget that the place to get the best goods for the least money is at the store of C. H. Saake, Main Street, opposite Merchants Nat. Bank. [5.7]

Messrs. Hartshorn, Hurlbut & Co. and B, Clements of Crookston, and Judson, Childs & Co. of Carman, handle the product of the Hallock Cheese Factory.

Decoration Day services were appropriately observed in this city by Col. Cobham Post, at the Opera House. Many of the business houses were closed in honor of the event.

Farm loans completed and money paid over the day application is made.
STEENERSON & McMANUS.

Theo. Louis, Dr. Wm. Dickson Litchfield, J. O. Barrett, Brown's Valley, Dr. J. C. Curryer and Prof. O. C. Gregg arrived on the morning train on Monday ready for the institute work.

The call for the Congressional Convention at St. Cloud is issued for Tuesday, June 12th. As Polk County has already elected her delegation it is not necessary to publish the call in full. Nearly every county has already elected its delegates.

C. H. Saake displays in his Jewelry store a fine assortment of gold and silver watches, gold jewelry, solid silver tableware, fine clocks etc. at prices lower than at any former period. Everybody is invited to call and inspect my stock. [5-7]

A letter from Pete Nolan, this week, informs THE JOURNAL that he is still in the employ of the N. P. and enjoying good health. Pete wishes to be remembered to all old friends, among the railroad boys especially.

Bro. McGrew takes a melancholly pleasure in publishing the names of the delegates to the St. Cloud convention, which to any one who knows any thing about it, only shows wherein he is in error. We begin to think he really believes he is right about it. He ought to by this time—he has repeated it often enough.

It pays to insure but it is essential to know that your insurance is good. The Continental is one of the old tried companies, solid as the everlasting hills and your insurance there is as good as gold.

Intelligent people of this county have little or no faith in those whose record in the past cast a doubt on all future promises of honesty and fair dealing. This concern has now, by fraud and misrepresentation of all kinds, finally arrived at a point where nothing will save them from ruin, but "last of all," repentance,
C. H. SAAKE.

St. Cloud Times: "Ranch 10," as presented by the Maggie Fielding Comedy Ideals last night, at the Opera House, gave the audience another opportunity to pass judgment, and the verdict was unanimously favorably to the company. The cast of the play placed the members of the troupe in an entirely different light, compared with the performance of the previous evening, and tested the versatility of each individual to the utmost.

Insure against cyclones. The Continental is the best company for your purpose. Elias Steenerson is sole agent for this time-tried and fire-tested company and invites his friends to call and see what he can do for them in insurance of all kinds.

Farm Stock & Home had a representative on the ground at the institute, ready to enlist every farmer who has not that excellent sheet already. The little paper has such a warm corner in the hearts of our farmer readers in Polk that but few there are who never heard of it and many there are who read it. Those who are not regular subscribers miss one of the most valuable farm papers in the United States. Published as it is in the Northwest by Northwest enterprise, it is more valuable by far than many a larger, more pretentious sheet and it is always on deck to fight any and everything opposed to the best interest of the farmer. Like a little Banta rooster, it is never afraid to tackle the biggest kind of a bird and it keeps pecking away until its object is or will be accomplished. All who did not subscribe for it during the institute can obtain it at this office just as cheaply as they could have done at the institute.

Ole Bangs says he has contracted to deliver his wheat in Grand Forks for 75¼ cents per bushel. He has 1,200 bushels to sell. Says he sold all of his beef animals this spring at prices that paid better than hay at $5 per ton delivered,

If the man who took the 2x16 20 foot plank from the back of my lot will return the same at once he will save trouble. He had his team tied there and was seen to load the plank on his wagon.
A. C. SCHMIDT.

Dist. Attorney W. A. Selby of Grand Forks died at his residence in that city on Saturday at 4 p. m. He was only forty years old and very highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was a Royal Aach Mason and some of the brethren of that degree, in this city, went over on Monday to attend the funeral obsequies.

All of Francis' work speaks for itself and does not need our pencil to describe. A visit to his studio will convince the most skeptical that he is an A No. 1 artist, than whom there is no better. It don't cost any more to get a good picture than to get a poor one and it is ever so much more satisfactory. Call in and look him over.

I am glad to acknowledge that my customers are Ladies and Gentlemen who by no means will patronize parties deprived of business honor.
[6-8] C. H. SAAKE.

Wm. Box, Jr., is down from Warren attending to the tree claim. He says they never had a more favorable season for seeding and that the prospects for a large crop were never brighter. Every farmer feels confident of big crops and big prices and is, as a consequence quite jubilant. That is all that is needed to make this country boom as she never did before.

Isidore Fortier went over to Grand Forks last week and paid a long figure for a beautiful three year old Cleveland Bay mare colt. Fortier will have the animal broken to drive and can then hold the ribbons over as much speed and equine beauty as can be found in our city. He says it pays to get nothing but thoroughbreds and then take proper care of them.

Lots in exchange for farming lands.
STEENERSON & McMANUS

THE JOURNAL is in receipt of a season ticket to the Third Annual Exposition which commences on Wednesday August 22d and lasts till Sept. 29th. Should any of our readers visit the city of Minneapolis during the Exposition they will find it interesting to take in the great doings, August 27th will be newspaper day which event will be made of special interest to members of the craft.

August Wentzel says he would like to interview his former bar tender a few minutes. One week ago Tuesday morning he missed some things from the saloon and suspecting the bar keeper, charged him with the theft. The barkeeper did not take kindly to the suggestion and in the argument that followed both had some very emphatic facts stamped upon their memory that left an impression on each countenance. The barkeeper lit out for pastures new and greener fields and when last heard of was in Grand Forks. August says this kind of business makes him tired and he thinks he will quit about July 1st.

We have only one note and mortgage we make a loan the day applied for, charge no bonus, and make interest payable at our office in Crookston.
STEENERSON & McMANUS.

The Times remarks that "we have got rid of many of our kickers during the past six months and now we should all join in and begin hustling!" It is all well enough to brace up and go to hustling but it strikes us as a very ungracious thing to do to speed our parting guests with such a vicious kick, and we are led to wonder who is meant in particular? It cannot be the Times meant that everybody who has gone was a kicker? But how are the friends they leave behind to know who is meant, when no one in particular is specified? Can it be Mr. Houston, who came in advance of civilization and toiled hard to make the city what it is to day? Or Mr. Box, who invested all his earthly possessions in building up a fine hotel, and later a nice residence whose every wish and thought has been of and for Crookston's prosperity? Or Mr. Pierce, who also put in every dollar he had in the world for Crookston's prosperity, or Mr. Chase, or Mr. Knuppe, or Mr. Zwicky all of whom have ever been deeply interested in the prosperity of Crookston, who have property here yet and of whom it can not be said that they have gone for good. Or Mr. Bates, or Beecher or Perry or Wilkinson, all men who have put more money into the up building of our city than any newspaper man ever has to invest. Not these? Who then? Supposing Mr. Times you assert a little of your "independence" and tell us who are the kickers! No doubt the friends of all who have left will be glad to know that you did not mean them.

Notice, Farmers!

All farmers in the Red River Valley desirous of getting lower rates for transporting the next crop of wheat, are requested to meet in the Opera House, Moorhead, Minn., at 10 o'clock a. m. Thursday, June 14th, to meet the Board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners of Minnesota, who will listen to the wishes and suggestions of those present.

O. A. KRAGNES,

One Good Turn Deserves Another.

Last week the Pioneer Press gave Crookston a page "write up," charging nothing but subscription to the daily. We do not propose to to see Crookston discounted for generosity, so this week we give St. Paul the benfit of our large circulation, in a return "write up." We charge nothing, but if the citizens of St. Paul can see where they get value received, we shall be pleased to receive subscriptions at the usual rates. We would not guarantee that we have got everything exact, as, for our information we interviewed a man who has lived in St. Paul for several years and another who had recently passed through that town, and besides that, we have recently read something almost exactly like it, so if our write up is not exactly right it ought to be, and our good will ought to make up for any deficiency.

How Baking Powders are Made.

While rival companies are disputing as to what ingredients are to be found in the "best baking powder," the public will be interested in the following definition of these now indispensible articles as given by Appleton's Cyclopedia, the acknowledged American authority.

"The best baking powders are composed of bitartrate of potash (cream of tartar.) tartaric acid, carbonate of ammonia, and soda bi-carbonate, bound together with a little starch."

FIGURES ON BARBED WIRE.

The barbs of the Baker wire are thickly set with seventy-eight barbs to the rod, and weigh from two to four ounces less than the same number of barbs of any other kind of wire, which makes from seventy-five cents to one dollar and a half per one hundred rods in favor of the Baker wire. We guarantee that the main stran is of equal weight and strength, and quality of any of the best makes of wire. Where we save you money is in the barb, using less material yet giving you a barb of equal strength and more serviceable than any other make of wire. Please examine and satisfy yourself of the correctness of the statement before you buy. To test the truthfulness of our saying, we ask that you take an even number of pounds of our wire and any other wire with main stran of No. 12, and stretch them up, and then make your calculation as to who is furnishing you the most rods of fence for the same money. Don't forget to hear Chas. Dickens, Jr., at McKinnon's Hall, June 6th. The boys who have the matter in charge have assumed a great responsibility and deserve to be helped out, at least. The entertainment is worthy a liberal patronage on its merits also, and there should be a full house.

Owing to decoration day services it was decided to close the session of the farmers institute on Wednesday evening. Dr. Wm. Dickson gave his lecture on India wheat, or the ryot as a competitor to the American wheat-raiser. He had a sample of the kind of a plow the ryot uses and told of his methods of cultivation, drawing the conclusion that for these reasons and the fact that the ryot is becoming dudish in his tastes and learning to eat wheat bread himself, he will never develop into a formidable competitor.

Charles Dicken's Third Reading.

New York Daily Tribune.

Charles Dickens gave another reading from his father's works at Chickering Hall yesterday afternoon. Nobody introduced him this time. The spontaneous outburst of applause with which he was received showed that he needed no sponsor. The audience was a large one, and there were many there who had attended his first reading, which indicated that it was not mere curiosity that attracted them. Mr. Dickens again received a flattering testimonial of public appreciation. All laughed heartily at the humorous passages in his selections, and not a few among the fairer portion of the auditors paid the reader the still higher tribute of tears, when he gave some of the more pathetic scenes. That the father had found a worthy interpreter in the son, was obviously the opinion of the great majority of those who heard him.

Mr. Dickens first read some selections from "David Copperfield," in which the humorous and pathetic are so exquisitely blended. That grand old nature's nobleman, Mr. Peggotty, the faithful Ham, Mrs. Gummidge, with her "worriments," that hadn't entirely bereft her of true feeling, poor Emily, loving but deluded. Steerforth, "the villian with many redeeming qualities, and Dora, the "child wife," invested with a life and vividness which only the most discerning and sympathetic readers can discover in the printed pages alone. In his second reading, Mr. Dickens told, in a way that provoked continuous merriment, how the jocose but impecunious Bob Sawyer's party was broken up through the malevolent and mercenary spirit of his landlady. This sketch gave the audience a glimpse of everybody's favorite, Mr. Pickwick, and it was much enjoyed. At McKinnon's Hall, June 6th.

The cause of education, especially in the department of manual training is advancing very rapidly—much more so than those not directly interested in it can realize. At the Minneapolis Exposition this fall there will be a very extensive show of educational work from various schools and colleges and prizes will be given for the best work of individual pupils in various departments. The manual training in Minneapolis schools are doing some wonderful carpentry and machinists work, and at the State University the school of Mechanic Arts is equipped as completely as any manufacturing establishment. The work turned out in these schools will do more to educate American youth to believe that work with the hands is a creditable thing than all the spoken or written sermons of a century can do.

MEMORIAL DAY.

O'ER SOLDIER'S GRAVES.

FAINT sigh the breezes o'er this sacred ground,
Mellowed and softened with the flight of years;
Fair springs the turf upon each narrow mound,
Dewy from day to day with loyal tears.

And, on this chosen day, when all the past—
Its tragedy, its glory, passion, woe—
When mem'ries rush upon us thick and fast,
Kindling to life the scenes of long ago;

Come we, a race of brothers, bound with ties
Cemented by the blood these heroes shed,
To muse in reverence, with moistened eyes,
And pay our tribute to the silent dead.

Soldier, the glowing wreath that left your hand
To lightly fall upon that cherished grave,
Has sanctified the turf on which you stand
And smoothed the pillow of the sleeping brave.

Sister, who placed your simple garland so;
Son, mother, wife, whose eyelids still are wet;
Your dewy gift has stolen half your woe,
And told the lost that you can not forget.

Aye, as you grave-eyed dame forbears to weep
While strewing forth her fragrant blossoms there,
Her hero, in his everlasting sleep,
But rests the calmer for her loyal care.

No soldier's heart may burn with anger here;
The past lies buried, like its noble dead;
And from these flowers, with radiance grand and clear,
The light of an abiding peace is shed.

To thought of strife and hate arises now
In the fulfillment of this sacred trust.
For blue and gray at last join hands and vow
Eternal friendship o'er each other's dust.
—Harold R. Vynne.

God Knows Which Was Right.

In Bath county, Va., when the war broke out there lived two brothers named Terrill, both of whom became brigade commanders—one of them having espoused the cause of the Union, and the other that of the Confederacy. The two were soldiers of brilliant promise, but they were both killed in battle, sustaining their widely differing sentiments. Their father brought the bodies of his two sons home, and buried them on the old farm, erecting between their graves a marble slab bearing the touching inscription, "God only knows which was right."

Why not in love them both combine?
If age and wisdom ne'er presume
To say which child, in duty's line.
Reached blamelessly the soldier's tomb!
I know but this—that each was true,
Each honest, noble brave and bright;
That one wore gray, and one wore blue—
God only knows which one was right.

Well I recall their last dispute,
The towering tone, the blazing eye,
The haughty gestures made to suit
Each brisk assertion and reply;
Their favorite mounts I see them vault
And vanish on my aged sight,
To measure might in war's assault—
God only knows which one was right.

Then crept an age of dragging days,
With vague, conflicting rumor rife,
Until along our dust-hung ways
The tidings came that chilled my life;
Among the brave, heroic slain,
Where heavy fell the heavy fight,
My boys lay wet with crimson rain—
God only knows which one was right.

Ere long I brought them home to sleep
On the old farm beneath mine eye—
Where stranger's eyes the vigils keep,
I could not bear that they should lie.
No more the bugle to the fray
My boys shall rouse, at dead of night,
A deep peace holds my blue and gray—
God only knows which one was right.

What the Rose Bush Did.

JUST look at the bower of roses!' exclaimed Daisy Raymond, as she paused before the gate leading to Aunt Placidia's cottage. 'Did you ever see such a bower or beauty?'

'Such roses are not to be found anywhere,' replied Julia Dent; 'but if we stop to admire them much longer we will not finish our wreaths before dark.'

'Let us go in and ask for some of the roses and honeysuckles that have almost closed both door and window of the wee house,' urged Daisy.

'You do not know Aunt Placidia or you would not think of entering within her enclosure,' said Julia. 'Why, she was going to throw scalding water on Jimmie Lyons for daring to cross her yard the other day. Oh, you don't know her, Daisy, or you would not think of risking your life by intruding upon forbidden ground,' exclaimed Alice Gray, looking very sober.

'Mother says she used to be like other people, but her son was killed at Lookout Mountain, and ever since she has been a little beside herself,' explained Florence Marks.

'Then, if her boy lost his life in the service of his country, she will be interested in strewing the soldiers' graves. I am sure she will give us one rose for each grave. She will never miss twenty, and I am going to brave the lioness in her den,' persisted Daisy as she opened the gate and walked into the yard.

'If you are determined to carry out your foolishness, I will go along, although you will have your pains for nothing I assure you,' said Julia, following the wilful girl.

'We will wait around the corner, and if the old woman begins to abuse you we will be near at hand,' said Alice, as she hurried away to the place of concealment.

Though Daisy had been so brave, it was a timid knock that aroused the old dame from her habitual reverie. She was so long in making her appearance that the girls, supposing that she would not admit them, were about to retire. At that moment they heard the thump of her crutches on the floor, and presently the bolt slipped back, and a very cross-looking face appeared at the door.

"What on airth are you after?" snapped the ungainly creature in a querulous voice.

"You know to-morrow is Memorial day, and we came to beg a rose for each soldier's grave. Yours are so beautiful,' Daisy began, trying to control the quiver that ran through her frame.

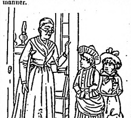
"Roses for soldier's graves and my own poor boy fillin' a nameless one in the far-away, forgotten-field! No, indeed! Didn't my Tommy carry that rose-bush all the way home from Tennessee a score of years ago, and wasn't it planted by his own hands. 'Now, mother,' said he, 'take care of the rose-bush, and when I come home again it will be in bloom.' But when war was over and other mothers pressed their boys to their hearts, mine ached on, for Tom, my boy, had been left among the slain on the mountain. I vowed then that his rose-bush should never be disturbed, and from that day to this I have watched it night and day. Never have my hands plucked a single bud; and you have the impudence to ask me for his roses to spread over the graves of rich men's sons, while never a flower is laid on his own. You need not be awaitin', for not one rose will you get. I gave my boy to die for the country, and a mighty poor return did I get. While I was able to work I managed to get enough to eat and wear, but since I have been crippled up with the rheumatiz I often have to go to bed cold and hungry. A poor return, a poor return, I say.'

'I am really sorry for you,' said Daisy, ready to cry.

'Sorry won't put clothes on my back and food in my mouth, I can tell you,' snapped the old woman impatiently.

'You ought to have a pension, and I am sure if the President knew how badly off you are, he would give you one,' ventured Julia, not knowing just how a pension could be obtained.

'A pension! the price of blood. Girl, what do you mean? Would I take money for the life of my boy?' cried the infuriated creature, raising her cane in a threatening manner.



'WHAT ON AIRTH ARE YOU AFTER?'

'No, no! we did not mean that, but is there nothing we can do to help you?' explained Daisy.

'Yes, you can take yourselves off and let me alone,' was the sharp rejoinder.

No sooner had they turned away than the door was shut with a bang, and the bolt slipped back to its place.

Julia was grateful to be out in the free air once more, but Daisy's tender heart tempted her to plead the cause of the lonely old woman with so much eloquence as to enlist the sympathies of the villagers; and that night a dozen girls, headed by Julia and herself, knocked for admittance again at Aunt Placidia's door.

After considerable grumbling, the old woman hobbled across the room and demanded what they meant by disturbing her. 'If you've come thinking to tease me out o' them roses you'd better be off,' she began; but Daisy assured her that they had not come for that purpose, and asked if they might go in.

Aunt Placidia granted the desired permission, muttering that she wished their call to be short, for it was near her bedtime; but when she saw the contents of their baskets, and knew that food and clothing to last her a long time were before her, the fountains of her heart were opened, and the grateful tears streamed down her withered cheeks. As soon as she could speak she asked: "Why did you do all this for the cross old creature who had only words of abuse for you?"

"Because you did so much for us in giving your son for our dear country," cried Daisy. "Father says we owe all this and a great deal more to you, and to all the mothers whose sons fill soldier's graves."

"And we want to be your friends and come to see you, too, sometimes," faltered Julia, feeling that it was her duty to say something, and not knowing just what she ought to say.

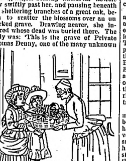
"Come when you can, my dears, and right glad will the old crone be to see your bright faces. But I can't give you Tommy's roses, for I could not bear to break 'em off, because he was to have the first one that bloomed, and it would break my old heart to have his flowers a-coverin' other soldiers' graves, and his'n all grown up to weeds," said the old woman, as she opened the door for them to file out.

We will not ask them, chorused the girls, too well pleased with their victory to trouble about her treasures.

After her visitors had gone, and she had fully satisfied her hunger, the old woman could not realize that the strange occurrence had actually taken place, and more than once she raised the covering on the table, and feasted her eyes on the abundance spread out before her there, to convince herself that she was not laboring under a delusion.

When, at last, she did sleep, it was to dream of people strewing flowers upon the graves of soldiers, and Tommy's still left without a single blossom. A new thought seized her, and gathering an armful of her own roses, she started in search of the lonely grave. In her vision she passed over hills and through valleys, crossed rivers and waded through marshes, until the mountains where she knew her dead reposed, rose up before her like a mighty giant.

At first she feared that her search would be fruitless, but the sound of heavenly music suddenly filled the air, and two shining angels bearing immortal flowers flew swiftly past her, and pausing beneath the sheltering branches of a great oak, began to scatter the blossoms over an unmarked grave. Drawing nearer, she inquired whose dead was buried there. The reply was: 'This is the grave of Private Thomas Denny, one of the many unknown which God and the angels watch over, then the rustle of their wings awoke her, but the blessed influence of their presence remained. When Daisy and Julia called to leave memorial wreaths for her dead boy, she placed a basketful of roses in their hands, saying: 'They are for the soldiers' graves. I cut 'em this morning before the dew was dry, so they would keep fresh and sweet.' Then she repeated her dream, adding, 'So you see, if God and the angels are tending to Tommy's grave, I have no need to be selfish with his roses.'



'THEY ARE FOR THE SOLDIERS' GRAVES.'

Though her aches and pains kept her from going to the cemetery that day, she did not bar her doors and blind her windows, as had been her wont on similar occasions; but from her easy chair on the porch she enjoyed listening to the music and watching the procession as it moved along.

Though she persistently refused to apply for the pension that belonged to her by rights, from that time forth she was cared for by the villagers, and Tommy's mother never again lacked for friends. When next the loyal people turn out to honor the dead heroes, Aunt Placida's white face will be missing from the window, for she has gone to join her soldier boy on the other side: but Tommy's roses she bequeathed to the children for Memorial Day.—Bell V. Chisholm.

WRITTEN FOR THIS PAPER.

HER TWO BOYS.

An Incident of Decoration Day.

BY MRS. M. L. RAYNE.

She was a stern-visaged woman, with many lines graven deep on her face by those two sculptors, time and care. Her form was somewhat bent with the weight of years, but it bore the uprightness of resistance yet. Her hair, drawn back under a mourning veil, was as white as snow. She did not look tender, loving and loyal, but she was all three.

Accompanied by a young girl, she moved slowly through the crowded cemetery to the lodge of the old sexton.

"How are my two boys?" she asked when they reached him.

Her lips quivered, and you saw then that the luster had gone out of her eyes forever, and that the little maid whose hand she held was eyes for the blind.

"The boys are all right, ma'am," said the sexton with deep respect, "they're safe and tidy. I've put a bit of decoration there myself, for I thought mebbe ye might not come to-day."

"When I do not come, it will be because my feet are stayed here," answered the blind mother. "I have the flags and flowers with me. Are their graves green?"

"As green, ma'am, as June, which it nearly is. An' the flowers a-growin' of their own accord as thick as stars in a clear sky."

They moved together to the part of the cemetery where the little flags studded the grass above the boys in blue.

"Here they are; just feel of them a bit, ma'am. The grass as soft as a baby's cheek to the touch, ma'am, I warrant."

The mother knelt reverently by the two graves that were so exactly alike no eye could detect the difference. She laid her withered face against the cool growing grass, and remained motionless a long time. And if she were crying out in rebellion in her heart, or if she were praying, there were none to know, save God, who could see and hear.

"Boys," she called softly at last; "boys, mother's come!"

Other mourners came bringing their flowers and passed on. An old man whose four soldier lads slept near stopped to look at this lonely, crouching figure.

The sexton informed him in pantomime that she was not in her right mind—out of her head.

"She doesn't know the difference," he said in an undertone, "but the two soldier boys buried here are not hers. They are rebs. They came north and died in the hospital. They knew of her boys, and were the first to tell her that they died at Chattanooga. She was sick a long time after that, and has never been right since. When these two died of their wounds and were buried here, she found it out and said they were her boys and she's always believed it. An' it don't do her a bit of harm, as I can see."

The old man turned away, shaking his head sadly, while the mother arranged the flowers on the two graves to suit her sightless touch.

When they were finished they were just alike in their decorations, even to the two flags crossed at their heads. "My boys" murmured the stricken mother, "my dear, dead soldier boys, whom God hath in His most holy keeping. Mother will be with you soon. It is almost time, I cannot see your faces, or even your dear graves, but He will tell you that mother is coming soon."

Oh! divine passion of human love and sorrow! Who shall say that Thou, too, hast not a miracle of transubstantiation for this mother's faith! That while she weeps by these two graves wherein lie sleeping the two brave soldier boys, some unknown mother may not be watching her brave lads in some southern bivouac of the dead. And that for this day and hour, each was given to his own, by order of the Great Commander, to whom the soldiers of the south and the soldiers of the north, the boys in gray and the boys in blue, have alike surrendered.

SLAVE MARRIAGES.

They are Declared Illegal, and Their Issue Illegitimate.

Judge Tuley of Chicago has rendered a preliminary decision in a contested will case that is of considerable importance to all children born in slavery, and to many of the descendants of such children. The will contested is that of Elizabeth Bunch, and the story is as follows:

James Washington, a slave of Gen. Thomas Marshall of Mason county, Ky., married a slave named Liza, and from their union sprang two children, Liza and Elizabeth. In 1832 James escaped, going to Huron, O., and there he made arrangements to buy his wife and two children from their master. But while he was paying for them his wife and child Liza died, and their master, in consideration of the sum already paid, gave him Elizabeth. Elizabeth, however, soon left him, and, after wandering over Ohio and Indiana, she went to Chicago, where she married in 1844. Her husband and children died, and in 1886 she too passed away, leaving property by will, it is said, to one Betty Kilroy, a white girl, who had been her companion for some years.

But it seems that James Washington, after the death of his wife Liza, married again and had several children. The eldest of these, a daughter, married William H. M. Bond and had three children. These three children contested the will, pronouncing it to be a forgery and that they were the legal heirs of Elizabeth Bunch. But Judge Tuly decided that Elizabeth Bunch was an illegitimate child and could have no heirs but those of her own body. The ground of the decision is that slaves being chattels no legal marriage was possible any more than real estate can marry real estate.

This decision, which was made on a motion for a rehearing, was a surprise to both sides. The case will be appealed, however, and then the special point involved will be fully discussed. It is asserted by Mr. Fish, who represents the heirs, that whatever may have been the status of a slave marriage prior to the war the effect of the emancipation proclamation and the constitutional amendments was to restore to the slaves all those rights of which they had previously been deprived. When they became free all the rights of freemen attached to them retroactively, so that the children born to them in slavery became legitimate.

Modern Improvements in Devotion.

A friend of mine has a telephone in his East End residence. Likewise he possesses a little daughter some four years in age, of winning ways, sweet face, and artfully artless manners.

When bedtime came a few nights ago the mother of this little maid could not find her. She was not in the nursery; and, carrying on the search, her mother reached the landing on the stairs. There she stayed a moment, and, listening, heard the babe's voice in the hall below. Looking over the banisters she was surprised to see tiny Miss Mabel standing on a hall chair and talking into the telephone in a loud voice.

'Hello! Hello! Hello, Central!' the child was saying in exact imitation of her father's manner. 'Hello, Central! Give me heaven, I want t'say my prayers!'—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Taps.

"Night draws her sable mantle on
And pins it with a star."
Darkness has come, and rest is won
By those who thro' the dusty way
Have marched their long and weary day
Across the prairies far.

And now the bugler from his tent
Comes forth to blow the call.
By him 'tis sent. The regiment
Will hear and know the hour has come
For sleep, until the rising sun
Shall summon one and all.

Lights out! Lights out! The bugle's clear
Notes falling on the air,
Sound to the ear, now far, now near;
Now almost ceasing, now enhanced
By echoes o'er that wide expanse
Of prairies bleak and bare.

Lights out! Lights out! From every lamp
The light is seen to die.
With measured tramp around the camp
The sentries guard against their foes;
The rest are wrapped in sweet repose.
Beneath the starry sky.

"Taps" falls far sweeter on the air
Than any other sound.
Like opiate rare, it soothes all care—
To weary men a blessing seems—
And pleasant are the soldier's dreams,
Tho' stretched upon the ground.

Ah, Taps, the mournful signal call
Floats o'er a new-made grave.
Thy soft notes fall where one from all
Life's weary march forever rests—
Asleep. Where wild birds build their nests
Unmindful of the brave.

Gen. T. W. Sherman's Great Staff.

Sherman had a crowd of men about him who afterward became distinguished for outstripping their whilom commander. Gen. Horatio G. Wright, who did so much good service at the head of the 6th corps, not only in the army of the Potomac, but in the department at Washington when Early attacked the capital, and afterward under Sheridan in the Valley; Gen. Egbert L. Viele, since a member of Congress, and well known in New York City in civil life—both had brigades under Sherman. The future senator and governor, not to say president, Joseph R. Hawley, commanded a regiment, as did Terry, the captor of Fort Fisher. Lawrence Barrett, the actor, had a company; while on Sherman's staff there was a host of clever, capable soldiers. James H. Wilson, the commander of Thomas's cavalry at Nashville, the captor of Selma and of Jefferson Davis; Horace Porter, afterward aid-de-camp to Grant, and private secretary during his first administration; O'Rorke, who fell so gallantly at the head of his regiment at Round Top in the battle of Gettysburg—these were, perhaps, the most brilliant. But Shunk of the ordnance, Tardy of the engineers, Morgan of the commissary, Saxton of the quarter-master's, and Pelouze of the adjutant-general's department, with Cooper as medical director, made up a staff of regular officers hardly surpassed during the war. The only volunteers were the aide-de-camp, two of whom were commissioned, and myself, simply appointed by the general commanding; but I wore a lieutenant's shoulder-strap by permission, as Gillmore did his brigadier-general's.

ADAM BADEAU.

The Army of the Cumberland.

The Executive Committee for Chicago of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland met recently for the purpose of taking the preliminary steps for the arrangements for the reunion of the society there next fall. The Army of the Cumberland will meet there Sept. 19 and 20 for the first time in twenty years, the date being the anniversary of the battle of Chickamauga. There will be several thousand visitors, and a "large" time is expected, one gentlemen going so far as to say that he would, if necessary, defray all the expenses of bringing Gilmore's Band here to furnish the music.

The exercises of Sept. 19 will probably consist in a business meeting, an afternoon reception to Gen. and Mrs. Sheridan, and an oration in the evening. Those of the second day, contemplate an entertainment on the lake or at Washington Park in the afternoon, and a banquet in the evening. An endeavor will be made to have the best speakers in the country there.

Dunn's Watermelon.

"One of the most amusing sights I ever saw," said Capt. A. J. West, "occurred near West End. It was during the dark days of the war when rations were scarce and every soldier wore in addition to his uniform a lean and hungry look. A soldier named Dunn, who is now living in Alabama, owned a very small pony, upon which he constantly rode.

"One afternoon he went off on a raiding expedition, and returned in triumph, bearing a large, luscious-looking watermelon across his pony's neck. Dunn's eyes twinkled with satisfaction and the moisture crept out of the less fortunate fellows' mouths, myself among them, as we thought of the delicious feast in store for the lucky men who would be invited to the soldier's banquet.

"While we were all admiring the melon and asking where it came from along came a cannon ball and hit it a center shot. There was a shower of red meat, green rind, and seed, and when it cleared away there sat Dunn on the pony, neither of whom had been touched. Dunn was as wet as a drowned rat, and never will I forget the utter loneliness and amazement depicted upon his face, down which trickled little streams of red water from the exploded melon.—Atlanta Journal.

Beware the Fatal Button!

As King and Emperor alike for many years the dead William has not appeared in public, except when undergoing his annual water cure at Gastein and Ems, dressed in civil dress. He invariably wore uniform at home, even when writing letters in his study, which overlooks the Linden avenue, Berlin's chief military and fashionable thoroughfare. While actually sitting at his writing table he was accustomed to loosen three or four of the upper buttons of his double-breasted tunic and turn back its lapels.

When, however, a body of troops, small or large was heard approaching the palace he would rise from his seat, hastily button up his uniform overcoat to the throat and adjust his cross of "Ordre pour le Merite" in such sort that it hung down over the long coat collar directly under the chin. This operation, which long practice enabled him to perform in a few seconds, concluded, he walked to his window and stood in full view of the soldiers while they marched past.

One day an exalting personage who happened to be in conversation with the Emperor when the sound of distant drums and fifes having announced the approach of "Grand Guards," his Majesty hurriedly went through the above described "rapid act," took heart of grace and asked the Kaiser why he was so particular about buttoning the top button of his uniform before showing himself to his guards, "who after all," added Prince——, "enjoy almost daily an opportunity of seeing your Majesty face to face. I should have thought, sire, that you would scarcely deem it necessary to stand upon ceremony with them." "As the head of the army, I am bound to show my soldiers an irreproachable example in the way of tenue. They have never seen me with my coat unbuttoned, and I do not intend they ever shall. For, let me tell you, it is the one button left unbuttoned that is the ruin of an army."—Chicago Tribune.

Georgia's Lost Regiment.

Georgia furnished one regiment to the Federal service during the civil war. It was not a full regiment, and somehow the officers and men were never paid for their services. They are before this Congress with a petition. This Georgia command was made up among the unionists of Whitfield, Murray, Fannin, Dawson, and Pickens, the last two counties furnishing the majority of the recruits. James H. Brown, of Whitfield, was authorized by Gen. Thomas, commanding the Army of the Cumberland, to raise and equip a regiment for guard duty along the line of the Western and Atlantic railroad. Col. Brown accomplished his mission, organized several companies, and proved a valuable ally to the Federals during the stirring campaign that followed. When Sherman had approached very near the gates of Atlanta Col. Brown and his command came suddenly to grief. One evening, while he was in camp near the town of Cartersville, Gen. W. T. Wafford, who commanded a detachment of Confederate troops, raided his bivouac, and killed, captured, or scattered his men. No one ever heard of the command from that time until they approached this Congress with the demand that their muster-rolls be re-established and they be paid for their service. They are represented by W. H. Walker, an attorney of Belton.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

Our Girls and Slang—Grandfather's Advice—My Good Little Girl—A Modern Heroine.

A Modern Heroine.

Not every heroine needs must do
Some gallant thing.
That thrills a nation through and through
All wondering.

Not every heroine needs must stand
In blaze of glory,
Talked of and praised by all the land.
In poem and story.

Felicia is my heroine's name
And brave is she,
As any maiden known to fame
Or chivalry.

Dark, truthful eyes, a loving mouth
A sweet fair face;
A very maiden of the South,
With all its grace.

And she was loved as she should be
By one good, true;
No fitter, worthier mate than he,
As well she knew.

But a great trust was hers to hold
With courage rare;
A mother crippled, yet not old,
Must be her care.

And brothers, sisters growing up,
Asked all her love;
And she—she gladly took the cup
From God above.

And with a brave heart said "Good-bye"
To him so dear,
And followed Duty earnestly,
With scarce a tear.

Since then full twenty years have sped,
And from the nest
The little ones in turn have fled
On many a quest

But the old mother still remains
Her daughter's care.
And lo! my heroine finds her gains
All centred there!

The dear old face oft at her wiles
Glows like the sun;
In fancy then the master smiles
And says, "Well done."

An old, old story this, you say,
Thank God, it is!
We meet such heroines every day;
Just such as this!

Our Girls and Slang

A party of refined, educated people who filled a country house last summer formed themselves by common consent into a "Society for the Suppression of Slang." The fines imposed —I penny for each and every infringement of the rule prohibiting the use of slang words or phrases—were dropped into a foreign missionary box belonging to a member. Much fun and more serious reflection ensued upon the workings of the constitution and by-laws. The most careful speakers were confounded at finding themselves convicted as transgressors, while college boys and graduate girls declared that bankruptcy stared them in the face before the close of the season. One merry youth, who ran up from the city on Saturday afternoons to spend Sundays in the mountain retreat, habitually tendered a quarter of a dollar to the treasurer on alighting from the carriage that had met him at the station, with the request that he might "be notified when the amount was used up."

Paterfamilias was traveling abroad when the society was formed, and wrote home this dryly significant comment:

"With regard to the 'S. S. S.,' I have only to remark that the conversion of the world is now a mere question of time!"

The result of the establishment of similar organizations in other families and communities, with rigid enforcement of penalties, would astound members and lookers-on.

It is easier to lay hold of ready-made phrase that lies near the tongue, than to formulate thought into correct and forcible words. Just as censure is cheaper than discriminating praise and ore dearer than dirt. A child should be taught with the forming of his earliest sentences, that language is the vehicle of ideas, and that he dishonors the thing carried by neglect of that which bears it. Thought is to speech what the soul is to the body. Our Girl should dread to cast discredit upon her intellectual powers by robing what she thinks (which is what she is!) in second-hand rags, as much as she would shrink from debasing her clean body by apparel picked up in an old clothing store in Chatham or Baxter street.

The habit of slang is so fearfully contagious, and so nearly incorrigible when fairly contracted that one is amazed at the number and character of those who yield to it. The slovenly thing comes to the lips against the will of the speaker, who has flattered herself that she only uses in the deshabille speech, pardonable (in her estimation) when she is with her familiar friends.

Our Girl may be decorous of tongue while on her guard, although not fluent. She may not hope to emulate the brilliant woman at her side, who has thought it worth while to study conversation as one of the fine as well as useful arts, but she plods on reasonably well until she becomes animated or enthusiastic, when "out flies" the slang which is the every-day habit of her speech. Bitter mortification to herself and those who love her is so frequently the result of the experience, that wisdom might be bought by it.

Madame Recamier is reported to have assigned as the secret of her well-bred elegance of deportment, her rule of behaving when alone as if under the eyes of others. If Our Girl would lay to her speech with her family and intimate friends, the rule and plummet she essays to apply when conversing with comparative strangers, she would successfully overcome a habit which degrades her more than she dreams of. She ought not to feel it to be irksome to be compelled to abandon slip shod talk, but she does, and, by the very admission of the fact, announces her slavery to what sober reason condemns.

If "silence be golden, and speech silvern," slang must be the brassiest of binchbeck, and the passage of such coin should be treated as a social misdemeanor.

MARION HARLAND.

My Good Little Girl.

I was called one day in October to the family of a German who lived on a small place three miles from town. He was a poor man with many children, one of whom, a boy of 10 years, had diphtheria. I attended my patient faithfully, and he recovered. He had a sister two years older, called Sadie, who seemed inexpressibly grateful to me "for saving her brother Jimmy's life." Always she spoke of me as "the good doctor who saved brother Jimmy's life." And I in turn, won by her affectionate words and ways, fell into the habit of thinking and speaking of her as "my good little girl." Thus we became excellent friends.

Not long afterward Sadie herself had diphtheria, for which she was "very sorry, because it prevented her from gathering a bushel of hickory-nuts to pay me for saving brother Jimmy's life." In all her sicknesses she never expressed one regret for herself. Her disease ran ominously, but at last she seemed convalescent, and one day her father called to say that Sadie was very much better, and that I need not trouble myself to call again. But early the next morning he roused me and said he feared Sadie was dying. I hastened to her bedside and found that it was even so. She knew me. Beside her in bed, under the ragged quilt, she had a small bag of hickory-nuts, gathered by her the day before at the expense of her life. "For saving brother Jimmy," she gasped, and in a few moments my good little girl was dead.

A Severe Training.

One of the most unique of the many private dinners given this season at Delmonico's took place last week. On the plate of each guest and attached to the menu was a beautiful ring with an emerald stone, set in diamonds. The rings cost $1,000, and as there were eight guests, the menus, with their novel attachments, must have cost $8,000. The host was George Law, a street-railway magnate and several times a millionaire.

Persons who hear of Mr. Law's generosity and do not know him may think he is an improvident spendthrift. Not so, for he is a well-balanced man. It is admitted that every man has a weakness, and presenting his friends with jewelry is Mr. Law's weakness. Otherwise he is the most practical of business men. His father, who, by the way, supplied Sunset Cox with money for his congressional campaigns when he first settled in New York, put his son through very severe training. The elder Law was determined that he would have his son learn all the practical workings of his street-car system, so after young George graduated from college he became a hostler. He next became a street-car driver. But when not so occupied he lived in a princely manner. At noon, when he was given an hour for dinner, his valet would strip him of the garb of a street-car driver and dress him in "purple and fine linen," and then Mr. Law would proceed to Delmonico's and eat a $10 lunch.

When he became a conductor he wore a uniform that cost as much as any suit of clothes the king of dudes ever owned. These were the days before the elevated railroad, and the best people in the town rode on the street-car line upon which young Law was a conductor. At first it was exceedingly embarrassing to him to be compelled to collect the fare from some well-known society belle with whom he had possibly danced the night before. But he did not remain at this occupation more than two months when he was promoted to time-keeper, and from that he worked by slow degrees to be superintendent of the line which he now owns.

A Pet Alligator.

Two little daughters of Mrs. George Tabler, of Longview, Tex., have a cute little pet alligator about four feet in length whose name is Jim. Jim knows his little mistresses, recognizes his name when called, and submits or enjoys an unlimited amount of petting, particularly enjoys the scratching of his back, and, surprisingly, seems to be sensitive to the scratching through his thick skin. A dog excites his anger, and when intrudes upon his 'gatorship he issues forth a musk odor that is disagreeable to any well-regulated human olfactories. Jim's winter diet, so far as the family can notice, consists of mud, and whenever the weather is mild the 'gator is permitted to wallow in his mud-hole, whence it comes back puffed up until it looks like an Alderman, or a prairie pony after drinking and ending a two days' thirst. The little girls sometimes dress Jim up as a doll, and the reptile has quite supplanted pet clucking raccoons and squirrels in the affection of the girls, owing, it is supposed, to its odd ugliness.

Do Not Punish Unjustly.

After all, it is perhaps better that the child should be a little spoiled rather than it should be unjustly punished. The latter sometimes makes a very unhappy memory to carry about with one. A gentleman said a short time ago: "I shall never forget, though I have wished a thousand times that I could, how I punished little Mamie for continually pronouncing a word wrong—as I thought willfully—after I had tried hard to make her say it correctly. She was quiet for a few minutes after I had punished her, and then she looked up with a quivering lip and said: 'Papa, you will have to whip me again; I can't say it.' You can imagine just how I felt, and how I kept on remembering the look on her face and the tone of the sad little voice."—Detroit Tribune.

Longevity of Brain Workers.

Personal statistics singularly point out the fact that hard brain work and unremitting intellectual labor necessarily abbreviate life. If we take poets, we find that Rogers lived to be 93; Sophocles, 90; Calderon, 87; Juvenal, 86, Anacreon, 85; Voltaire, 84; Metastasio; 84; Euripides, 78. Gœthe, 83; Klopstock, 79; Wieland. 86; Lamartine, 78; Beranger, 77; and Victor Hugo, 83. If we turn to philosphers and men of science; we find among our contemporaries M. Chevreul, the French philosopher and chemist, who, on the evening of his 100th birthday, occupied the President's box at the opera; and if we look into the past, we find the names of Fontenelle, who died at 100; Hoyle (who wrote the treatise on whist) at 98; Hobbes, at 92; Morgagni, at 89; Ried, at 86; Dr. Heberden, at 60; Sir T. Watson, at 90 (?); Sir William Lawrence, at 84; Rover-Collard, at 82; William Harvet, at 80; Schelling, at 79; Cousin, at 76, and greatest of all, Plato, at 82.

The par value of the capital stock of the Standard Oil Trust is $90,000,000, and its market value is $140,000,000. The difference between those sums, says the Philadelphia Press, represents the tribute which public negligence pays to private monopoly.

Since the newspapers began to nominate Chauncey M. Depew for President, that popular man's mail has doubled a good many times over. He is averaging from 300 to 400 letters a day from patriots who wish him well, and hope that they may not be forgotten when he gets to Washington.

The future of Montana is contained in the following prophecy by a cashier of a bank in Helena: "We have four things to depend on in Montana—agriculture, cattle raising, horse raising and mining. There are twenty-seven millionaires living in Helena, and we ain't going to be a one-crop State."

Says a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette: "I paid a visit to Niagara Falls not long ago and heard a curious fact which may not be generally known. It is that Mr. Gladstone owns a patch of land on the Canadian side commanding a splendid view of the Falls. He was asked to sell when the Prospect Park improvements were being planned, but declined with thanks."

A stranger, who claims to be the second John the Baptist, is going through the country around Jeffersonville, Ky., conveying the intelligence that the world is coming to an end on the tenth day of the first Hebrew year coming. A great many timid people have been badly frightened by the information and great excitement exists in some localities. The man refuses to give his name or tell where he is from. He claims that he "can see a hand lifted to strike which no one else can see as yet, and can hear a voice not heard by others."

Military discipline aims to give the soldier such training that he shall never lose his head, and in an emergency shall do the very thing he ought to do. A soldier in India, the sergeant-major of the regiment, one morning was drilling a dozen recruits, when a tiger charged across the parade-ground straight at him. The sergeant immediately dropped on one knee, holding his musket with the bayonet fixed, as if about to receive a charge of cavalry. The tiger, not liking the point of the bayonet, made a spring over it and the sergeant, knocking off his shako, and rushed into the neighboring jungle.

It has been legally settled in Texas that the moon has an immense influence in enlarging the brand on cattle. A lawsuit was pending relative to the ownership of a herd of cattle; and the solution depended upon the proof of the brand, which was found on comparison to be three times as large as the branding iron which the claimant used. Thirteen witnesses were introduced, all of them experts in branding and cattle herding. They all swore that when cattle are branded in the dark of the moon the brand will never, no matter how large the animal grow, get larger than the dimensions of the iron used. On the other hand, when either grown cattle or calves are branded in the light of the moon the larger will be the spread. And the suit, involving several thousand dollars worth of cattle, was settled on the testimony. So the question is legally settled that it is the moon that does it.

A QUADRUPLE MURDER.

Reuben Drake, His Wife and Two Little Grandchildren Found Brutally Murdered in Their Lonely Farmhouse Near Kickapoo, Wis.

A murder rivaling in atrocity the Antoine Probst murder occurred in Kickapoo, Wis., by which Reuben Drake, his wife and two grandchildren, the children of James Dupee—four persons in all—met their death. Drake and wife are elderly people, living on a well-cultivated farm four and one-half miles southeast of the little village of Readstown, and about fifteen miles from Viroqua. Their little grandchildren lived but a few miles away, but were temporarily visiting the old folks. One morning a neighbor living about half a mile distant had occasion to go to Drake's on an errand and upon entering the door a fearful sight was presented. Drake and his wife lay near each other upon the floor, face downward, weltering in great pools of blood, which flowed from gaping gunshot wounds in their heads. Both were dead, and evidently had been for some hours. On the bed in an adjoining room lay the children, aged respectively five and six, with their throats cut. One of the little ones was yet alive when discovered, but too far gone to give any account of the terrible tragedy. Before medical aid could be summoned the child died, and no one was left to tell of the struggle in the lonely farm house, by which four human beings were sacrificed. The alarm was quickly given, and soon all the people of the sparsely settled neighborhood were at the scene of the tragedy. The little house had been ransacked and the furniture overturned, showing that the perpetrators had searched for money and valuables. Fresh footsteps were found leading to and from the house, but they were soon lost in the highway. The nearest neighbor's wife says that about 11 o'clock that night she heard three shots fired in the direction of Drake's, but thinking that it was some belated sportsman, gave the matter no attention. Another woman met a stranger on the highway just after dusk, who avoided her and hid in the brush. These are the only facts now known outside of the mute evidences found in the farm house of one of the most fearful crimes ever committed in Wisconsin. It is supposed the murderers sought to rob Mr. Drake of some pension money, which he had secured about a month ago, and it is not yet known whether they secured it or not. Drake and wife were aged about sixty years, and were hard-working and fairly well-to-do and intelligent people. The locality is an out-of-the-way place, sparsely settled and many miles from a railroad. It is thought that the fiendish deed was committed by some one living near who knew of the pension money, as it is a section seldom visited by tramps or strangers.

PRESBYTERIAN CENTENNIAL.

Presbyterians of the North and South Assemble Together for the First Time in a Quarter of a Century.

The Centennial day of the Presbyterian Church, and the members of the two general assemblies met in great mass meetings in the Academy of Music and Horticultural hall in Philadelphia. The crowds in attendance at both were enormous. It was the first reunion of the two great bodies of the Presbyterian church in America since the division, more than a quarter of a century ago. In the Academy of Music, Rev. J. J. Bullock, moderator of the Southern general assembly presided, and seated with him on the platform were Rev. William H. Roberts, stated clerk of the Northern general asembly; Rev. Joseph T. Smith, of Baltimore, ex-moderator of the Northern assembly; Rev. James McCosh, president of Princeton college; Rev. John Hall, of New York; Rev. Charles H. Stoddard, editor of the New York Observer, and many others. The great audience was apparently made up in equal proportions from representatives from the two assemblies. Rev. Dr. Bullock was introduced as officer. Dr. Smith, ex-moderator of the Northern general assembly, welcomed the Southern guests. The 5,000 people then rose and sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Dr. Bullock as the representative of the Southern assembly, cordially reciprocated the fraternal sentiments of the brethren from the North. The congregation sang "All people that on earth do dwell," and "All hail the power of Jesus' name." Rev. Dr. Cuyler of Brooklyn spoke on the "History of Presbyterianism." "The Work of Presbyterianism for the Future" was the subject of an address of Rev. T. Dwight Witherspoon of Louisville, Ky. A great audience also crowded Horticultural hall, adjoining the Academy. The same fraternal feeling was manifest among the commissioners of both bodies. Rev. Dr. Charles L. Thompson of Kansas City, the moderator of the Northern assembly, was in the chair. Moderator Thompson introduced Congressman William O. P. Breckinridge, of Lexington college, who spoke on "Calvinism and Religious Liberty." Rev. Howard Crosby, followed with an address on "Presbyterianism and Biblical Scholarship." He defended the verbal inspiration of the Bible. Mrs. Cleveland occupied a seat in the upper right hand box.

DAKOTA IN CONGRESS.

Her Proposed Admission the Subject of a Most Decidedly Animated Debate in the House.

The proposition for the admission of South Dakota into the Union was unexpectedly sprung upon the house. The humdrumming routine which usually marks the consideration of appropriation bills was proceeding, when without a moment's notice a warm political debate was precipitated. When a passage in relation to government officials in Dakota was reached, Mr. Gifford took the floor and in an extemporaneous speech gave expression to his views on Dakota, which he said was suffering under a miserable carpet bagging system of government. Her judges, governor and all the state officers were taken from other sections of the country and sent to rule over Dakota. The governor, when in office, appointed about ninety officials, and the judges appointed clerks and other court officials. None of those people were the choice of Dakota, but were forced upon her. Mr. Gifford asked leave to print his remarks in the Record, and then Mr. Butterworth, who had charge of the Republican end of the debate on the legislative bill, yielded ten minutes' time to Mr. Baker of New York, who covered the general grounds of Dakota's demand for admission. Springer, who had come over to the aisle to closely follow the speaker, arose to reply. Butterworth, Symes of Colorado, Representatives Gear, Kerr and Struble of Iowa and others pounced upon Springer like hawks as soon as he had begun to speak, and for half an hour there was a lively discharge of oratorical musketry at short range. The whole house, Democrats and Republicans, laughed heartily at the figure Springer cut as question after question, and shot after shot was poured into him, but it had no effect whatever upon him, and he "bobbed up serenely" each time as if nothing had happened.

FIVE NEW BISHOPS.

Doctors Newman and Goodsell Added to the List of Methodist Bishops.

Two more bishops—Drs. Newman and Goodsell—were elected by the M. E. conference in session at New York and the list now is complete.

John Philip Newman was born in New York City Sept. 1, 1826. He graduated at Cazenovia seminary in 1848 and entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal church the same year. He was the editor of the New Orleans advocate from 1866 to 1869. He was pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. church at Washington from 1869 to 1873 and chaplain of the United States senate from 1869 to 1873. In December, 1873, he was appointed by President Grant inspector of the United States consulate, and in that capacity made a tour of the world. From 1882 to 1884 Dr. Newman preached in the Madison Avenue Congregational church, New York city. He was Gen. Grant's pastor from 1869 to 1885. He is a member of the British Society of Biblical archæology, and is the author of several successful works.

Rev. Dr. Dabiel A. Goodsell is regarded one of the most conservative ministers of the church. He has been for fifteen months the secretary of the church board of education. He was born in Newburg, N. Y., in 1840, and his father, Rev. Buell Goodsell, was a well known minister in New York. Dr. Goodsell was graduated by the University of New York, and his entire ministry has been in New York and its vicinity. He was pastor at different times of the Green Point tabernacle, the Washington Street and the New York Avenue churches of Brooklyn and Trinity and the First Methodist church of New Haven.

Wholesale Dakota Conventions.

Gen. Hugh J. Campbell's call for a convention of divisionists and statehood supporters will be before the public in a few days. It is all prepared and will appear in the newspapers simultaneously. The call is for a general convention of 700 delegates, composed of North and South Dakota men, at Huron July 10 and 11. It is signed by H. J. Campbell of Yankton, John A. Owen of De Smet, J. C. Headley, Salem, of the central committee of the State of South Dakota. The object of the convention will be to lay out plans for the fall campaign, and to unite divisionists from all Dakota in a solid phalanx. Following closely upon the call for a general convention will come several calls—one for a convention of the legal bar of Dakota at Huron, July 12. Its object will be to review and pass upon the work of the general convention as to its legality. This cause is assigned by over one hundred prominent attorneys. There is also a call for a convention of farmers and business men of Dakota for July 12. The call is drawn by Hon. D. W. Diggs of Milbank, and signed by over three hundred bankers and tradesmen. Its object is to express the views of the mercantile interests as to steps recommended by the general convention. Then there is a call for a convention of the Dakota press for July 12, at Huron, to lend aid to the divisionist and lay plans for future work through the press. The call is drawn by Augustine Davis, editor of the Dakota Huronite, and W. S. Bowen, editor of the Yankton Press and Dakotian, and signed by over one hundred Dakota editors. There is a call for a convention of ministers of Dakota at Huron July 12, drawn by Rev. D. D. McCaslin of Huron, Rev. Joseph Ward, D. D., president of Yankton college, and Rev. C. E. Hager of Madison, and signed by 400 other ministers. Its object is to review the proceedings of the general convention, and advise the people as to the morality and rightfulness of division and statehood plans. One thousand delegates are expected to be present. The different calls are signed by leading men in North and South Dakota.

The United States treasurer has paid out $12,500,000 during the present month on account of pensions alone, notwithstanding which fact the excess of receipts over expenditures during the month is nearly $5,000,000. The treasury surplus, which fell to $96,000,000 at one time during the month, has again risen to $101,000,000.

The president has approved the act authorizing him to arrange a conference between the United States and Mexico, Central America, Hayti, San Domingo and Brazil; the act to limit the hours that letter carriers in cities shall be employed per day, and the act for the relief of the first National Bank of Marion, Iowa.

Sir Charles Tupper has resigned as minister of finance in the Canadian government, and has been reappointed high commissioner for Canada in London. Hon. C. E. Foster, minister of marine, has been appointed minister of finance.

A cyclone swept over Browntown, twenty-five miles east of Browntown, Texas, destroying the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational churches and eight dwelling houses. One building was carried across the railroad track and crushed, and Amanda Willis, colored, who had taken refuge inside, was instantly killed. Eight persons, including the sheriff and county recorder, were fatally injured.

Mrs. George Reed, of Napannee, Elkhart county, Indiana, took her three-months-old child in her arms and jumped into a well—both were drowned. She left a note saying that she was tired of living and would take her child with her to rest. Her age was 23.

Science and the Bible.

At the session of the general assembly of the Southern Presbyterian church at Baltimore, the case of Rev. Dr. Woodrow of Georgia was resumed, and he continued the presentation of his appeal. He quoted from his speech and writings in which he supported the idea of evolution, and said:

He had been charged with subordinating the Scriptures to science. This was not true. He had never spoken or written a word which could bear any such construction. He had never taught a word that would throw a doubt upon the headship of Adam, without regard to the manner in which, or the material of which God formed his body. He believed Adam was a miraculous creation. He held all his beliefs to the teaching of the Holy Scriptures and to nothing else. So he holds his opinion as to the formation of Adam's body. Upon any subject of which the Scriptures are silent he accepts natural history as his guide, but only on such subjects. As a church court, the general assembly had nothing to do with his view outside the teachings of the Bible. All it has to do is to discover if his teachings conflict with the Scriptures, and if they do not then the case must end. He quoted from Paddington, Brown and others their views of the dust of which man was formed, meaning dust from which, through steps from one stage to another, man came to have dominion over all other living creatures. It made no difference whether the formation of Adam's body was mediate or immediate. He was made a living soul, and God made a covenant with him. The presbytery of Augusta could not find a conviction against the speaker's belief for he had not antagonized the Bible. He had not taught that God had performed his works supernaturally. That will have to be determined by each individual mind. He believed that God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and yet he was charged with teaching contrary to the Bible and the standards because he went beyond and believed beyond what was not contained in them or upon which they were silent. To sustain the synod of Georgia would be to condemn all who believe there may be some truth in evolution. It was a fact that the church had never failed in deciding on science to decide wrong.

Rev. William Adams of Augusta, the prosecutor, followed in defense of the action of the Georgia synod in suspending Mr. Woodrow. He said that Mr. Woodrow's doctrine served to unsettle the minds of the church people, and that the question should be disposed of by the convention now and forever.

Labor's Cause.

The floor of the house was accorded one day last week to the committee of labor, and Mr. O'Neill of Missouri, chairman of that committee, called up the bill to confine the sale of the products of convict labor to the state in which they are produced. Mr. O'Neill explained:

The measure originated in a visit to this city of manufacturers from New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Philadelphia, and other cities who appeared before the committee and pictured the absolute ruin that stared them in the face from the competition of convict labor. One industry after another was attacked by this convict labor system, and in each case the industry was obliged to lower the rates of wages or go out of business. Men who were paying $2 and $2.50 a day to their employes, found themselves face to face with competitors who paid only five cents an hour. The labor organization of the country had urged upon the committee the necessity for the passage of the bill.

A long discussion ensued, one of the speakers being Mr. Wilson of Minnesota, who argued against the bill on constitutional grounds. An amendment was adopted prohibiting the importation for commercial purposes of all goods, wares or merchandise from any foreign country to the United States which, in whole or in part, were manufactured or produced by convict labor, and prescribing penalties for the violation of this prohibition. The previous question was then ordered—yeas 185, nays 43—on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, and then the house adjourned. The senate passed, with amendments, the house bill to establish a department of labor. Mr. O'Neil had an interview with the speaker and Mr. Randall was assured that the committee on rules will give additional time to the committee on labor, which, he says, guarantees the passage of the bill.

The bill provides for a department of labor, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with labor, and especially upon its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual and moral prosperity. The personnel is to consist of a commissioner, to be appointed by the president, and confirmed by the senate, who is to hold office for four years and recive a salary of $5,000; a chief clerk, stenographer, minor clerks, copyists and messengers.

Two New Bishops.

At the conference in New York, Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent, of the Rock River conference, and Rev. J. W. Fitzgerald, of the New Jersey conference, were elected bishops. Dr. Vincent was born at Tuscaloosa, Ala., Nov. 23, 1832. In 1838 he moved to Pennsylvania. He was educated at the Milton and Lewisburg seminaries and at the Newark Wesleyan institute. He was a licensed exhorter in 1849, and in 1850 a local preacher in the Baltimore conference. From 1852 to 1857 he had charges in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. He established in Illinois in 1865 the Northwestern Sunday School Quarterly. In 1868 he was elected secretary of the Sunday school union, a position he still occupies. In 1874 with Lewis Miller he established the Chautauqua circle. He was at one time the pastor of Gen. Grant. Rev. J. W. Fitzgerald is fifty years of age, and was born at Newark, N. J. He studied at the Newark academy and then at Princeton college. On leaving college he studied law with Chancellor Runyan and Secretary Frelinghuysen, and was admitted to the bar. He was admitted to the church thirty years ago. He was presiding elder of the Newark conference until seven years ago when he was elected recording secretary of the missionary society. After the election of these two bishops a fourth ballot was taken, but an adjournment was taken before the count. While the third ballot was being taken, a resolution was carried making the time limit five years.

Railroads Crowding the Indians.

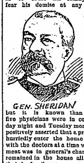
Senator Sabin introduced a bill to grant the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad right of way through the Fond du Lac Indian reservation in Minnesota. The right of way is not to exceed 100 feet, and two stations are to be allowed on the reservation, an additional space 300 feet wide and 3,000 feet long being allowed for stations, shops etc. In the senate Mr. Spooner called up and had passed the senate bill granting the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western railway right of way through the Lac de Flambeau reservation. Numerous unimportant amendments were added. The senate passed the senate bill granting the right of way to the Yankton & Missouri Valley Railroad company through the Yankton Indian reservation, Washington Territory. The house committee on Indian affairs ordered a favorable report on the house bill granting to the Puyallup Railway company right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation, Washington Territory.

The supreme court of Ohio has reversed the decision of Franklin county, in the $8,000,000 Hocking Valley case, and sent it back to the lower court for further hearing. In the former suit the railroad company won the case against Stephenson Burke of Cleveland and other former owners and officials of the company, the object being to compel them to account for $8,000,000 of securities, which it is claimed were wrongly appropriated.

A dispatch from India says, that 3,000 Thibetans recently attacked Gratong, which is defended by a small British force, and that after several hours' fighting the Thibetans retreated, leaving 100 dead. The British loss was three killed and seven wounded.

The Lieutenant General.

Herald's Washington special: From thoroughly reliable sources, it is learned that the story of Gen. Sheridan's illness was only half told. He has been very ill, indeed, dangerously so. For twenty-four hours from Monday dinner hour, his condition was such as to cause his family physician to fear his demise at any moment. He had a stroke of apoplexy. On account of the efforts of members of the household and other intimate friends to conceal the true facts of the general's illness, it is difficult to learn just when the first symptoms appeared, but it is known than no less than five physicians were in consultation Monday night and Tuesday morning. It is also positively asserted that a priest was seen to hurriedly enter the house simultaneously with the doctors at a time when all excitement was in general's chamber above. He remained in the house all night, showing that the family was prepared for the worst. All Monday night the general was in a semi-conscious state and it was not until noon next day that he showed signs of improvement. He has continued to improve, and is now believed to be past the critical state.



GEN. SHERIDAN

Gossip About Villard.

The telegraphed from New York to the effect that Henry Villard is soon to be in control of the Northern Pacific railway and the Oregon & Transcontinental company again arouses a good deal of interest in Milwaukee, owing to the fact that the Wisconsin Central railway is also controlled by Villard and his friends. Some interesting facts have transpired about Villard's relations with the Oregon & Transcontinental company and the Northern Pacific railroad. When the money market was tight and the company had difficulty to meet the demands upon it, Mr. Villard came forward, and, on a few days' notice furnished the Oregon Transcontinental company with $5,000,000, which relieved it of all its embarassment, and placed it on a firm footing. He also found purchasers for the Oregon Railway and Navigation bonds, thus furnishing to that company all the money it required. This year Mr. Villard took a large part of the Northern Pacific third mortgage bonds. Mr. Villard's friends in Germany have not only been willing to furnish large sums of money for these but are ready to continue to do so, so far as may be required, and they have purchased a large amount of the Oregon Transportation company's stock, with the expectation that Mr. Villard will hereafter be prominent in the management of the company.

A Novel Point.

A message from the president returning without approval the senate bill for the relief of L. J. Warder, recently postmaster at Lawrence, Kan., for an allowance of $625 for extra clerk hire was laid before the senate. The grounds of the veto are:

Such allowances are fixed by the postmaster general, and in this case two applications for additional allowance had been declined. The expense was, therefore, incurred at the postmaster's risk and the passage of special acts in such cases would have a dangerous tendency to encourage postmasters to substitute their own judgment for that of the department and to relax wholesome discipline. The time allowed by the constitution for the approval of bills expired in this case on the 19th inst. The senate adjourned from May 17 until May 21. The message was drawn and engrossed on the 18th. On the 19th the message and bill were tendered to the secretary of the senate, who declined to receive them on the ground that they could only be presented to the senate in actual session, and they were therefore transmitted as soon as the senate convened, with this explanation.

Mr. Hoar said the communication raised a very important constitutional question, and moved its reference to the committee on privileges and elections, which was agreed to.

Who Was the Forger?

Maris & Smith, brokers, of No. 20 South Third street Philadelphia, are the firm whose name was used by the person or persons who sent to Secretary Fairchild the bogus offer of $5,265,000 of bonds on the 18th. A member of the firm said:

A letter was sent to Mr. Fairchild which contained an offer of $5,000,000 of 4 1-2 per cent bonds at $1.08, and $265,000 of 4 per cent bonds at $1.27. Both were accepted by Mr. Fairchild. There was no attempt on the part of the forger, whoever he was, to imitate the firm's signature. The first intimation we had of the matter was when Assistant United States Treasurer Page informed us that the bonds offered by us had been accepted by the government. I sent word to Mr. Page that we had not offered the bonds to the government. An investigation then followed, and as soon as we saw the letter we informed Mr. Page that a forgery had been committed. Detectives were put upon the case at once, and although a certain party is suspected of the crime, no proof of his guilt has been discovered. The thing was done of course for stock jobbing purposes, and the market, as you know, improved after the announcement of the purchase. The government can hold the forger, if he is apprehended, and I suppose he can be severly punished. We are now doing all we can to discover the guilty party.

Double Railroad Wreck.

A railroad wreck, followed in ten minutes by another wreck, occurred at a point fifty miles from Kansas City, where the Hannibal & Wabash roads run parallel. The accident resulted in the death of four men and the injury of three others, one of whom will die. The late terrific rain had washed away a bridge over a ravine, and the first accident occurred when an east bound Rock Island freight train was thrown into the ditch. Y. Royston, a brakeman of Edgerton Junction, Kan., was on top of one of the cars that went down into the debris. He was crushed beyond recognition. Immediately afterwards Edward C. Armstrong, a brakeman, was sent ahead to flag the Hannibal freight. He mistook the tracks, and was walking along the Wabash road when the Wabash freight dashed around a curve and instantly killed him. The Wabash train met the same fate as the Rock Island, as the two bridges were only two feet apart and were connected and the heavy cars plunged down on the wreck of the first train. Two dead bodies were taken out soon afterward. Neither of the men could be recognized, and it is supposed they were tramps. Engineer Ben McClellan, of the Wabash train, was badly hurt in jumping, and Ben Morris, a negro youth, was so badly hurt that he is expected to die. John Snyder, the Rock Island fireman, also suffered slight injuries. It will be some time before the track can be cleared. Meanwhile, both roads will use other tracks.

The Missouri supreme court received in the mandate of the United States supreme court in the case of Hugh M. Brooks, alias Maxwell, the Englishman convicted of the sensational Southern Hotel murder. Court adjourned without fixing the date of the execution. It will not convene again until June 4, when the date for the execution will be named and the mandate forwarded to the sheriff of St. Louis. Maxwell was much affected when he was informed that the state court would in a few days dispose of his case forever. His trans-Atlantic friends are working hard on Secretary Bayard, Minister Phelps, Minister West, and Gov. Morehouse. A half dozen different petitions are in circulation in St. Louis, but the signatures are few.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Senate and House.

SENATE.

The senate decided by a vote of 28 to 27 not to consider the fisheries treaty in open session. The division was upon strict party lines, except in the case of Senator Hale, who voted with the democrats adversely to the Riddleberger resolution. No time has yet been fixed for the taking up of the treaty.

HOUSE.

In the house Mr. McShane reported from the Indian committee Mr. Toole's bill to provide for the sale of certain lands patented to the Flathead tribe of Indians. These lands are located in the Bitter Root valley, Mont.

SENATE.

The Senate committee on agriculture has ordered a favorable report on the Hatch bill to enlarge the duties of the department of agriculture, and make it an executive department.

The committee on appropriations has completed the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. It has made a net reduction of $226,000, making the total appropriation $8,172,000.

The best opinion now is that the report of the senate committee on Mr. Fuller's nomination will be a favorable one, and that all the Republicans, with possibly two exceptions—Ingalls and Edmunds—will vote with the Democrats to so report it. Undoubtedly a good many Republicans will vote against confirmation.

HOUSE.

Mr. Hudd called up and passed in the house to-day the senate bill to allow the Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western road right of way through the Lac du Flambeau reservation in Wisconsin. Mr. Nelson introduced a bill granting the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad right of way through the Fond du Lac reservation.

The House committee on appropriations has ordered an unfavorable report on Representative Outhwaite's bill appropriating $113,000 to defray the expense of a government exhibit at the Cleveland exposition next fall.

SENATE.

The senate has confirmed James D. Jenkins of Osage, Iowa, to be agent for the Indians of the Sisseton agency in Dakota.

The presiding officer of the senate announced as the select committee to examine into all questions touching the meat product of the United States, Senators Vest, Plumb, Manderson, Cullom and Coke.

The Spooner bill putting telegraph companies under the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission is likely to be reported favorably to the senate. Unless the bill is made more radical than the committee now seem likely to make it, the Western Union will make no opposition to it. These people are inclined to favor a moderate bill for the reason that if they were under government regulation they think it would stop, or at least turn aside a great deal of the adverse criticism which is periodically showered upon them, and stave off the day of government telegraph.

Senator Vest introduced the house bill granting the Duluth, Rainy Lake River & Southwestern Railway company the right to construct and maintain a pivot drawbridge across the Red River of the North, between Minnesota and Dakota.

HOUSE.

The house adopted a resolution authorizing the committee on foreign affairs to inquire into the facts concerned with the imprisonment in an English jail of John Curtin Kent, a naturalized American citizen. Kent was recently convicted of a dynamite conspiracy in London, and sentenced to imprisonment. The American consul general at London says the American citizenship of Kent was shown in the trial, and the conviction was in direct conflict with the charge of the court.

The postoffice appropriation bill was passed. During the debate the inefficient postal service in the west was thoroughly ventilated. Mr. Toole of Montana and Mr. Voorhees of Washington Territory voiced the wishes of the people of the territories for a more efficient mail service than they were now receiving. The conduct of First Assistant Postmaster General Stevenson was the subject of unfavorable Republican comment.

SENATE.

The senate finance subcommittee held its first meeting upon the tariff bill. The meeting was designed only to bring out the views of the members as to the proper course to pursue in the preparation of the bill.

Several hours were spent in secret session ostensibly discussing the motion of Senator Sherman to proceed to the consideration of the fisheries treaty with open doors but in reality debating the merits of the treaty itself. Senator Morgan was the principal speaker.

The senate considered the house bill making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs. The bill passed with amendments, the principal one striking out the clause repealing the law making a permanent annual appropriation of $5,500,000 for such expenses.

Senator Blair introduced a joint resolution providing for the following amendment to the constitution: That no state shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that every state shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools, but that no money raised by taxation shall ever be appropriated, applied or given for any school, institution, corporation or person, whereby instruction is given in any doctrine, tenets, beliefs and ceremonials or observations peculiar to any religious sect.

HOUSE.

The speaker laid before the House a letter from the attorney-general asking for a deficiency appropriation of $110,000 for the present fiscal year for witness and jurors fees in the United States and territorial courts of Utah.

The conferees on the part of the House on Representative O'Neill's bill creating a department of labor, have reached an agreement by accepting the Senate amendments, which were merely formal.

Knute Nelson filed in the house and referred to the committee on ways and means a letter from H. L. Loucks, of Clear Lake, Dak., giving reasons, cogently stated why farm machinery should be placed on the free list. He says that American binders cost more and are no better than Canadian binders.

SENATE.

The Senate committee to investigate the Jackson, Miss., election riots, after a suspension of three or four weeks, has resumed its sittings, having secured six fresh witnesses from Jackson. The sittings are continued with closed doors.

The sub committee of the committee on finance of the Senate having in charge the investigation of the tariff will consider the glass and earthenware schedule, and will hear during the remainder of the week such persons as have information to give respecting this schedule.

HOUSE.

Caucuses were held by Republican and Democratic members of the house.

The select committee of the house which investigated the late strike on the Reading railroad will recommend some drastic legislation that is likely to be unpalatable to both the railroads and their employes. The propositions under consideration are: An absolute provision for placing in the hands of a receiver any railroad company which as the result of differences with its employes fails for ten ten days to operate the road; a requirement that all train crews but no other employes shall give ten days' notice of an intention to quit work; and that the railroad companies must give ten days' notice to their employes of a reduction of wages.

Jacob Boatright, colored, was sold at public auction at Marshall, Mo., for a term of six months for $2.50. He had been convicted of vagrancy.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

William, son of James Seegar of Lake City, had his hand perforated by a bullet while fooling with a revolver.

John Shell, the section hand who was run over by a hand car at Lake City, will not be permanently disabled by his injuries.

A fair and festival was given in the church at Browntown under the auspices of the Episcopal church society. Over $70 was raised for church purposes. C. H. Slocum, of the Glencoe Register, who, with others, came up to participate in the exercises, while getting off the train made a misstep and fell with much force on the track and was badly injured in the face. His right cheek and nose were cut seriously.

Dr. Hewitt, secretary of the Minnesota Health association, has just completed the death rate tables for 1887, which show that 12,731 deaths occurred during the year. More than 9 per cent of the deaths resulted from consumption.

John Bossel, of Le Sueur, while at work for the Omaha railroad near Henderson shoveling gravel, was struck by a heavy stone, which fractured two or three ribs and gave his entire system a terrible shock.

A vein of soft coal has been discovered on the line of the Minneapolis & St Louis road near Jordan at a depth of seventy feet below the surface. The deposit is said to be extensive and a company has already been formed to continue explorations and open a mine as soon as practicable.

In the district court at New Ulm in the case of the state vs. B. Sturne, for stabbing Joseph Hoescherl, the grand jury failed to indict and Sturne was discharged. He has been in jail there for a year.

Old Abe Post No. 30 has decided to hold the encampment at Lake Benton on June 19, 20 and 21. The ladies have been doing all in their power to aid the old soldiers. They have been instrumental in organizing a broom bregade, composed of 48 young ladies, who are drilling daily for a contest between themselves and companies from a distance. Fack Bailey, commander, is doing everything to insure a pleasant welcome to his visitors.

At Fergus Falls, while the 11-year-old daughter of a farmer named John Svenson Olnes, was cooking, her clothes caught fire. She ran out to call her father, but a neighbor passing caught her and carried her to the Pomme de Terre river, where the fire was extinguished, but not before she was fatally burned.

Thomas Conway of Otter Tail County was arrested at Barnesville for horse stealing.

William Otto committed suicide at St. Cloud by taking a dose of strychnine while drunk. He was a tough citizen, having served a term in the penitentiary.

A special election of the village of Luverne will soon be called to vote additional bonds to the amount of $3,000 to complete the new town hall. A committee appointed by the board of trade has been investigating the jasper stone quarries with a view of operating the same by a joint stock company.

Martinka, who was shot at New Ulm, died at the hospital recently. A coroner's inquest and post mortem was held. The verdict of the jury was that Martinka came to his death from a gun shot supposed to have been fired by Marshal Winkleman or Patrolman Loesch. The attorneys for the defense cross-examined, but submitted no testimony.

Peter Roth, who lived near the Polar Star miles at Faribault died after a lingering illness. A post mortem examination was held, and it was found that one of the kidneys was very much enlarged and filled with pus. His lungs was found to be affected also. Fourteen years ago he was accidently shot, and it was one of those peculiar cases where the physician could not tell whether the ball lodged in the body or not. No traces of the ball was found upon the examination, and the physicians thinks that his kidney trouble was caused by a fall which he had about a year ago.

A Democratic authority at Washington states that the following estimate has been made by democrats and republicans, as to the probable fate of the Mills bill. Under a liberal statement from the democratic standpoint, there are now 163 votes in favor, and 162 against the bill in its present shape. There are 168 democrats, 153 republicans and 4 independents. Three of the latter will probably vote for the bill and one against it. Thus the full strength of the two parties in the house is 171 democrats and 154 republicans. The republicans reason that the democrats will lose 9 votes and gain 1, and perhaps 8 republican votes, which gives the Mills bill 163. The republicans expect to gain 9 votes and lose 1, which gives them a total of 162.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Sorrows, Misfortunes, and Trials Are Great Educators and Develop Character.

These Made John Bunyan the Better Dreamer and Dr. Young the Better Poet.

The opening hymn at the Tabernacle service Sunday began with the words:

More love to Thee, O Christ,
More love to Thee.

After making a running commentary on some passages of scripture the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., took the text: "And she went, and came, and gleaned in the field after the reapers; and her hap was too light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech." Ruth ii; 3. He preached from these words the following sermon:

The time that Ruth and Naomi arrive at Bethlehem is harvest-time. It was the custom when a sheaf fell from a load in a harvest-field for the reapers to refuse to gather it up; that was to be left for the poor who might happen to come along that way. If there were handfuls of grain scattered across the field after the main harvest had been reaped, instead of raking it as farmers do now, it was, by the custom of the land, left in its place so that the poor, coming along that way, might glean it and get their bread. But you say: "What is the use of all these harvest-fields to Ruth and Naomi? Naomi is too old and feeble to go out and toil in the sun; and can you expect that Ruth, the young and the beautiful, should tan her cheeks and blister her hands in the harvest-field?"

Boaz owns a large farm, and he goes out to see the reapers gather in the grain. Coming there, right behind the swarthy, sunbrowned reapers, he beholds a beautiful woman gleaning—a woman more fit to bend to a harp or sit upon a throne than to stoop among the sheaves. Ah, that was an eventful day.

It was love at first sight. Boaz forms an attachment for the womanly gleaner—an attachment full of undying interest to the church of God in all ages; while Ruth, with an ephah, or nearly a bushel of barley, goes home to Naomi to tell her the successes and adventures of the day. That Ruth, who left her native land of Moab in darkness, and traveled through on undying affection for her mother-in-law, in the harvest-field of Boaz, is affianced to one of the best families in Judah, and becomes in after time the ancestress of Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory. Out of so dark a night did there ever dawn so bright a morning?

I learn in the first place from this subject how trouble developes character. It was bereavement, poverty, and exile that developed, illustrated, and announced to all ages the sublimity of Ruth's character. That is a very unfortunate man who has no trouble. It was sorrow that made John Bunyan the better dreamer, and Dr. Young the better poet, and O'Connell the better orator, and Bishop Hall the better preacher, and Havelock the better soldier, and Kitto the better encyclopedist, and Ruth the better daughter-in-law.

I once asked an aged man in regard to his pastor, who was a very brilliant man: "Why is it that your pastor, so very brilliant, seems to have so little heart and tenderness in his sermons?" "Well," he replied, "the reason is our pastor has never had any trouble. When misfortune comes upon him his style will be different." After a while the Lord took a child out of that pastor's house, and though the preacher was just as brilliant as he was before, oh, the warmth, the tenderness of his discourses. The fact is that trouble is a great educator. You see sometimes a musician sit down at an instrument, and his execution is cold and formal and unfeeling. The reason is that all his life he has been prospered. But let misfortune or bereavement come to that man, and he sits down at an instrument, and you discover the pathos in the first sweep of the keys.

Misfortune and trials are great educators. A young doctor comes into the sick-room where there is a dying child. Perhaps he is very rough in his prescription, and very rough in his manner, and rough in the feeling of the pulse, and rough in his answer to the mother's anxious question, but years roll on, and there has been one dead in his own house; and now he comes into the sick room, and with tearful eyes he looks at the dying child, and he says: "Oh, how this reminds me of my Charlie!" Trouble, the great educator. Sorrow, I see its touch in the grandest painting; I hear the tremor in the sweetest song; I feel its power in the mightiest argument.

Grecian mythology said that the foundation of Hippocrene was struck out by the foot of the winged horse, Pegasus. I have often noticed in life that the brightest and most beautiful fountains of Christian comfort and spiritual life have been struck out by the iron-shod hoof of disaster and calamity. I see Daniel's courage best by the flash of Nebuchadnezzar's furnace. I see Paul's prowess best when I find him on the foundering ship under the glare of the lightning in the breakers of Melita. God crowns his children amid the howling of wild beasts, and the chopping blood-splashed guillotine, and the crackling fires of martyrdom. It took the persecutions of Marcus Aurelius to develope Polycarp and Justin Martyr. It took the world's anathema to develope Martin Luther. It took all the hostilities against the Scotch covenanters and the fury of Lord Claverhouse to develope James Renwick and Andrew Melville and Hugh McKail, the glorious martyrs of Scotch history. It took the stormy sea, and the December blast, and the desolate New England coast, and the war-whoop of savages to show forth the prowess of the pilgrim fathers.

When amid the storms they sang,
And the stars heard and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim wood
Rang to the anthems of the free.

It took all our past national distresses to lift up our nation on that high career where it will march along after the foreign aristocracies that have mocked and the tyrannies that have jeered shall be swept under the omnipotent wrath of God, who hates despotism, and who by the strength of his own red right arm will make all men free. And so it is individually, and in the family, and in the church, and in the world, that through darkness and storm and trouble men, women, churches, nations, are developed.

2. Again I see in my text the beauty of unfaltering friendship. I suppose there were plenty of friends for Naomi while she was in prosperity; but of all her acquaintances how many were willing to trudge off with her toward Judah when she had to make that lonely journey? One—the heroine of my text. One—absolutely. I suppose when Naomi's husband was living and they had plenty of money and all things went well they had a great many callers; but I suppose that after her husband died and her property went and she had got old and poor she was not troubled very much with callers. All the birds that sung in the bower while the sun shone have gone to their nests now the night has fallen.

Oh, these beautiful sunflowers, that spread out their color in the morning hour, but are always asleep when the sun is going down! Job had plenty of friends when he was the richest man in Uz; but when his property went and the trials came, then there were none so much that pestered as Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite.

Life often seems to be a mere game, where the successful player pulls down all the other men into his own lap. Let suspicions arise about a man's character and he becomes like a bank in a panic, and all the imputations rush on him and break down in a day that character which in due time would have had strength to defend itself. There are reputations that have been half a century in building, which go down under some moral exposure, as a vast temple is consumed by the touch of a sulphurous match. A hog can uproot a century plant.

In this world so full of heartlessness and hypocrisy, how thrilling it is to find some friend as faithful in days of adversity as in the days of prosperity! David had such a friend in Hushai; the Jews had such a friend in Mordecai, who never forgot their cause; Paul had such a friend in Onesiphorus, who visited him in jail; Christ had such in the Marys, who adhered to Him on the cross; Naomi had such a one in Ruth, who cried out, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also if aught but death part thee and me."

3. Again, I learn from this subject that paths which open in hardship and darkness often come out in places of joy. When Ruth started from Moab toward Jerusalem to go along with her mother-in-law I suppose the people said: "Oh, what a foolish creature to go away from her father's house to go off with a poor old woman toward the land of Judah! They won't live to get across the desert. They will be drowned in the sea or the jackals of the wilderness will destroy them." It was a very dark morning when Ruth started off with Naomi; but behold her in my text in the harvest-field of Boaz to be affianced to one of the lords of the land and become one of the grandmothers of Jesus Christ, the lord of glory. And so it often is that a path which starts very darkly ends very brightly.

When you started out for heaven, oh, how dark was the hour of conviction—how Sinai thundered and devils tormented and the darkness thickened! All the sins of your life pounced upon you, and it was the darkest hour you ever saw when you first found out your sins. After awhile you went into the harvest field of God's mercy; you began to glean in the fields of divine promise, and you had more sheaves than you could carry as the voice of God addressed you, saying: "Blessed is the man whose transgressions are forgiven and whose sins are covered." A very dark starting in conviction, very bright ending in the pardon and the hope and the triumph of the gospel.

So, very often in our worldly business or in our spiritual career, we start off on a very dark path. We must go. The flesh may shrink back, but there is a voice within, or a voice from above, saying: "You must go;" and we have to drink the gall, and we have to carry the cross, and we have to traverse the desert, and we are pounded and flailed of misrepresentation and abuse, and we have to urge our way through ten thousand obstacles that must be slain by our own right arm. We have to ford the river, we have to climb the mountain, we have to storm the castle; but, blessed be God, the day of rest and reward will come. On the tip-top of the captured battlements we will shout the victory; if not in this world, then in that world where there is no gall to drink, no burdens to carry, no battles to fight. How do I know it? Know it! I know it because God says so: "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water, and God shall wipe all tears from their eyes."

It was very hard for Noah to endure the scoffing of the people in his day, while he was trying to build his ark, and was every morning quizzed about his old boat that would never be of any practical use; but when the deluge came and the tops of the mountains disappeared like the backs of sea-monsters, and the elements, lashed up in fury, clapped their hands over a drowned world, then Noah in the ark rejoiced in his own safety and in the safety of his family and looked out on the wreck of a ruined earth.

Christ, hounded of persecutors, denied a pillow, worse maltreated than the thieves on either side of the cross, human hate smacking its lips in satisfaction after it had been draining His last drop of blood, the sheeted dead bursting from the sepulchers at His crucifixion. Tell me, O Gethsemane and Golgotha, were there ever darker times than those? Like the booming of the midnight sea against the rock, the surges of Christ's anguish beat against the gates of eternity, to be echoed back by all the thrones of heaven and all the dungeons of hell. But the day of reward comes for Christ; all the pomp and dominion of this world are to be hung on His throne, uncrowned heads are to bow before Him, on whose head are many crowns, and all the celestial worship is to come up at His feet, like the humming of the forest, like the rushing of the waters, like the thundering of the seas, while all heaven, rising on their thrones, beat time with their sceptres: "Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth! Hallelujah, the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ!"

"That song of love, now low and far,
Ere long shall swell from star to star;
That light, the breaking day which tips
The golden-spired apocalypse."

4. Again: I learn from my subject that events which seem to be most insignificant may be momentous. Can you imagine anything more unimportant than the coming of a poor woman from Moab to Judah? Can you imagine anything more trivial than the fact that this Ruth just happened to alight as they say—just happened to alight on that field of Boaz? Yet all ages, all generations, have an interest in the fact that she was to become an ancestor of the Lord Jesus Christ and all nations and kingdoms must look at that one little incident with a thrill of unspeakable and eternal satisfaction. So it is in your history and in mine; events that you thought of no importance at all have been of very great moment. That casual conversation, that accidental meeting—you did not think of it again for a long while; but how it changed all the phase of your life.

It seemed to be of no importance that Jubal invented rude instruments of music, calling them harp and organ; but they were the introduction of all the world's minstrelsy; and as you hear the vibration of a stringed instrument, even after the fingers have been taken away from it, so all music now of lute and drum and cornet is only the long continued strains of Jubal's harp and Jubal's organ. It seemed to be a matter of very little importance that Tubal Cain learned the uses of copper and iron; but that rude foundry of ancient days has its echo in the rattle of Bermingham machinery, and the roar and bang of factories on the Merrimac.

It seemed to be a matter of no importance that Luther found a bible in a monastery, but as he opended that bible, and the brass-bound lids fell back, they jarred everything, from the vantican to the furthest convent in Germany, and the rustling of the wormed leaves was the sound of the wings of the angel of the reformation. It seemed to be a matter of no importance that a woman, whose name has been forgotten, dropped a tract in the way of a very bad man by the name of Richard Baxter. He picked up the tract and read it, and it was the means of his salvation.

In after days that man wrote a book called "The Call to the Unconverted" that was the means of bringing a multitude to God, among others Philip Doddridge. Philip Doddridge wrote a book called "The Rise and Progress of Religion," which has brought thousands and tens of thousands into the kingdom of God, and among others the great Wilberforce. Wilberforce wrote a book called "A Practical View of Christianity," which was the means of bringing a great multitude to Christ, among others Legh Richmond. Legh Richmond wrote a tract called "The Dairyman's Daughter," which has been the means of the salvation of unconverted multitudes. And that tide of influence started from the fact that one Christian woman dropped a Christian tract in the way of Richard Baxter—the tide of influence rolling on through Richard Baxter, through Philip Doddridge, through the great Wilberforce, through Legh Richmond, on, on, on, forever, forever. So, the insignificant events of this world seem, after all, to be most momentous. The fact that you came up that street or this street seemed to be of no importance to you, and the fact that you went inside of some church may seem to be a matter of very great insignificence to you, but you will find it the turning-point in your history.

5. Again: I see in my subject an illustration of the beauty of female industry.

Behold Ruth toiling in the harvest-field under the hot sun, or at noon taking plain bread with the reapers, or eating the parched corn which Boaz handed to her. The customs of society, of course, have changed, and without the hardships and exposure to which Ruth was subjected, every intelligent woman will find something to do.

I know there is a sickly sentimentality on this subject. In some families there are persons of no practical service to the household or community; and, though there are so many woes all around about them in the world, they spend their time languishing over a new pattern, or bursting into tears at midnight over the story of some lover who shot himself! They would not deign to look at Ruth carrying back the barley on her way home to her mother-in-law, Naomi. All this fastidiousness may seem to do very well while they are under the shelter of their father's house; but when the sharp winter of misfortune comes, what of these butterflies? Persons under indulgent parentage may get upon themselves habits of indolence; but when they come out into practical life their soul will recoil with disgust and chagrin. They will feel in their hearts what the poet so severely satirized when he said:

Folks are so awkward, things so impolite,
They're elegantly pained from morning until night.

Through that gate of indolence how many men and women have marched, useless on earth to a destroyed eternity! Spinola said to Sir Horace Vere: "Of what did your brother die?" "Of having nothing to do," was the answer. "Ah," said Spinola, "that's enough to kill any general of us." Oh, can it be possible in this world, where there is so much suffering to be alleviated, so much darkness to be enlightened, and so many burdens to be carried, that there is any person who can not find anything to do?

Mme. de Stael did a world of work in her time, and one day, while she was seated amid instruments of music, all of which she had mastered, and amid manuscript books which she had written, someone said to her: "How do you find time to attend to all these things?" "Oh," she replied, "these are not the things I am proud of. My chief boast is in the fact that I have seventeen trades, by any one of which I could make a livelihood if necessary." And if in secular spheres there is so much to be done, in spiritual work how vast the field! We want more Abigails, more Hannahs, more Rebeccas, more Marys, more Deborahs consecrated—body, mind, soul—to the Lord who bought them.

6. Once more: I learn from my subject the value of gleaning.

Ruth going into that harvest field might have said: "There's a straw, and there is a straw, but what is a straw? I can't get any barley for myself or my mother-in-law out of these separate straws." Not so, said beautiful Ruth. She gathered two straws and she put them together, and more straws until she got enough to make a sheaf. Putting that down she went and gathered more straws, until she had another sheaf, and another, and another, and another, and then she brought them all together, and she thrashed them out, and she had an ephah of barley, nigh a bushel. Oh, that we might be gleaners!

Elihu Burritt learned many things while toiling in a blacksmith shop. Abercrombie, the world-renowned philosopher, was a philosopher in Scotland, and he got his philosophy, or the chief part of it, while as a physician he was waiting for the door of the sick room to open. Yet how many there are this day who say they are so busy, they have no time for mental or spiritual improvement; the great duties of life cross the field like strong reapers and carry off all the hours, and there is only here and there a fragment left that is not worth gleaning. Ah, my friends, you could go into the busiest day and busiest week of your life and find golden opportunities, which, gathered, might at least make a whole sheaf for the Lord's garner. It is the stray opportunities and the stray privileges which, taken up and bound together and beaten out, will at last fill you with abounding joy.

There are a few moments left worth the gleaning. Now, Ruth, to the field! May each one have a measure full and running over. Oh, you gleaners to the field! And if there be in your household an aged one or a sick relative that is not strong enough to come forth and toil in this field, then let Ruth take home to feeble Naomi this sheaf of gleaning: "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." May the Lord God of Ruth and Naomi be our portion forever!

An Infant Cowboy.

People in the east suppose cowboys to be rough, uncouth creatures, continuously in a brawl when not on the range. Texas, however, has one, named Logan Mulhall, who is only a month or two over six years old and a herd-owner in the Cheyenne nation.

He is the youngest cowboy in the world. The boy owns over a hundred head of cattle, has his own brand, which is duly registered, and he does fully as much of his own work as any boy of six has done, even in the west. This juvenile patriarch is a son of Zach Mulhall, well known through the cow country, and his father is firmly convinced that such another young prodigy has not yet appeared in the grazing lands. The young gentleman was formally put in possession of a herd some months ago. He has had made for himself a little Winchester rifle and a special revolver, with both of which arms he is said to be very expert. The boy has his own bunch of horses and hires his own help, of course under the superintendence of his father, and during the present spring he has every day ridden a line of more than three miles about his herd. This is a development of young America which the herders in Texas do not believe can be equaled in any other part of the country. The boy is worth about $1,200 in his own right, and his profits will not be less than $500 a year, which is more than falls to the lot of the average six-year-old.—Helena Independent.

Suing his Mother-in-law

From the Chicago Herald.

Matthew Johnson's mother-in-law spat in his face, so he said, and the result was a suit for $2,000 damages. Johnson's lawyer explained to the jury that his client didn't have any hopes of collecting a cent, even though the full amount, of the ad damnum was awarded him. His object was to teach Mrs. Elizabeth Elander that she must be more careful in future.

Johnson briefly told his story. He had always had trouble with the Elander family, and his mother-in-law was particularly "obtrusive" to him. When he left the court room he heard her following him, cursing him roundly in Swedish. She overtook him and called him a "fiendish hangman" or "persecutioner." Then she spat in his face.

"What did you do?'

"I wiped it off, like this," and Johnson whipped a handkerchief from his pistol pocket and illustrated his action.

Mrs. Elander was the only witness on her own behalf, as was Johnson for himself. She denied positively that she ever spat in his face, but acknowledged that she called him a "dirty scamp," and said he was "fit only to spat upon." The jury was out less than half an hour and returned a verdict of "not guilty."

A Cow with Eighteen Horns.

A prominent resident of Nueces County, Texas, by the name of N. Blunzer, owns, in the shape of a cow, the greatest curiosity of the nineteenth century. This cow is 5 years old and has four horns on each foot and two on the head. All the horns are fully developed, and measure about fourteen inches long. The cow in order to eat grass has to get down on her knees and push herself along on her breast. This cow has a one year old heifer that has the same number horns. The horns are not yet fully developed, but there is every reason to believe they will grow as large as the mother's.

Curious Facts and Happenings.

From the Springfield Union.

The man is still living who, seventeen years ago, walked into the room of the Bible Society in Boston and electrified the people whom he found there, first by his appearance, and, secondly, by the communicatin which he had to make. His appearance betokened more than poverty, for his shabby clothes were tied together with strings. What in the world had brought such a man there was the question every one asked himself, and the wonder can be better imagined then described when the stranger remarked that he had property to the amount of $75,000 which he would like to turn over to the society if he could be guaranteed 10 per cent annually upon it for the remainder of his life, his age then being 79.

The officers suppressed their amazement as well as they could, took his name, verified his schedule of his possessions, and submitted the case to the directors. They looked the matter over in the light of actuaries' tables, &c., and finally, after much deliberation, decided that the risk was too great and so notified the would-be donor. Not long after he came back and renewed his proposition to turn the money over to the society and said that he would be content with 7 per cent. annually. That proposition was accepted, and for some years he appeared regularly at the expiration of the year and drew his interest, taking $200 in cash and the company's note for the balance. After doing this for seven years or so he turned those notes back to the company, saying that he had no use for them. He is now, at the age of 96, blind, deaf and crippled by a fall so that he cannot walk, and the Bible Society pays the bills for his support.

The Transcontinental association in session at San Francisco has adjourned to meet at St. Paul June 15. After a three days' struggle over the decision in the interstate commerce case, arrising out of the complaint of Martin & Co. of Denver, it was concluded that no satisfactory construction of the ruling could be arrived at without a perusal of the entire wording. As this ruling would be the basis of their work, nothing could now be done but to adjourn to meet at St. Paul.

The Little Cryptogram is the name of a handsome brochure by Mr. J. Gilpin Pyle, of St. Paul, which amusingly disposes of Ignatius Donnelly's absurd claim that he has extinguished Shakespeare. Mr. Pyle in a most laughable manner uses the bogus Baconian cipher to hoist Mr. Donnelly himself in a way to prove to a demonstration that the great Cryptogram is from first to last a palpable adsurdity and fraud. The Little Cryptogram will be sent post paid for twenty-five cents by application to the Pioneer Press Company St. Paul.

A Righteous Judgment.

Considerable commotion has been created in insurance circles by the recent decision of the Maine supreme court in the case of McGlinchy vs. the Fidelity and Casuality Company. The facts in the case are these: While a person insured under an accident policy was driving on a public street, his horse shied at a load of leather and ran a short distance without upsetting the carriage or coming in contact with anything before he was brought under control by the driver. But the driver was apparently endangered at the time, and suffered so severely, either from fright or from some strain caused by his physical exertions in restraining the horse, that he died within an hour, apparently from heart disease, no mark of external violence being visible. It was held by the court, "that the death may be considered as having ensued from bodily injuries effected through external violent and accidental means. The clause in the policy which provides that the insurance shall not extend to any bodily injury of which there shall be no external and visible sign upon the body of the insured does not apply to fatal injuries, but only to those not resulting in death."

The organs of insurance companies are naturally exercised over this decision, by which the defendant company was defaulted, and have much to say anent this "remarkable construction" put upon an important clause in accident policies. But whatever view of the matter may present itself to the legal mind, it cannot appear otherwise to unprejudiced laymen than just and equitable; for in this instance death was clearly the result of accident, indirectly at least, and such hair splitting is ridiculous as should declare the insured entitled to recover under his policy in case he toppled over and rubbed off a square inch of cuticle, and that though his internal belongings were shaken to jelly he could get nothing. To be sure, a strict construction of the reading of the policy might lead to this conclusion, but it seems to us that the court was correct in injecting into its decision a modicum of common sense. Insurance policies, it is needless to say, whether they be issued by life or fire companies, are so worded as to give all possible means of escape to the companies, while seeming to preserve the rights of the holder in every possible way, and they should therefore be construed in the spirit in which they appear to be framed rather than in the language which keeps the words of promise to our ear and breaks it to our hope.—K. of H. Don't Give up the Ship.

You have been told that consumption is incurable; that when the lungs are attacked by this terrible malady, the sufferer is past all help, and the end is a mere question of time. You have noted with alarm the unmistakable symptoms of the disease; you have tried all manner of so-called cures in vain, and you are now despondent and preparing for the worst. But don't give up the ship while Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery remains untried. It is not a cure-all, nor will it perform miracles, but it has cured thousands of cases of consumption, in its earlier stages, where all other means had failed. Try it, and obtain a new lease of life.

A Good Name
At home is a tower of strength abroad—says the familiar proverb, and it is fully verified by the history of Hood's Sarsaparilla. The first words of commendation and praise for this medicine were received from our friends and neighbors, and from the time it was fairly introduced up to the present, there has been, and is now, more of
Hood's Sarsaparilla
Sold in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, than of all other Sarsaparillas and blood purifiers combined. This "good name" among people who have known Hood's Sarsaparilla and its proprietors for years should certainly be strong evidence to people in other cities and towns of the excellence and merit of this medicine. Send for book containing statement of cures.
Salt Rheum
"After the failure of three skillful physicians to cure my boy of salt rheum, I tried Hood's Sarsaparilla and Olive Ointment. I have now used four boxes of Ointment, and one and a half bottles of Sarsaparilla, and the boy is to all appearances completely cured. He is now four years old, and has been afflicted since he was six months of age." MRS. B. SANDERSON, 56 Newhall Street, Lowell, Mass.

LOVE'S ERRAND.

Swift through the ocean of Silence go,
Sprite unseen!
Dive to the echoless realms below;
Kindle the depths with a radiance keen;
Then, like an arrowy pulse of fire,
Throb to the quivering stars and higher
Into the vault serene!

Glide through the mystical orb of Sleep;
Pause to see,
Born of the amorous twilight deep,
Dreams, from their chrysalis slumber free,
Thronging the shadowy close of day,
Wed with the loveliest, steal away,
Speeding again to me!

Explorers And Their Ways.

How the White Man Gains Victories Over the Untutored Savage.

A cable dispatch from Sierra Leone the other day said that Sir Francis de Winton had won a decisive victory over the Youine tribe in the interior, and that the natives had been terrified as much by the electric lights as by the guns of the expedition. For signaling purposes at night and to illumine his camp Sir Francis had provided a number of electric lights raised on lofty poles. The native saw night turned into day, and the inexplicable sight took all the fight out of them. It is nearly always the case that when the white man, by some harmless expedient, impresses savages with his puissance and superiority he has more than half conquered them before he strikes a blow.

For many years the fierce Pahouin tribe on the middle Ogowe River turned back every explorer who tried to enter their country. Pierre de Brazza was the first traveler they permitted to ascend the great river, and he won their favor without a single hostile act. He sent word to the chief that he had some presents for him, and in this way got permission to enter one of the frontier towns. The tattooed savages could hardly believe their eyes that night as a great crowd grouped themselves around the explorer and witnessed the wonderful show he had provided. Rockets, Roman candles, whirligigs and many other wonders of the pyrotechnic art bewildered, delighted and astounded them. The feats he performed with the exploding bullet filled them with awe, and in his repeating rifle they saw a wonderful weapon, which they were sure he could fire off forever without recharging. It was this night's work that opened the great region of the French Congo to De Brazza and made him famous as an explorer. It has been his pride that in all his travels he never shot a native; but for all that gunpowder and fireworks were the foundation of his brilliant success.

A good story is told of a white man who was taken prisoner by an inland tribe in the early days of the Fiji settlements. His captors were cannibals, and it made him very nervous when he saw them start a fire under a big native oven. He made up his mind that it was all up with him unless he convinced the savages that he was a very superior being. A happy thought struck him. He called for something to eat, and when food was placed before him he used his jack-knife to cut it up. Every mouthful or two he stuck the point of the jack-knife into one of his legs with such force that it stood erect. It was a cork leg, and the natives looked on in astonishment and alarm as he buried the blade in it. After the meal he began to take his leg off. This was too much for the savages, and they scampered for the bush as they saw him turning his leg round and round. As he mounted his horse the natives began to gather again, but he made a motion as if to unscrew his head, and the spectators fled in dismay, leaving him to find his way back to the coast.

When Joseph Thomson made a great journey through Masailand a few years ago he had a few tricks that gave him a great reputation as a wizzard and helped him wonderfully on his way. One trick he always reserved as a last resort and many times it procured food for his party from natives who had refused to sell him a single fowl or a particle of mamoc. He had two teeth on a plate and his great trick was to show the natives that the white man could remove his teeth. This wonderful feat usually accomplished the desired result, but the Mount Kenia natives wanted a bigger show than he gave them. They insisted that if he could remove two teeth he could extract the others also, and they demanded to see the entire circus. Expostulation was of no avail. They told him to take all his teeth out or starve, and he was glad to escape in the night from this inhospitable tribe. On the way back to the coast Thomson was almost wholly destitute of goods to barter for food, but his reputation as a wizzard and a physician spread far and wide and by means of his tricks and medicines he managed to get along.

Most savages at first regard sleight-of-hand feats as evidence of supernatural powers, but now and then they are sharp enough to think they are being duped. One day after Mr. Martin had been performing some tricks for the amusement of a crowd of Wakwafi girls he told them he could do much more wonderful things. Holding up a finger he assured them that if he cut it off a new finger would at once grow on again. The girls laughed at him and told him he lied. Suddenly one of them sprang forward and seizing one of Martin's fingers cut it to the bone with a native knife. She told him she meant to take him at his word, and that now she knew what he said was not true, for if he could not heal the wound she had made she was very sure he could not cause a new finger to grow.

The magic lantern has of late years been an endless source of amusement to many a savage audience. We can hardly imagine the surprise and delight which the simple minded natives have seen spread before them on a screen the streets of London and Paris and many other wonders of civilization. Pictures of Niagara Falls, Alps and other wonders of nature do not make the slightest impression upon the untutored minds; but give them glimpses of thoroughfares crowded with people and vehicles, show them the lofty structures in which the white men live, and find soldiers and gay women clad in all the colors of the rainbow, and they rend the air with their exclamations of astonishment and pleasure. In his last journeys Livingstone had a magic lantern; and several later travelers have found this toy very useful in helping them win the friendship of their new acquaintances.

Dr. Junker found, during his many years in Central Africa, that he could not introduce himself more favorably to tribes who had never before seen a white man than by playing on his accordeon. He never entered a new village without first obtaining permission, and he never failed to make an impression, as he marched in at the head of his little caravan, making the woods ring with the liveliest melodies of his native land. He found many of these people quick to catch an air, and probably scores of negroes in the depths of Central Africa whom he met are still humming some of the jolliest melodies of Europe. One of the most highly prized presents the great King Mtesa ever received was a hand-organ; and a while ago a Mr. Coillard found on the banks of the Zambesi a native queen who had a wheezy accordeon, over which she ran her fingers with surprising agility, playing a curious medley of savage airs.

A compass is one of the essential articles in an explorer's equipment and is an endless source of wonder and pleasure to many savages. In Africa the compass is often regarded as a fetich which knows all things and unerringly shows the white man the right road even amid interminable forests. During the recent travels of Jacques de Brazza, a younger brother of the more celebrated explorer by that name, the fame of his compass spread far and wide, and the constant demands to see it became so annoying that for a time the explorer told the natives that the fetich was sick and had been put away in the bottom of a box to get well. Mr. McDonald, a missionary South of Lake Nyassa, says he has made many friends by explaining the mysteries of his watch. Its works excite no greater surprise than the watch crystal among those who have never seen glass, and the missionary describes the amusing perplexity of one chief who could not understand why he was unable to touch the watch hands which he saw before him.

There is a wonderful potency in the mere crack of a rifle or revolver among savages who have never seen firearms. When Dr. Ludwig Wolf discovered a new water route to Central Africa along the Sankuru River a while ago his little party would in all probability have been massacred by the Bassongo Mino cannibals had not the white man given them a very exalted opinion of his power by a single discarge of his revolver. One day Wolf learned that the savages had decided to kill him and his comrades as the easiest way to gain possession of the white man's trade goods. Their chief refused to let the party go on their way and told Wolf he had him in his power. The poor wretch had never heard of the magical powers of the shooting-iron, and seeing no lances or bows and arrows he imagined the visitors were defenceless. While he was insulting the stranger, Wolf suddenly held his revolver close to the chief's ear and discharged it. The insolent crowd was struck dumb with horror and the chief shivered from head to foot with fear. After giving the chief a few specimens of his ability as a marksman, Wolf told the astounded potentate that he was going to leave and the whole tribe was apparently glad to get rid of so dangerous a person. It is thus that travelers have a great advantage over the most implacable tribes they meet, so long as they can give some novel exhibition of power that is utterly inexplicable to the savage mind. The Aird River, in New Guinea, long remained unexplored on account of the hostility of the natives at its mouth; but when Mr. Bevan entered this river last Spring these same savages, who sallied out in their canoes to attack him, were so badly frightened by a single blast from his steam whistle that they jumped overboard and swam for dear life to the shore. Captain Everill ran the gauntlet of hostile savages for scores of miles on the Fly River, New Guinea, keeping them out of arrow range by tooting his whistle, and Stanley by the same means last Summer sent hundreds of the Yambuga natives scampering into the woods, leaving his party in peace to prepare and fortify the permanent camp, where his reserve force has since remained awaiting the explorer's return from the Nile.

It often happens, too, that savages are disarmed of hostile intentions if they become convinced that their visitors are friends of ealier travelers who won their good will. Dr. Holub says that any well-disposed white man can travel wherever Livingstone went if the natives think he knew and loved that grand old hero. The fame of the powerful Bula Matari, as Stanley is known in the Congo basin, has spread far and wide, and in a region he never visited. Dr. Buchner a while ago completely turned the tide of feeling in his favor by shouting to a crowd of savages who were hurling lances at his carriers that he was a friend of Bula Matari. When Mr. Romilly landed in Astrolabe Bay, New Guinea, the native advanced to attack him until he uttered "the magic name of Miklucho Maclay," and then the word passed from one to another that the stranger was their good friend's brother and they give him a friendly reception.

Two years ago the missionaries in Metabeleland, in South America, adopted an unusual plan for attracting audiences to their services. They had ceased to be a novelty, and their talks were poorly attended. As they went to the place of meeting they would shoot game on the way, and while one of them expounded the Bible the others built fires under trees and cooked the meat for distribution among the congregation. As long as the provender held out they were sure of a good audience.

C. C. ADAMS.

Sleeping to the North.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

There is no doubt in my mind but that the belief that human beings should sleep with their bodies lying north and south, has its foundation in true scientific facts. Each human system has two magnetic poles—one positive and one negative. Now, it is true that some persons have the positive pole in the head and the negative pole in the feet and vice versa. In order that the person sleeping should be in perfect harmony with the magnetic phenomena of the earth, the head, it it possesses the positive pole, the head should lie to the south, or if the feet possess the positive pole the head should lie to the north. The positive pole should always lie opposite to the magnetic center of the continent and thus maintain a magnetic equilibrium. The positive pole of the person draws one way, but the magnetic pole of the earth draws the other way and forces the blood toward the feet, effects the iron in the system, tones up the nerves and makes sleep refreshing and invigorating. But if the person sleep the wrong way and fails to become magnetically en rapport with the earth, he will then probably be too magnetic, and he will have a fever resulting from the magnetic forces working too fast; or he will not be magnetic enough and the great strain will cause a feeling of lassitude, sleep will not be refreshing, and in the morning he will have no more energy than there is in a cake of soap. Some persons may scoff at these ideas, but the greatest scientific men of the world have studied the subject. Only recently the French Academy of Science made experiments upon the body of a guillotined man, which go to prove that each human system is in itself an electric battery one electrode being represented by the head, the other by the feet. The body was taken immediately after death placed on a pivot to move as it might. After some vacillation the head portion turned toward the north, the body then remaining stationary. One of the professors turned it half way around, but it soon regained its original position, and the same result was repeatedly obtained until organic movement finally ceased.

Animals Have Language.

Gentleman's Magazine.

The intellectual superiority of civilized man over his savage brethren is due to the greater multiplicity of his objects of thought, and precisely so is it with the intellectual superiority of the savage man over Simian ancestors. The actions of all have the same aim, viz., the supplying of the wants of physical nature and the gratifying of the desires aroused in the mind. The old theory that speech was altogether limited to the human race has now to be given up once and for all, for such a statement cannot stand against the scientific evidence brought forward to oppose it from all quarters.

Language is but a product of reflection and experience, and originated, in all probability, in interjection or the instinctive expression of the subjective impressions derived from external nature; and just as the reflective powers of the race were developed and shown more brilliantly as each stage in the evolutionary march of intellect was passed, so did language pass from the simple monosyllabic cries of the lower animals and savage men to the complex dialects of modern civilization; and it is worthy of note that at the present day, or at least very recently, there were races of savage men inhabiting the earth who possessed no proper language at all, and could not, on account of their manner of living, be placed on a higher intellectual level than the higher apes; while we have the authority of the leading philologists of the day in support of the fact that the monosyllabic cries of some of the lower human tribes are well within the grasp of the ape's voice.

Travelers whose veracity and ability cannot be impugned have described long conferences held by monkeys, where one individual addressed the assembly at great length, fixing the attention of all upon himself and quelling every disturbance by a loud and harsh cry, which was at once recognized and obeyed by the multitude; and we need no traveler to point out to us the many notes of call and recognition possessed by birds of all kinds, who thoroughly well understand each other's expressions, and, moreover, are able to produce quite a string of different notes consecutively, and without any hesitation. In fact the organ of voice in some of the lower animals far exceeds in power that of some tribes of the human family.

The Euphonia musica of the East Indies can perform the seven notes in the scale; the chaffinch not only sings real songs, but invents them, one of his songs containing as many as five long strophes, while the songs of many savage races of men never run to half that length, and when, Cook visited the Fiji archipelago the native women could only sing from la to mi. Asia appears to have been the birthplace of stringed instruments, no Southern tribes ever having been discovered using such musical appliances. We see, therefore, a gradual improvement taking place in vocal apparatus as we rise in the animal scale, which results in speech and song, and, indirectly, in instrumental music of various degrees; and we find fresh proof that there is as wide a difference between the developement of civilized European and the savage man as between that of the savage man and his brute ancestry.

Termination of a Divorce Case

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

A well known lawyer told me a a short time ago of a story of a late experience.

"I've had a funny case lately. It was a divorce case, and I was counsel for the lady. I never heard two people abuse each other so. I never knew two people to make such a bitter, hard fight as those two. The property was considerable, and I had it tied up with an injunction. All efforts to compromise were no good. At last I thought the man was trying to cheat the woman, so I stopped negotiations for a compromise and prepared to put the case in court. The lady came to see me.

"It's no use madam. I'm going to put the case straight through the court."

"I wish you would; it's what I want. I never will compromise with that man—never, never, never!"

"All right. You will call here at 10 o'clock to-morrow, and we will see about the witnesses."

Next morning at 10 o'clock she was there. She was neatly dressed, in great style, and she sat down with a pleased assurance.

"Well, madam, let us proceed."

"I want that case dismissed."

"Dismissed! How is that?"

"Well, we've fixed it."

"You have?"

"Yes. It's all settled."

"May I ask how you settled it?"

"Well, last night he came up to my rooms. The doors was locked, and when I knocked he said, 'Who's that?' 'It's me.' 'You can't come in.' He kept knocking, I told him he couldn't come in, and he knocked harder, and I told him louder he couldn't come in, and he kicked the door down and came in, and we sat down and fixed it all up.'

ELECTRIC EXECUTION.

The Relative Merits of the Rope and the Electric Button.

In executions by eleectricity all suffering is prevented. Death must be instantaneous beyond all natural precedent, and there is an extreme probability, supported by a mass of evidence from persons who have been rendered unconscious, but not killed, by lightning, that the action of electricity when the shock is strong outruns the speed of the transmission of sensation. Unconsciousness arrives before pain can be perceived, and the stricken man reports, if he survives, that he felt nothing. It is an offense against the instinctive sense of justice to reserve such a privilege for the exceptionally wicked, to give to a murderer like Palmer a fate which an emperor Frederick III. might desire in vain; and such offenses always bear civil fruit, though not always of the anticipated kind. In this case, for instance, the result which one would at first sight expect may not rise, but another, nearly as bad, and much more likely to escape attention. Intending murderers, it is usually said, may feel that a menance has been withdrawn, and that they are more free to slay; and in countries where murderers are usually disbelievers and where suicide is more often contemplated than with us, that, we conceive, would be the inevitable result. With a certain class of criminal, the educated poisoner and the cultivated murderer for gain, that will be the result, among ourselves, also, the deterrent effect of hanging consisting party in the disgrace attached for ages to that method of execution. We confess, however, to a doubt whether among the ordinary criminals of a population like that of New York, death by electricity will be less deterrent than death by the rope.

The unerring certainty of the method and its appalling suddenness, the absence of that lingering hope that the rope may break, and so there may come reprieve, and the horror—if we may affront some readers by the suggestion—of suffering the very penalty which, in the imagination of the ignorant through all ages, has come most directly from God, may breed a fear as deep as the fear of the rope or even deeper than it. Nothing appalls like lightning, and death by lightning may appall a brute insensible to the horror of an ordinary execution. If so, as the majority of murders are committed by callous brutes, the new mode of execution may prove more deterrent than the old, and we must look elsewhere for the consequences which, neverthelsss, we half instinctively expect.

May not the consequence of inflicting painless death for crime, a consequence slow to arrive and at first unperceived, be a deadening of the natural and most beneficial horror of inflicting death too readily? The new philanthropists will smile at us and say the dislike to the penalty of death is increasing everywhere; but if they were accessible to argument we could show them reasons for doubting that conclusion. The tendency to war does not decrease, though the habit of preaching against it increases, and if it lasts the dislike of capital punishment for adequate reason cannot long survive. The dislike exists for this one moment out of all the ages Christian ages as well as Pagan; but though mankind is not wise, it is too absurdly illogical, considered by itself, to keep its place long in the thoughts of men. It involves, under the theory now, for example, rampant in Italy, this preposterous assertion, that while there is no sacredness in human life as such, while it is noble to shoot an ignorant conscript who under the compulsion of discipline invades your country, and justifiable to shoot the soldier who will not invade another country when he is ordered, there is a sacrosanctity in life if only it is criminal and noxious. The mutineer must be spared, it is a duty to slaughter out an invading regiment which may slay and burn, but wicked to slaughter the miscreant who has burned or slain. There can be no future for an idea so essentially silly as that; and when it passes away there may come with the reaction from it an undue hardening of the general heart. The impulse of the day is to be oversoft; but the tendency of thought, which will outlast the impulse of the day, is toward adamantine hardness, toward, that is, the scientific view of things—the view which suggests that death is not only the most deterrent of all punishments for crime, but the one least embarrassing to the innocent community, and most certain to prevent the hereditary descent of criminal instincts. If there is no knowledge save scientific knowledge, Plato was right when he sentenced all misshapen babies, and it would be hard to answer Mr. Cottor Morison's terrible suggestions as to the prevention of any accumulation of criminal proclivities. The world will harden as it grows scientific, harden toward all impediments to the material happiness which it seeks for mankind, harden, toward criminals, for example, as Irish tenants have hardenend toward "land grabbers"—think of their "symapathetic tenderness"—and our children may see a generation willing, "in the interest of the deepest well are of the whole community," to pour out death in buckets. On what scientific principle, for instance, should the irreclaimable criminal or the pauper lunatic tax the community for years to support his noxiousness? The doctrine of euthanasia for criminals will be preached—indeed, is preached in some quarters already—and it may yet find acceptance in those new societies where the only ideal that really prevails is the ideal of comfort on this earth and for all men. If such a generation arises, or if the hearts of men approximate toward the hearts that a generation would possess, it would be found that with the practice of killing only by coarse and painful methods, revolting even to those who, like ourselves, deem capital punishment indispensable, a great restraint on killing had disappeared.

To slay painlessly, without fuss, without bloodshed without disfigurement of the human frame, would seem so very easy, and comparatively, so little shocking. There are very few men, however brutal, who would not sooner order a hundred men to be fusilladed out of sight than a hundred men to be separately hanged before them; and execution by electricity, involving, as it does, no pain, is far less brutal even than fusillading. Suppose all the irreclaimable convicts in London executed in silence, secretly, with no possibility of pain, would the announcement of the fact create half the repugnance which the execution of one criminal does now? Capital punishment is just; but something to make the judge and juryman reflect, to make him fear for his own responsibility, to make him search his conscience, in theological phrase, is an indispensible check, and in abolishing pain and the knowledge of details and personal action in executions, we, to the extent of human power, take that check away. It is foolish to assert that this would not be the case, or that men would be moved by the bare record of the number of deaths. Who is moved by the Registrar-General's weekly return or the return of deaths in a convict prison? Do you suppose that Mary Tudor's martyrs, dying invisible, without pain, without report save that they were dead, would have shocked London into Protestantism? They would have passed, as even now convicts sentenced to labor for life pass, to their doom unheeded, except by the few who make their destinies a study. It is a human instinct which in all countries has prohibited poison as a means of executing ordinary criminals, and has compelled rulers to let supreme justice be done in methods, the very coarseness and brutality of which force legislators and judges and juries to consider painfully what they do. The guarantee against laxity in inflicting death, and therefore against a brutalization of society, is that very sympathetic horor, that pain in the hearts of the innocent, which the Legislature of New York, in its hungry pursuit of happiness, is calmly legislating away. It is not making laws in order that criminals be not hurt, for convicts have no votes. Its object is to reduce the pain of the society which inflicts, not of the criminals who suffers, death, and in reducing it, it is reducing that society's care to have its conscience clear: "What matters if he died? He was a criminal, and he died painlessly." That will be the real state of public feeling; and while we advocate the death penalty as the supreme deterrent, justified by the right of society to inflict adequate of feeling to be at once dangerous and bad.

Table Beverages.

The three principal table beverages of civilized people, after water, are coffee, tea and chocolate. Their characteristics and their effect on the human system are described as follows: Chacolate, from its large proportion of albumen, is the most nutritive beverage, but, at the same time, from its quantity of fat, the most difficult to digest. Its aromatic substances, however, strengthen the digestion.

A cup of chocolate is an excellent restorative and invigorating refreshment even for weak persons, provided their digestive organs are not too delicate. Cardinal Richelieu attributed to chocolate his health and hilarity during his later years.

Tea and coffee do not afford this advantage. Albumen in tea leaves and legumin in coffee berries are represented in very scanty proportions. The praise of tea and coffee as nutritive substances is therefore hardly warranted.

Tea and coffee, though of themselves not difficult of digestion, tend to disturb the digestion of albuminous substances by precipitating them from their dissolved state. Milk, therefore, if mixed with tea or coffee, is more difficult of digestion than if taken alone, and coffee alone, without cream, promotes digestion after dinner by increasing the secretion of the dissolving juices.

The volatile oil of coffee and the empyreumatic and aromatic matters of chocolate accelerate the circulation, which, on the other hand, is calmed by tea.

Tea and coffee both excite the activity of the brain and nerves. Tea, it is said, increases the power of digesting the impressions we have received, creates a thorough meditation, and, in spite of the movements of thoughts permits the attention so be fixed upon a certain subject.

On the other hand if tea is taken in excess, it causes an increased irritability of the nerves, characterized by sleeplessness, with a general feeling of restlessness and trembling of the limbs.

Coffee, also, if taken in excess, produces sleeplessness and many baneful effects very similar to those arising from tea drinking. Coffee, however, produces greater excitement, and a sensation of restlessness and heat ensues. For throwing off this condition fresh air is the best antidote.

What a Contrast.

What a contrast does the home of the sober, industrious, mechanic present to that of the idler and the dissolute! In the one there reigns peace, comfort and independence; in the other, misery, hunger and dirt. The one is a little palace, in which the contentment king's court holds absolute sway; the other a hovel, where vice breeds and spawns depravity on the highways of life. One glance into the interior of the former dwelling is worth a whole day's inspection of the splendid one of a noble; for the former is associated with the happiness of thousands, the latter with that of a single family. The mansion of the noble may be decorated with the gems of art and genius—it may present a more than oriental luxury of appearance; but the contrast between it and the cottage of the sober artisan is immeasurably in favor of the latter, as far as those higher estimates of human happiness which are based on something superior to me a superficial grandeur, may be allowed to sway our judgment. In the one we see rugged labor, the soul and sinew of the nation, reposing like a giant gathering strength for renewed exertion; in the other we perceive effeminacy "lolling on a lewd day couch," deploring the slowness of that time which silently and slowly brings its votary nearer to that end which, in his old age, he dreads, and endeavors by all manner of shifts and ingenuities to avoid. In the one there is a straight-laced, artificial dicipline, which freezes the heart and contracts the mind; in the other an innocent freedom, which tolerates the laugh and jest on all occasions, and yet allows the graver moments of existence to exert their sanitary influence.—N. Y. Ledger.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Points for the Farmer.

Don't save all the unpleasant jobs for your boy and expect him to "stick to the farm."

Give potatoes that you want to mature early soil already rich, or feed them with well rotted manure.

When a man tells about plowing a foot deep, it indicates that about four inches have been broken off his foot measure.

Have a care to the roadsides of your farm, cut down the brush, fix the fences and show that there is enterprise there.

Trim all branches of ornamental trees, and prune shrubs, too. Thin them as needed, but avoid formality.

A pig that takes its head out of the trough while eating and acts as if the slop had run the wrong way has the snifles. He should be removed from the herd and cared for, as the disease is contagious. Put pine tar in the slops, and smear both the nose and the face with it. Feed sulphur and turpentine with it. A free use of carbolic acid, both externally and internally, should also be made. So advises an experienced Western stockman.

It is related that a genius at Pittsfield, Ill., has made a big barrel churn upon wheels. He goes through the country gathering cream, and when a proper quantity has been secured returns home. On the way home he connects the churning gear, and as he drives along the churning goes on as the wagon moves forward, so that when he arrives there is nothing to do but take out the butter and draw off the buttermilk. That comes pretty near a portable butter factory, and its inventor is probably a born yankee, instead of being a native of the "Sucker State."

Mr. Daniel Dennett, the veteran and venerable agricultural editor of "The New-Orleans Picayune," pays fair tribute to the thing of good report—the spiritual gains—not always taken into account in estimating the relative advantages of town and country life: "Horticulture and study of the book of nature make men better, more benevolent, more friendly, more honest, more industrious and frugal and happier than devotion to the subtleties of trade, the wily and crafty intrigues of politicians, or the gambling calculations of the speculator. A close intercourse with field, forest and garden, in boyhood and youth, lays the foundation for a better character and nobler aspirations in approaching manhood, and as he communes with nature in old age the language of his heart will be 'Nearer, my God, to Thee, nearer to Thee.' "

A speaker at a recent meeting in Massachusetts properly resented the complaint of "lack of recognition" of tillers of the soil. On the contrary, according to "The N. E. Farmer's" report:

"The agricultural profession is the only one that draws money from the public. Lawyers and doctors are educated at private schools, supported by private funds, but the farmer has an agricultural college, maintained at the public expense, and the agricultural interests have a National Bureau, which no other industrial pursuit has."

Advantage of Sheep Farming.

The most prominent advantage of keeping sheep over other branches of farming are a smaller money investment, less risk of loss by death, two incomes—the lambs and the fleeces—every year, benefits to the land, large quantities of rich manure, easier keeping, and less costly food, less labor and less costly buildings, greater income for money invested. The writer's experience in many years of sheep keeping has shown that the manure will pay the cost of all labor; that the sheep will earn $1 per head in clearing land of sprouts and weeds and fitting old land for crops, and will pay 100 per cent interest yearly on the investment.

Advice About Animals.

Old fashioned people believe in medicating themselves as well as their animals as spring opens. So do we, but we think that the "opening medicine" should be applied externally in the form of currycomb and brush. Sound and wholesome food, together with proper grooming, will allow the animals to resume the work of the farm without sudden shock. It is all-important that the harness be overhauled and ready for spring work. Badly fitting harness is as uncomfortable to an animal as is a man's dress when a suspender button is lost. See to the collars, that they fit well, and all parts that rub should not chafe the skin. Look to the feet of horses; those that begin work on soft ground usually do better without shoes. The feet should be well cleaned when they come in from work. Incoming cows, especially those with their first calf, are apt to suffer from milkfever and garget. Give them less food, as their time approaches. A roomy stall should be provided.

Why Horses Rub Their Manes and Tails.

The question, "Why horses rub their manes and tails," has been answered by a New York veterinary surgeon as follows: "Rubbing the mane and tail usually rsults from an unhealthy condition of the skin, which in most cases is produced by neglect of grooming or by bad food, or by any sudden change of diet from that to good. Occasionally, however, it appears in stables where grooming and food are unquestionably good. Damaged oats or hay are very ready causes for this annoying affection. In every case, therefore, where the hair of the mane and tail fall out the food should be carefully examined. Young horses on coming into the stables sometimes suffer from an irritation of the skin, probably from change of diet. Horses recovering from fever frequently lose a portion of the hair from the mane and tail. In the latter case it seems to arise from an impoverished state of blood."

In regard to treatment the surgeon alluded to says: "If any positive cause, such as damaged food or neglected grooming, has existed, measures must be taken to remove such cause. Without this precaution local treatment will be of little avail. One method of local treatment that has produced good results consists in dressing the skin with equal parts of mercurial ointment and soft soap made into a lather with hot water and applied by means of a stiff hair brush. The new hair will grow rapidly after this application. In addition to the local treatment it will be necessary to act upon the system generally by a change of diet; green food should be given, as this by means of its laxative qualities lessens the irritability of the skin. A bran mash with five grains of arsenic added daily, in addition to the usual food, will exert a beneficial influence upon the skin.

Young Men, Read This!

From the Chat auquan.

It is very common for young men, I think, to determine the quality of their work by the price which they are paid for it. I only get, says such a one, $5 a week, and I am sure that I am giving $5 worth of service; if my employer wants more, let him pay more; if he wants better, let him give better wages. This is specious reasoning, but it is false; and it is destructive to the best work, and therefore to the best manhood. No man can afford to do anything less well than his best. He who always strives to do his best work in the very process of striving will grow better and better. Not only will he grow more skillful in that particular workmanship, but he will be better equipped for other workmanship. This is an absolutely universal law. It is the absolutely universal road to promotion. The man who is careful to give nothing more than he gets rarely gets more than he gives. The man who works for his own sake, who puts the best part of himself into every blow that he strikes, who mixes all his work with brain and conscience, who studies to render the largest possible service regardless of the compensation which it brings, sooner or later will find his way on and up. The world learns his worth and calls him to higher service. Nor is this all. By stirring himself up to do always the best he can he grows into a power to do better and ever better.

Into Gulfs of Space.

Hartford Post.

The great Lick telescope, although not yet in full working order, has demonstrated its superior power by its clearer presentation of objects located in the solar system and its discoveries in the infinitely more remote stellar universe. Its latest performance is said to be the discovery of suns, infinately remote, in that great gulf of the sky which, because it has proved to be so empty to all other telescopes, has been called, decisively, "the hole in the sky." Mr. Bautwell once wanted to see Andrew Johnson shot out through that "hole in the sky"—never dreaming the alleged hole was occupied by a universe of suns, many of which, very likely, are biger than ours, and all of which probably have their own systems of attendant planets. Suns so remote that their light, flashing through the star depths at the rate of 187,000 miles per second, takes a thousand years to reach our world remained hitherto unseen, buried in fathomless space. It takes a fraction over eight minutes for the sun's light to reach the earth, but the sun is only 92,000,000 miles distant. It is useless for the mind to try to grasp, in a "realizing sense," even such distances as 92,000,000 miles. As to the shoreless depths of outer space, peopled as it may be to all infinitly with circling suns and systems nothing less than eternity for development would serve to qualify human minds even approximately to grasp the mighty reality.

The Opium Scourge in the Pacific.

London News.

The passion for opium is reported to be rapidly destroying the native population on the Marquesas Islands, where the women even more than the men are said to be addicted to this fatal indulgence. According to our counsel at Tahiti, the French authorities are afraid that the result will be the same in the Society Islands, where, in spite of the stringent orders issued to the police, the Chinese persist in selling opium to the natives. The traffic in the island appears to be a monopoly, which is put up to public competition and leased for periods of two years. According to the law, the contractor in Tahiti is allowed to sell only 1,100 pounds per annum; but it is believed that a great deal more is sold, and that directly or indirectly the prohibition upon selling to any but Chinamen is to a great extent evaded. At the last adjudication the successful competitor secured his privilege for Tahiti for 66,000 francs per annum, a sum which it is calculated would yield him a profit of from 45 to 50 per cent. As the quantity of opium which in San Francisco may be bought for about 16s. is sold in Tahiti for £5 to £5 16s. 8d, it does not appear that the opium monopolist adds the attraction of cheapness to the allurements of this pernicious drug.

Royalty as a Trade.

The trade of a king, judging by the current statements made of the fortune left by the late Kaiser Wilhelm, must be a very good one. It is announced as amounting to 24,000,000 marks, of which one half is placed in the Crown Treasury and the other half is divided according to the will left by the Kaiser.

A German mark is twenty-three cents and eight mills of our currency. The late Emperor's fortune then was $5,612,00. One half, or $2,806,000, is divided. The Dowager Empress Augusta receives $714,000; the Grand Duchess of Baden, Frederick's sister; the Crown Prince and Prince Henry, his brother, and the Crown Princess are each bequeathed $238,000. Prince Henry has already received an estate of the same value as his present bequest. The total amount bequeathed by the will to these members of his family is $1,656,000. The balance, $1,150,000, is bequeathed to other persons.

Not for Joseph.

The St. Paul Globe takes a lively interest in making a candidate for Governor for the republicans. In its issue of Saturday it places Polk County's eight delegates in the Scheffer column. That is very kind in the Globe, probably intended to save the bother of calling a convention to decide that matter for ourselves, but we imagine that it will not suit our people exactly, as we generally like to have a hand in such matters ourselves. If the balance of that table is as accurate and as near the truth as the statement that Polk County will send eight Scheffer delegates, the table may do for ornament but is of no practical use. It strikes us that the Globe is becoming considerably cranky as it gets older. Gathering a good deal of moss on its venerable back.

Hon. Walter Q. Gresham.

United States Circut Judge.

Washington Sunday Gazette.

Hon. Walter Q. Gresham was born in Lanesville, Harrison County, Indiana, on the 17th of March, 1832. He was the fourth child of Colonel William Gresham, the high sheriff of Harrison County, who was killed by a desperado he went to arrest, when the young Walter was only two years old. His grandfather was the noted George Gresham, one of the original pioneers of Indiana, and one of the most active and successful in planting Methodism in the West. The family, in all its branches, were remarkable for courage, sagacity, integrity, and high religious principles. Young Walter Q. Gresham was no exception to the rule. He received such tutition as the county schools then afforded till we was sixteen, when he earned the money to give him three years of academic and collegiate training. He then studied law, and commenced a very successful practice in 1854. He also engaged in politics and soon made himself felt as a power in his State. He served in the legislature of Indiana, was an ardent stump speaker for Fremont and Lincoln, and and on the breaking out of the war entered the service as colonel of the 53d Indians. He very soon distinguished himself, and in 1864, with the rank of major-general and division commander, was transferred to the Army of the Tennessee. He was wounded at Leggett's Hill, July 20, 1864, and was invalided for over a year. After the war he resumed the practice of his profession, was twice a candidate for Congress against M. C. Kerr, whom he nearly succeeded in beating, and finally in December, 1869, was made U. S. District Judge for Indiana. He was appointed Postmaster-General in 1883 and promoted the next year to be Secretary of the Treasury. In October, 1884, he was appointed and confirmed United States Circuit Judge in place of Judge Drummond retired which position he still fills. Judge Gresham is one of the most remarkable men of the age. He has been lawyer, statesman, politician, soldier, Cabinent member and judge, and was eminently successful whenever duty called him. He is a man of the highest attributes of heart and mind, pure, honest and incorruptible religious and moral, a type of the great Methodist Church, in which he was raised and to which he adheres. His election to the Presidency would mark a new era for the country, and that election seems destined to occur next November.

The novelty of a complete exhibit of Woman's Work will be introduced this season by the Minneapolis Exposition. At first thought it might seem that there is nothing in such an exhibit but "Fancy Work," but when it is considered that over 2,000 patents, (many of them on machinery of the most complicated character,) that in the U. S. alone more than fifteen hundred books have been written by women within the past four years and that many large manufacturing and mercantile concerns are conducted by ladies it will be apparent that there are great capabilities in this display. Everything made by ladies will be shown and those wishing to exhibit are invited to correspond with Mrs. E. R. Holbrook, the Superintendent, care of the Exposition.

Dissatisfied Farmers.

The Homestead: There are a great many dissatisfied farmers in the Northwest. They have been waiting for three years for a revival of business, but find to their sorrow that property is dull sale and prices lower than they have been since the panic of 1884. They see the monied interests prosper, notice that railroad stocks are in demand at greatly enhanced prices, notice that manufacturers are pooling and forming trusts, and that the necessaries of life are being gradually forced up, whilst they have to compete in the open market with the entire world. They hear of phenominal prosperity elsewhere, of booms on the Pacific coast; of cheap lands in Colorado and Texas, or in the South, and conclude that it is best to move and join the innumerable caravan who are seeking a country that shall be a heaven on earth, with little of the curse. These men are doomed to disappointment. The All-Wise has made this country about right. He has not put all the good things in one county, or in one state, or one nation. We have traveled a good deal over the West and have observed it closely. We could write marvelous tales of those countries, adhering in every case to the literal truth, which would make any man in the Northwest dissatisfied with his surroundings. And yet these tales would be utterly misleading, because, whilst the truth, they are not the whole truth, and leave out most serious drawbacks that are not met with in the prairie states.

In the same way we could picture out farm life in the Eastern states that would make a Western man sigh for the home of his fathers, and yet, these too, would be misleading because we have advantages to which the East is a stranger. In all our travel, however, we have noticed one thing, that whether on the Pacific coast, or in the south or East, or at home, farmers of a certain type succeed and of another type fail, and succeed and fail in about the same proportion. The farmer who has industry, sagacity, brains; who adapts his farming to the soil, the climate, the market facilities, and who has the grace of perseverence, succeeds; the farmer who fails in these, fails everywhere. The boy who has succeeded in the West would have succeeded in the East; the boy who fails here would have failed there. Success is not a question of climate, of cheap land or dear, but lies in the man himself. Thousands of farmers in the East would like to sell and come West, thousands in the prairie states of Kansas, Nebraska and Dakota would like to do the same thing, and all are spending enough time in trying to sell or change, to make success so complete that there would be no desire to change if they could but apply these energies in the right direction at home.

Every man owes a duty to his own state, to his own county, to his own neighborhood. That duty is to adapt himself to its resources and develop them and himself with them. We don't blame any man for getting off a piece of poor land, or out of the brush, or off a sandhill. Poor land, poor people; rough land, rough people. But in the Northwestern states there is abundance of good land which needs only intelligent culture to make it profitable. Bad farming will keep the farmer's nose to the grindstone, so will scrub stock, so will bad habits, no matter in what state he lives or under what administration. If any farmer in Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Dakota, Minnesota or Missouri would look up his own state, would show what can be done in developing its resources, price of lands would at once increase in value. Nothing helps the price of land so much as contented farmers, and dissatisfied farmers will kill the market for the best land that the sun shines on.

John Melott has just returned from a visit with his daughter in Keystone. Country air seemed to agree with him.

Mrs. W. C. Taylor of Warren expects to visit the city this week with a full line of ladies hats. Call and see them ladies.

Mr. A. Chadwick has returned to St. Paul after putting both his, and his daughter's tree claim in proper shape. He says tree claims are a poor investment to a non-resident.

Mrs. L. E. Bailey gave a very interesting lecture in favor of prohibition, to quite a large audience on Friday evening last.

We are pleased to report M. P. Losey on the gain, a few more of Dr. Chapin's condition powders and a little care and patience on his part, and he will soon be as good as new.

Dr. McGillan of Warren spent Sunday in this village.

Wm. Davidson slips into town occasionally, but not as often as before farm work commenced. Business is business with Billy and if he don't know what is going on each day, from one end of the Keystone farm to the other, then it is because his faithful "Leggs" has gone back on him. Leggs is a good one.

E. Taylor & Co. have shipped two cars of oats to the sufferers in Duluth this week.

Real estates transfers are numerous this spring, more than in the past three years.

The building boom has struck this vicinity in good earnest. Among the parties who have taken the epidemic are: H. G. Horn, a large, commodious house; John Tiedderman, house and barn.

Tracy McCarter says that a man may be posted on base ball games when he isn't on anything else. Parties near Euclid who have a good reliable business to trade, will do well to call on Micheal Keely, as he will trade, or sell out cheap for cash.

A large congregation assembled at the Presbyterian Church last Sunday morning and listned to a very able sermon preached by Rev. J. R. Crum.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Misner and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Davidson expect to take in the trip to the Yellowstone National Park and Banquet Thursday evening.

One of the farm hands at the Keystone farm while in a temporary fit of insanity, jumped through a window and screen of the second story of the boarding house, but fortunately was not seriously injured.

Woodside Items.

Hello! another shower has been shed upon our community, just in time to send the grain jumping; let us have another.

The crops look splendidly and the farmers are all living in bright hopes of reaping a golden harvest next fall.

Mr. Geo. Goodrich has taken his departure for Puget Sound, Washington Territory, where he is to be employed by a lumber company. He is not expected back before next fall.

A large number of Woodsiders will make final proof on their places this summer.

We read with great interest the Mentor locals over the name of "Starr" We wonder who she is. Oh, now I know. I will bet a second grub hoe that she is none other than Harry; but never mind, call again.

The concert given by the well known Students' Quartet, of Minneapolis, at the Scandinavian church in the town of Knute, was a grand one. Quite a number from Woodside were present and all report a splendid time.

A BIRD STORY

In front of store
On 'tother shore.
There dwelt an owl,
But not alone
Which was easily known
By the howl.

For many a youth
Did this bird soothe,
With her affection,
And many a night
On garden height
Were their attraction.

Two King birds fine
Who knew the sign,
Did this owl keep.
All night and day
Did these birds play,
When not asleep.

But on a fine day,
About a week before May,
The sad news spread
That the play had stopped,
And the nest was cropped
And the pretty owl had fled.

Wheat Will be Scarce.

Grand Forks Herald.

For nearly six years the facts have constantly indicated the existence of a large surplus of wheat, says a correspondent of the St. Paul News. The prospect now is that the quantity available for export during the next crop year will be smaller than it has been this year, and not much greater than the actual exports during the crop year 1884-5. In this estimate the latest report of the Agricultural Bureau as to the condition of winter wheat is taken as a basis, without allowing for re-sowing or for increase or decrease in acreage of spring wheat. For these times, allowance will have to be made in the light of later information. Carefully reckoned by states, the bureau estimate of acreage and condition of winter wheat points to a yield of 241,855,000 bushels, with the understanding, of course, that there is a wide margin for improvement or for further injury. The present prospect, then, is that the yield will be 51,012,000 bushels smaller than that of last year. There is much confusion in the later reports, but it is natural that improvement in some quarters may be balanced by less favorable conditions elsewhere. Nor is there sufficient evidence as yet to warrant expectation of much increase in spring wheat acreage, notwithstanding the natural growth in regions where new railroads were opened last year. In other quarters the wet weather and lateness of the season have prevented wheat sowing to some extent, and the balance of evidence thus far does not justify an estimate in excess of last year's yield, 163,462,000 bushels. If the recent advance in price causes more resowing of wheat than usual, where injury has occurred, or a greater increase of acreage in spring wheat regions, the next report of the bureau should give notice of the fact. The surplus carried over from this year, as matters now stand, is likely to be over 40,000,000 bushels, as follows: The total supply, including last year's surplus of over 48,000,000 buseels, was 504,455,970 bushels of which about 333,000,000 bushels were required for seed and food. Net exports for nine months official and complete were 99,650,596 bushels and the April statement gives exports of wheat and flour equivalent to 7,257,216 bushels of wheat, making 106,907,812 bushels exported. After May 1st, 28,218,589 bushels went out last year, but the demand has been slack of late, and the price has so far advanced that the total exports for the crop year seem likely not to exceed 130,000,000 bushels. That would leave on hand July 1st, in excess of the minimum stock, never reckoned, about 41,388,000 bushels.

If the total supply for the next year proves to be no greater than these figures indicate, say 447,700,000 bushels, the requiremint of food and seed will be about 340,000,000 bushels, leaving less than 107,000,000 bushels for export. To sell that quantity of wheat at all and at the same time to get as fair a price for it as possible, will require more good sense and self-control than the markets have shown of late years. The chances are that prices will be put so high as to permit competing countries to market first whatever they have to sell, as usual, and in that case a disastrous tumble in prices may result

It is entirely within the bounds of possibility that good weather may give the country a larger supply. But it is also entirely possible that a dry summer, following the unusual rains of the past four weeks, may reduce the yield below these estimates, so that there is reason for watching climatic conditions and the prospect for foreign crops this year with more interest than usual.

To Get Out of Debt.

Suggestions by a Farmer How to Get Rid of Mortgages and Debts.

A writer in the Farmers' Review throws out these pointers for the benefit of the unfortunate. He says: "The record of most counties in our Western States, if examined, would show a large per cent of the farmrs encumbered with mortgages, and it is probable that the load of debt carried by farmers does more to discourage and keep them from doing good work, as they are capable of, than all other causes combined. I have a hearty sympathy for the young farmer in debt, for I have been through the entire line of experiences, which, as the catechism says, "accompany and flow from" being in this state. Just thirty years ago I bought sixty acres of land on long credit, and as it had no buildings I borrowed $1,000 at 10 per cent interest, to put up a modest house and barn. I was then young and enthusiastic, and 10 per cent had no terrors to me, but with a growing family on my hands, it took twenty-five years of bondage and hard work before I could say, "I do not owe a dollar," and I doubt if Vanderbilt ever felt richer than I do to-day on my ninety-acre farm. If I can point out to the farmers in debt who read the Farmers' Review, some things to be avoided, and some methods which, if adopted, will help to the desired freedom from bondage, I shall esteem myself happy. My first advice to many farmers would be to sell out and make a new start. They have probably overloaded themselves, either from buying too large a farm or one too badly out of condition. The farmer who for years has not been able to reduce his indebtedness, has good cause to believe that there should be a change of some kind, and he ought to be able to determine whether or not it needs to be so radical as a change of location. In many cases he only needs to change his plans. The farmer who can make a reduction of even $200 a year in his indebtedness, if owing from $1,000 to $2,000, has no cause for discouragement. A common mistake made by the farmer in debt is to devote all his thought and energies to an attempt to increase his income. In other words, he usually reasons in this way: Now, to meet my interest and reduce my indebtedness, I must work my farm for all there is in it, and he begins to plow a large breadth and put out a larger acreage of crops, which involves increased expense for horses, hands and machinery, larger blacksmith bills, and inevitably, decreased yields per acre. Now all the profit in farming comes from crops above the average, and to grow them requires that the soil be in good condition, that they be planted in good time and thoroughly cultivated. The true method for the farmer in debt is to say, I cannot afford to cultivate a single acre that gives no profit, and to reduce his acres under cultivation and so reduce his expenses at the same time. There are thousands of farmers who have been keeping two teams on a farm of less than one hundred acres, and consequently must keep an extra hand to work one of them, and having the teams and help they have kept so much land under the plow that they have not prepared or cultivated it well, and could fertilize but little, and the extra expense has consumed all the profit. Such farming is like Pharaoh's lean kine, which ate up the fat ones and still were as thin as ever. It may be difficut to convince my readers of it, but I firmly believe that in a majority of cases the first and most important step towards getting out of debt will be to reduce the acres under cultivation, in order both to reduce expenses and increase the yield per acre of crops. If the land is in such condition and is so poorly cultivated that crops pay no profit, the more land you cultivate the worse off you are. Study the character and capacity of your farms and markets, and adapt your management to them. I have in mind now two excellent men on rolling farms, well adapted to grazing, who for the last six years have been trying to compete with neighbors who have rich bottom farms, in growing corn and wheat, and neither has been able to reduce his indebtedness a dollar. Both of them have rented fields on adjoining farms, and planted from twenty to forty acres of grain besides what they have plowed on their own land, and both have had short, unprofitable crops. One of them, on a farm of fifty-five acres, this year has forty under the plow; and as the remainder is mostly wood lot he has not pasture enough for two cows. The other has over 100 acres, [illegible] seven horses, one or two of them old [illegible] worn out, and with but five head of cattle his crop of last year was eaten up and he obliged to buy feed this spring. Either of these men could make money by dairying, and at the same time improve their farms, while now they are running them down. If these two farmers keep on trying to grow wheat and corn as their money crops they will both lose their farms. I have referred to them because they are typical farmers, and represent the conditions of thousands, and to enforce the thought that intelligent study and planning must be the first step towards getting out of debt. I hope in another article to give some practical and helpful suggestions.

CROOKSTON, MINN., MAY 31.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

TACOMA, W. T., May 17, 1888.

W. H. JENNINGS Esq.:

DEAR SIR:—I consider this a very healthy country, the water being pure and soft, and there is no malaria. It is probably not as good for the throat and lungs here on the Sound, and near the Ocean, as it is in Minnesota. There is some dampness in the air all the time. The country is filling up very rapidly, and all kinds of business is good. Hotel keeping, hardware and lumber are probably the best lines. As a general thing, there are plenty of general stores and groceries in any of the towns. There are certainly plenty of them here. Still, they all seem to be doing fairly well, and I have not heard of a failure, during the seven months I have been here. It is almost impossible to find a building to rent in this place, either for business or residence. There is a large amount of building going on, and there would be more, if lumber could be got fast enough. The largest mill here (about twice the size of Mr. Walker's, there) sends all it cuts away, and cannot fill one-half its orders Lumber goes from here to San Francisco, San Diego, and all down the Mexican and South American coasts, and to China, Japan and Australia, and by rail, eastward to Salt Lake and Denver, and when the Panama or Nicaraugua Canal, or both, are opened, say five to seven years hence, all the world will come here for lumber, especially for long, strong and heavy timber, and piles. Puget Fir is the best timber in the world for the greatest variety of purposes. It is strong as oak, and will hold nails about as well. It is elastic as ash, and stronger. It makes good dimension stuff, ship timber, ship planking, flooring, R. R. ties, house finishing, or almost anything, and the supply is large. The heaviest timber is cut off where it can be thrown into the waters of the Sound, but narrow gauge railroads and tram roads reach it farther back. A large company has been formed in St. Paul, to build a mill here and run a railroad 40 miles out to timber lands and coal mines. They are now pushing as fast as possible to get lumber into market. There are many small concerns starting in the lumber trade. With fair to middling management they should all make money, the way things are now. This place is growing fast, most too fast, for these who are tying to catch on. Real estate is held high and stiff, and the prospects of the place justify it. I have no doubt at all about its having 100,000 people within ten years from now. That will warrant them in asking from $500. to $700. per front foot for best business property, and $1,000. to $2,000. for residence lots. Real estate has fully doubled in price here, during the last seven months. Will this keep up? Yes. People who have money to invest, are just getting awake to the merits of the location, are just beginning to see that this place is as favorably, yea more favorably, situated to make a large city than Chicago, and that being the case, they rustle their money together and put it in. Our own business men are some of the heaviest investors. I got out a circular about three months ago, that sets forth some of the reasons for my faith in the place. In the steady and rapid march of events, it has become old and stale as to prices of real estate, but the reasons for the rapid advance are as operative and active as ever, and will so continue as long as time endures. Geographical position, climate, and incomparable resources in timber, iron and coal, all combine to make this a large and wealthy commercial and manufacturing city. In making a summary of the elements and forces which are here in matchless combination to make a large city, I would not omit to mention the superb spirit of enterprise that pervades the atmosphere, and incites and inspires all to do their utmost. It requires no argument to prove that success must come, where all are crowding to the front, and nobody is halting, or doubting, or straggling. If you should be in doubt as to this place being a good residence for you on account of your throat or lung trouble, then, I think Ellmsburg, on the N. P. R. R., on the east side of the Cascade Range, would be a [illegible] one for you. It is the end of a Division of the N. P. R. R., is the out-fitting point for the Salmon River mines, has now about 1,500 people, is in the midst of a good farming and fruit country, and stands a good show to be the capital of the state, when it becomes such.

Truly Yours,

ANSEL BATES.

Going West.

The general interest that has been taken in the opening of the Montana Indian Reservations is shown by the large numbers of people who have already gone to Great Falls to investigate the mineral and agricultural resources of that wonderful country. The low excursion rate announced by C. H. Warren, Gen. Pass. Notice of Mortgage Sale.

[First publication April 19th, 1888.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty dollars ($60) installment of interest, which became due and payable on the 24th day of December, 1887, upon a certain mortgage made, executed, and delivered by John N. Ives and Annie Ives, his wife, of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, mortgagors, to the Netherlands American Land Company, of Amsterdam, Holland, mortgagee, bearing date the 28th day of June A. D. 1884, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 30th day of June 1884, at 2:10 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on pages 202, 203, 204 and 205.

And whereas a further default has been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the mortgagors failing and neglecting to pay the the taxes assessed against and levied upon the premises covered by said mortgage, prior to the date of the sale of lands for the payment of taxes, and the mortgagee, to protect the lien of its said mortgage, has been compelled to pay, and on the 2d day of May, 1887, did pay in satisfaction of the taxes then due and delinquent on said premises, the sum of twelve and 75-100 dollars ($12.75,) and the said defaults having each continued for a period of more than thirty days, the whole sum secured by said mortgage is hereby declared due and payable as stipulated in said mortgage in case of a failure to comply with the conditions thereof, and that by reason of such default and declaration aforesaid, there is claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of six hundred and ninety-two dollars and twenty-nine one hundredths ($692.29,) and no action or proceeding at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and conveyed thereby, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼.) of Section thirty-two (32.) in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty five (45) west of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less, according to United States Government survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt, interest, taxes and fifty dollars attorney's fees, stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, by the Sheriff of said County of Polk, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on the 2d day of June A. D. 1888, subject to redemption at any time within one year, in manner provided by law.

Dated at Moorhead, April 12th A. D. 1888.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication May 10th 1888.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Joseph Fortin, mortgagor, to Mrs. Mary A. Allen, mortgagee, dated the 7th day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of June A. D. 1882, at four o'clock p. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 420, 431 and 432 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred forty 60-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. There is due on said mortgage the further sum of twenty-five 40-100 dollars for taxes paid as by said mortgage provided.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said county, or by his duly appointed deputy, on Friday the 22d day of June A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows: to-wit: The south half of the northeast quarter (s½ ne¼) and also lots one and two (1 and 2) of Section three (3,) all in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north of Range forty-four (44) west, containing one hundred fifty-nine 23-100 (159 23-100) acres, according to the government survey thereof.

Dated at Crookston, Minn., this 3d day of May 1888.

Todd County Argus: From various published interviews and numerous newspaper comments one is led to believe that Gilman is an active factor in the politics of the fifth district as well as in the state at large, but no one can point to a single word or act on his part during the preliminary canvas of the past months, that gives evidence of his seeking preferment. This general recognition of his name is partly due to the turn of the political wheel of fortune two years ago when he was an active candidate for governor and failed to have the support of the machine elements of the Republican party, but is mainly due to the strong and active influence which he has wielded during the last six years in the politics of the fifth district. To Gilman was largely due the credit of organizing the magnificient canvas of six years ago which placed Hon. Knute Nelson in congress, as well as shaping the platforms of the party upon which Nelson has been reelected twice and through which the latter has, by an honest and courageous course taken rank among the foremost public men of the country. While Gilman is not at present seeking office, it would be the part of wisdom for the Republicans of Minnesota to make him their nominee for governor this fall and thus insure the usual party majority.

Does Farming Pay?

By James Wilson in The Homestead.

That depends. Farming as it is conducted pays so far, provides so much, and no more, Speculation has looked right and left, tried this and that, and has failed. No one department of the farm conducted exclusively will pay. Farming on horseback will not pay today, will not pay current interest on the assessor's valuation even. And yet many farms are paying to the extent of enabling the owners to get comfortable housing and clothing and food, and raise families respectably. On those farms the owners rise early and work all day intelligently. The children help all they can all summer in doors and out doors, and get a term of schooling in the winter. Cows are milked and butter is sold, eggs are traded for groceries in the summer, and poultry is exchanged in the fall for boots and shoes and clothing. The work mares raise colts that bring good prices to go East and North at 4 years old. A few steers are fed every winter, bred on the farm, fed on corn and raised on the farm, and what hogs can be fattened. Speculation is never thought of. The families live as its income justifies, and no faster. The press of the State is sustained by this class of farmers, the churches are supported by hemt. They pay the bulk of the taxes and are the best element in both political parties. The father is about home all the time unless business calls him away, when he puts on his best clothes. He is township trustee or school director, or perhaps county supervisor once in a long time. He sits on juries as seldom as he can, says little, and changes his views slowly. The mother sees to things about the house. She does not milk the cows, bring in wood, work the garden and die young from overwork, but she cooks and washes and touches here and there and gets help from all the family. She sews, and mends, and patches. No mortal woman can hold the love of her sons unless she sews on a button in time of need. She begins gardening every spring—for one day only. She has posie beds, and potted plants, and a best room. If you take the census of her and give her choice of voting, or being assured for ever and ever that the boys and all mankind will clean their feet before coming into the house, she will choose the latter without even going into committee on the preference. These people just now have very moderate incomes. The boys do have Sunday suits, and mother sees to it that they have some pocket money on the Fourth of July and circus day. The girls help mother till they can teach school, or till they get married. They help the old folks to beat manners into the boys, even up to the point of gettingt hem into boiled shirts, and behaving in company. The girls are healthy, handsome and good enough to grace the White House state dinners some day—and they will. A dollar goes a long ways with these young people. One watches the growth of a pig, another of a calf, another farther along in his teens sees a colt that is his, mature, sales are made, when they become capitalists. A family effort is made through years and the girls get a musical instrument. They play sacred songs on Sunday evening and something lively through the week. The boys gradually take the burden from the father's shoulders and the girls gradually assume mother's load. The farm is free from debt. The family tie takes the place of wealth in bringing happiness. Each has a great deal to live for in the happiness of the others. It is stock in trade, as it were. The accumulations are good boys and girls, well lived lives, and future hopes. Yes, farming pays.

Lost, Strayed or Stolen.

MONTANA SHORT LINE.

When traveling every one should consider well the questions of economy, comfort, safety and speed, these questions being of the same importance in a journey of an hour as in one of several days' ride. An examination of the map will convince anyone that this is the most direct route to and from all the principal points in Central and Northern Minnesota,

ST. PAUL MINNEAPOLIS MANITOBA RAILWAY.

Dakota and Montana. Our equipment and time are excellent. Our rates are the lowest, but this fact is something which speaks for itself. Definite figures and maps can be obtained by applying to any Agent of the Company, or the General Passenger Agent.

The following are a few of the Principal Points reached via this Line:

ST. CLOUD, SAUK CENTRE, FERGUS FALLS, CROOKSTON, ST. VINCENT, HUTCHINSON, PAYNESVILLE, MORRIS, APPLETON AND BRECKENRIDGE, MINN.; WATERTOWN, ABERDEEN, ELLENDALE, WAHPETON, FARGO, GRAND FORKS, GRAFTON, DEVILS LAKE, BOTTINEAU AND BUFORD, DAKOTA; GLASGOW, DAWES (FT. BELKNAP), ASSINNIBOINE, FT. BENTON, GREAT FALLS, HELENA AND BUTTE, MONTANA; WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, AND ALL PACIFIC COAST POINTS.

Parties seeking farms or business locations will find unusual opportunities for both on this line in Northern Dakota and Montana, also in Minnesota where the Company has for sale at low prices and on favorable terms 2,000,000 acres of excellent farming, grazing and timber lands. Farm, Stock and Home: Mr. Hudd, member of congress from Wisconsin, says that all the pine land in his state is owned by about 40 men, all immensely rich, of course, while the 20,000 laborers engaged in the lumber industry are enjoying no increase of wages, and are as poor as when they first began to swing the axe. Lumbering is a protected industry, protected in the interest of labor! Bah!

Puck: No tariff in the world will make labor dear if labor is willing to sell itself cheap. Whatever labor is paid because it can't be had cheaper, and that is all there is about it. If the tariff is reduced on the goods we manufacture, the employers will make less money and build less expensive houses; that's all. They won't pay labor less; if labor would have worked for less it would have been paid less long ago.

The people of Florida are anxious to have the public generally informed as to the capabilities of that wonderful semi-tropical region, believing that many whose health does not permit of their spending their winters in the North would spend at least part of it in their State, if more was known about it, the Florida Immigration Association will make a very large display at the Minneapolis Exposition, which will include orange, lemon, cocoanut and olive trees, pineapple and banana plants, etc., all in bearing. No such display has ever been attempted before in the North. They will also send some large aligators which will be assigned space in the large pool in the center of the Exposition building. These large reptiles will doubtless see many strange things during their visit to the great show, but few things will appear as strange as they will to the people of the Northwest who are accustomed to diferent varities of game.

No Doubt About It.

Minneapolis Evening Journal.

Mr. Blaine is a larger, grander man in the estimation of his countrymen to-day than he was yesterday, and that is saying a great deal. He has done that which he ought not to have been required to do, but which the conduct of so-called friends made it necessary for him to do. He has said frankly, and in so many words, that he could not accept the nomination for President if it were offered to him. He indicates very clearly that he meant his Florence letter to be conclusive, and expected it to be accepted in that spirit. No one may now accuse him of insincerity or of complicity in the effort to revive his candidacy. The reasons he gives for speaking again on this subject are those which induced many of his sincere friends to hope that he would appreciate the importance of defining his exact relation to the movement in his favor. He speaks of the fact that a number of candidates have entered the race who would not have done so if he had not withdrawn, and adds: "If I should now by speech or by silence, by commission or omission, permit my name, in any event, to come before the convention I should incur the repreach of being uncandid with those who have always been candid with me. Assuming that the Presidential nomination could by any possible chance be offered to me, I could not accept it."

That makes an end of the effort to have his name considered by the convention and leaves even his most ardent supporters free to choose among the other men who have been mentioned for the place.

But Mr. Blaine goes further, and the cheerful confidence with which he looks forward to the success of his party, united and wisely led in support of the principles to which it is committed, cannot fail to be an inspiration to every man who looks to the Republican party for the best and wisest in popular government.

Farm, Stock and Home: The Manitoba railroad owners now "grunt and sweat under the weary load" of the recent legal decision regarding the commissioners' right to reduce passenger rates. It is declared that the state is interfering with private business enterprise, that it is ruining its own interests, preventing its own development, and a lot more stuff of that kind. Nothing of the sort, gentlemen. After the commission has got through with you, you will still have resources sufficient to pay liberal dividends on all you were ever really worth, and if they leave you more than that they are the wrong men in the right place. Unload your ficticious wealth; cancel many millions of mortgages you hold on the honest industry of this region, mortgages which said honest industry never signed and for which it never received an equivalent; consider yourselves worth two or three million dollars apiece, instead of twenty or thirty, and peace may come between you and the people. But if worst comes to worst and the victims turn robbers, you are barred from complaining. Accept the inevitable, gentlemen, the people are becoming more and more determined that they will stop paying tribute to ficticious values.

They Will Go to Gresham.

Minneapolis Evening Journal.

Now that Mr. Blaine has spoken so clearly on the subject of his candidacy as to say that he could not accept the nomination for President if it were offered to him, not even his most stubborn boomers will venture to offer his name to the Chicago convention. Even they must begin to consider other candidates and weigh the merits of other men. The positive withdrawal of Mr. Blaine means a large accession to Gresham. There can be no reasonable doubt of that. It is fair to say that Gresham was the second choice of three-fourths of the delegates who hoped that Blaine might be induced to accept a nomination, and, with no hope of nominating Blaine, they may be expected now to rally solidly to the support of the man whose name has more of the hope of victory in it than any other mentioned for the leadership of the party. He becomes now the first and second choice of a larger element of his party than any other candidate and his nomination is reasonably assured.

Food Tests in New York.

Official Analysis of Baking Powders—Adulterations in Cream of Tarter.

Under the direction of the New York State Board of Health, eighty-four different kinds of baking powders, embracing all the brands that could be found for sale in the State, were submitted to examination and analysis by Prof. C. F. Chandler, a member of the State Board and President of the New York City Board of Health, assisted by Prof. Edward G. Love, the well-known United States Government chemist.

The official report shows that a large number of the powders examined were found to contain alum or lime; many of them to such an extent as to render them seriously objectionable for use in the preparation of human food.

Alum was found in twenty-nine samples. This drug is employed in baking powders to cheapen their cost. The presence of lime is attributed to the impure cream of tartar of commerce used in their manufacture. Such cream of tartar was also analyzed and found to containe lime and other impurities; in some samples to the extent of 93 per cent. of their entire weight.

All the baking powders of the market, with the single exception of "Royal" (not including the alum and phosphate powders, which have not the virtue of even an impure cream of tartar,) are made from the adulterated cream of tartar of commerce, and conseqently contain lime to a corresponding extent.

The only baking powder yet found by chemical analysis to be entirely free from lime and absolutely pure is the "Royal." This perfect purity results from the exclusive use of cream of tartar specially refined and prepared by patent processes which totally remove the tartrate of lime and other impurities. The cost of this chemically pure cream of tartar is much greater than any other, and on account of this greater cost is used in no baking powder but the "Royal."

Prof. Love who made the analysis of baking powders for the New York State Board of Health, as well as for the Government, says of the purity and wholesomeness of the "Royal:"

"I find the Royal Baking Powder composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates or other injurious substance.

E. G. LOVE, PH. D."

It is highly satisfactory to the housekeepers of this vicinity, where the Royal Baking Powder is in general use, that the investigations by the analysts in Massachusetts, New York and Ohio, the only States that have thus far taken action upon this important subject, agree in classing it as the purest and most efficient baking powder in the market.

Wilkin County Gazette: The Pioneer Press of recent date published a table estimating the strength of the different candidates for congress, placing Wilkin County in E. E. Corliss' column and on another day published the second table placing us in the doubtful column. As for this county being doubtful, we have never heard of such a thing. Mr. Comstock has represented us too long in the State senate and has served his constituents too faithfully to drop him for a new man inexperienced in legislative work. These people who put this little corner of the Bloody Fifth in the doubtful list, received their information from some unreliable source or at the time were only guessing. The people of this county are too intelligent not to appreciate the services of a man that has given entire satisfaction in the past and throw him overboard for some one who has never had the test that Mr. Comstock has.

Millers Don't Like It.

Farm, Stock and Home.

Millers of the Northwest do not take kindly to the plan for providing better facilities of exchange between the wheat growers of this region and the millers of England. This is not surprising; indeed, it would be surprising if it were not so. In a late number, the Northwestern Miller, a miller's organ, devotes considerable space to the Scandinavian Elevator Company. It is needless to say that the Miller neither has respect for nor confidence in the company or its cause. It says there is a vast amount of misinformation regarding the excessive profits of elevators and middlemen. The regular charge for handling wheat is two cents a bushel, and that is certainly low enough, substantially asserts the Miller. Nominally the charge for handling wheat is two cents, but care is taken not to state the average surplus at every "line" elevator at each "clean up," by reason of "mistakes" in weight; nor is any notice taken of the "errors in judgment" in grading, which helps to make the enormous dividends of elevator companies.

The Miller also says: "The promoters talk glibly about a saving of ten cents a bushel over the present cost in England." If this means cost of carrying wheat to England, the promoters talk of no such thing. They do think they can get No. 1 Hard wheat to the English markets in its purity, and thus get, not ten only, but more likely fifteen cents more per bushel for it. The reason for their faith is found in facts like the following: In February, 1887, the best English wheat—Kent or Essex—was worth $1.14 in Liverpool, and Duluth Hard (the English name for No. 1 Hard), was worth $1.20. In November of the same year Kent, or Essex wheat was still worth $1.14 in Liverpool, while Duluth Hard was worth $1.02. Growers of No. 1 Hard believe that this great change in comparative value was the result of adulterating their pure wheat, and sending to England under that name a quality which would scarcely grade No. 2 Chicago. The growers also believe that the price of their good wheat at home was regulated by that of the inferior article sent abroad under a false name. Surely the Miller would not deny the farmer the right of trying to relieve himself of such an injustice?

Again we quote: "Farmers have no money, have no credit, and cannot borrow money to buy wheat with. It takes millions in hard cash to handle the wheat crop, and when the movement begins these millions must be forthcoming." We know the farmers are poor, but it is unkind to twit them of it. We also know that millers and elevator men—whose profits are so small—are rich, can handle the required millions, but it requires much assurance to boast about it when the manner in which the millions were acquired is considered. But the reasons assigned instead of discouraging the farmers, make infinitely stronger the incentive to work for a change, to a limited degree, at least, of the conditions named by the Miller.

Of course, the Miller can see nothing but failure for the new enterprise, while, on the other hand, farmers can see only bankruptcy for themselves if present methods continue. After working hard for years and raising immense quantities of the best wheat in the world, the farmers "have no money," but the transporters, handlers and grinders of the same wheat are all rich. That farmers are getting restless under such conditions is a cheering sign, and it illy becomes any man or journal to discourage or ridicule them for any attempt they may make to effect a change. We trust the union between growers of No. 1 Hard wheat and their foreign customers—who have in the past, and will in the future make the price for it—will become close and complete, and we hope that our farmers will find that honor, fair dealing and profit abroad which has been denied them at home.

Water for Milch Cows.

Western Rural and American Stockman: Can you tell us how much water a milch cow should drink? asks a correspondent. That will depend on the cow. Stewart says that Professor Horsfall made a comparison as to the water drunk by fattening cattle and milch cows of the same weight. He found that cows when giving only twenty pounds of milk per day, drank forty pounds of water more than fattening cattle of the same weight, and he inferred from this that the cows gave off from the lungs and the pores of the skin over twenty pounds of water per day more than fattening cattle of the same weight, since the water contained in the milk yielded was only about seventeen and one-half pounds, whilst the cow consumed forty pounds of extra water. On examinining the manure from cows and fattening cattle, he found the amount of moisture the same in both cases. This is an interesting comparative experiment of the capacity for water drinking in the fattening animal and milch cow, says Stewart, whether we accept the theory or not. The experiments have not been numerous and exact enough to determine the precise method of the expenditure of all the water; but the large capacity and necessity for water in the milch cow is abundantly proved; yet it may be worth while to mention the experiments of M. Dancel, reported to the French Academy of Sciences. His experiments were to determine the effect of quantity of water upon quantity and quality of milk. He says that by inducing cows to drink more water, the quantity of milk yielded by them can be increased in proportion up to many quarts per day, without perceptibly injuring its quality. The amount of milk, he states, is proportional to the quantity of water drunk. In experimenting upon cows fed in stall with dry fodder that gave only nine to twelve quarts of milk per day, but when this dry food was moistened with from eighteen to twenty-three quarts of water daily, their yield was then from twelve to fourteen quarts of milk per day. Besides this water taken with the food, the cows were allowed to drink the same as before, and their thirst was excited by adding a little salt to the fodder. The milk produced under this additional amount of water, on analysis, was pronounced of good quality and when tested for butter was found satisfactory. A definite amount of water could not be fixed upon for each cow, since the appetite for drink differs widely in different animals. He found, by a series of observations, that the quantity of water habitually drunk by each cow during the twenty-four hours was a criterion to judge of the quantity of milk that she would yield per day. And a cow that does not habitually drink as much as twenty-seven quarts of water daily must be a poor milker—giving only from five and one-half to seven quarts per day. But all the cows which consumed as much as fifty quarts of water daily were excellent milkers—giving from eighteen to twenty-three quarts of milk daily. He gives a confident opinion that the quantity of water drunk by a cow is an important test of her value as a milker.

These experiments, although they may not be quite sufficient to induce confidence in M. Dancel's rule, yet it is certain that abundance of pure water is an absolute necessity to be provided by a successful dairyman. As pure water permeates every part of the system of the cow, its purity is of the first consideration. The quality of the water affects the health of the cow and the healthfullness of her milk. The impurities of stagnant water, in the form of organic germs, pass in a dormant state into the circulation of the blood, and thence into the secretions of milk; and so powerful are these taints that it is not unfrequently, at cheese factories, that the milk of one cow spoils a large vat of milk. So important is the quality of water for the cow, that it is none too severe a test to say that no water is fit for a milch cow, that is not fit for a man to drink. Water should also be easy of access, both in winter and summer. In winter it should either be given them where they stand in the stall, or near by, so guarded that they may drink unmolested.

In summer, if possible, water should be furnished in each pasture field. Cows should not be required to travel for it, because they will not do this on a hot day, unless very thirsty, and consequently they will not drink as much as a large yield of milk requires. When a farm affords a small, running stream, this should be conducted into every pasture field, if practicable, or every pasture should be connected with the stream. Or, where a spring is located upon an elevated part of the farm, the water from it should be carried in pipes to each pasture field, and caused to run into troughs which are always kept full. And, where water can be had by sinking wells, these should be furnished in each field, and the water pumped by wind or hand, so as to give the cows free access to water at all times. The cost of sinking these wells will often be repaid in a single season. Some dairymen are content to drive their cows to water, even in summer, only once per day. But such dairymen are destined to constant disappointment in the profits of the dairy.

To induce cows to drink often, some of the most successful dairymen, where water was pumped by hand into large troughs put from one-half to one pound per cow, of oil-meal into the water-trough daily, with one-half ounce of salt, and, stirring this well in the water, gives it a taste so much relished by the cows that they come often and sip a few quarts. By this means, they were not only induced to drink much water, but the small amount of oil-meal assisted in increasing the yield of milk. Bran or middlings may be used instead; and we can assure every dairyman that the cows will return this liberally, with compound interest, in milk.

On Sunday afternoon the department was called out to attend to a fire on Jerome's Addition. The fire was found to be in a wood pile and was easily extinguished.

The Maggie Fielding Company tonight in No. 15. Tickets 25, 50 and 75 cents at Berthiaume Jewelry Co.'s store. Don't miss this opportunity to take in a good show.

The fire bell on Thursday called out the department to quench a fire in E. P. Pierce's ice house. One would hardly imagine ice houses to be in danger of spontaneous combustion this year.

Kittson County was suffering severely for lack of rain last week, but doubtless that long felt want was supplied this week. There had been no rain this spring and grain and grass began to feel sick.

Dont forget that the place to get the best goods for the least money is at the store of C. H. Saake, Main Street, opposite Merchants Nat. Bank. [5.7]

A man named Wm. Costello, an employe on the Keystone farm was brought to the city last week to be examined before the Probate judge. It was supposed that he was insane but a strict examination failed to substantiate the claim and he was discharged.

The farmers institute at Warren was well attended and a grand success in every particular. The instructors went to Hallock for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday with the prospect good for a large attendance. Had the institute occurred here a week later there would have been a far greater attendance.

Insure against cyclones. The Continental is the best company for your purpose. Elias Steenerson is sole agent for this time-tried and fire-tested company and invites his friends to call and see what he can do for them in insurance of all kinds.

The Rev. I. C. Fortin, of Winnipeg, has taken charge of Christ church and preached his first sermon to a large congregation last Sunday morning. Regular services will now be held in Christ church every Sunday at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Seats all free and strangers welcome. The Sunday school will be held in the morning at 9:30 o'clock.

On Thursday evening an excursion to the Yellowstone Valley was enjoyed by the Masonic fraternity at their hall. The magic lantern made a fine headlight for the train, and the passengers enjoyed the trip. Upon arrival at the National Park a bounteous feast was found ready and a dance followed. The party landed at the home station sometime during the wee sma' hours o' Friday, well pleased with their trip.

A. R. Jones returned on Tuesday evening from a trip to Langdon, D. T. He says that country is suffering for lack of rain, that crops are all very backward and will amount to nothing unless rain comes soon; thinks they got it on Tuesday. Mr. Jones is figuring on a large residence for banker Mooney with good prospects of securing it. Should he succeed he will have use for all of our surplus carpenters.

The system of handling the town herds could be very much improved. When the cows come home at night they seem to be allowed to roam about at their own sweet wills for a half hour or so before any one appears to attend to them and on Tuesday afternoon they were allowed to roam about the streets for the greater part of the time. We have heard numerous complaints and if the matter is not remedied trouble is liable to ensue.

C. H. Saake displays in his Jewelry store a fine assortment of gold and silver watches, gold jewelry, solid silver tableware, fine clocks etc. at prices lower than at any former period. Everybody is invited to call and inspect my stock. [5-7]

Richard Hussey received a letter from Robert Houston last week. 'Bob." as he is familiarly known here, seems all carried away with the new country and thinks it is the boss place to make money if a man has money to do it with. He says butter and kindred commodities are cheaper than here—which would suggest that it can not be such an awful good place for a farmer to make money in. Mr. H. thinks he shall stay there awhile and try his luck. Thinks that had he gone there when he first struck Crookston he might now have been a millionaire or thereabouts. Says there's money in shingles and our boys are in shingles heavily. He is pleased with the climate and the prospects so far very much.

WILL CELEBRATE!

Crookston Will Celebrate the Glorious 4th

IN DUE AND ANCIENT FORM.

At a meeting held on Monday evening it was decided to celebrate, and the following officers were elected: President of the day, Edward Carey; Treasurer, Louis Fontaine; Marshal, Charles Jefferson. The following committees were appointed:

ON SUBSCRIPTION.

H. A. Mason, T. Thompson, I. Fortier, J. E. O'Brien.

Rev. Mr. Carroll, of Ohio, will preach in the Baptist Church next Sunday a. m. and evening. He comes highly recommended, and should be heard by a large congregation.

We can loan money on better terms than anyone else in the valley. Money paid over the moment securities are executed. STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

The refreshing showers of the week will have a salutary effect upon the crops, especially grass. It looks as though Kittson County must have had a generous supply of it.

Mrs. E. E. Perry and Miss Nellie will leave for their new home in the far west about the 15th inst. Their many friends here regret to see them go and unite in best wishes for their future welfare.

It pays to insure but it is essential to know that your insurance is good. The Continental is one of the old tried companies, solid as the everlasting hills and your insurance there is as good as gold.

The Grand Army has captured Fergus this week, and say!—There'll be a picnic. They're going to "bust a water-million" and "open a keg 'o nails." There will be representatives from every post in the State gathered 'round that camp fire and that they will have a grand time goes without saying. Wherever you find a half dozen vets together there's music but when you strike such a crowd as this there's lashin's 'o fun.

Saake, THE JEWELER, says he has the finest line of goods he ever brought to the city, and that he will challenge any competitor to sell the same quality of of goods for so little money. Snide goods may be sold at far less figures and are dear at any price, but Saake don't carry that kind of goods. He has the very best and these at bed-rock figures. It will pay you to call and size him up.

W. W. Mitchel was down from the Thirteen last week on a land office case. He reports everything in excellent shape so far as crops are concerned. Says he thinks they have had more rain out there than we have. He has a fine garden, he says, nothing disturbed by frost so far. He is making big calculations on potatoes of which he has planted a large area. He says the crops in the Thirteen Towns, this fall, will astonish the natives.

The citizens of Red Lake Falls held a mass meeting last week to consider the matter of the Red Lake pine. They passed a series of resolutions which they forwarded to our Senators, requesting immediate action upon the Nelson bill now before the Senate. Our people should not be backward in this matter and it would be well to call a meeting to discuss the Nelson bill and to adopt such modifications as seem best and urge their acceptance. We believe that should united action be taken upon the question that pine might be secured at this session, but unless something of the kind is done probably nothing will be accomplished unless it may be the passage of the Nelson bill which does not seem to be what we want. Shall we have a meeting?

We have only one note and mortgage we make a loan the day applied for, charge no bonus, and make interest payable at our office in Crookston.
STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

In the Elgin Daily News of May 28th we see an account of a fearful storm that devastated that portion of the foot stool on May 27th wherein thousands of dollars worth of property were destroyed in a few minutes and many were seriously wounded and maimed. The storm lasted 15 or 20 minutes but in that time the devastation accomplished was fearful to behold. By all accounts we have of it the like was never seen in this country nor likely to be. Our wind storms sink to insignificance in comparison and our biggest blizzards are but gentle zephyrs. We do not write this to gloat over the miseries of poor, frail humanity but to show to any disposed to grumble at our beautiful Red River Valley that there is many a worse place to dwell.

Weather Record for May.

CORRECTED MONTHLY BY JOHN ROSS, ESQ.

The average temperature for May, 1888, was 40 degrees avove, and of May, 1877, 62 degrees above, a difference of 18 degrees. The prevailing winds were from the northwest, north and northeast. The coldest day was the 12th, the thermometer indicating 20 above at 7 a. m., 30 above at 12 m., and 36 above at 6 p. m. The warmest days were the 20th and 21st. It rained on the 2d, 20th, 22d and 30th. There were fourteen clear days during the month. High wind prevailed on the 11th, 13th, 19th and 23th.

The Tournament.

The tournament that closed on Saturday evening was the biggest event of the kind ever attempted in the city and in fact one of the biggest ever held in the State. Everything went off like clock-work without a hitch and all were well pleased. Julius Block, of St. Peter, won the city lot. Crookston came within one of winning the capital prize standing 75 to St. Paul 76.

A Nicht Wi' Bobby Burns

Or words to that effect. Saturday evening was one long to be remembered by all who were permitted to listen to the rendition of those Scottish songs by the members of the Bainsfather family, father, mother daughter and son. Mr. Bainsfather is as full of Scottish humor and song as an egg is full of meat and his renditions of the humorous side of the Scottish character brought down the house every time he appeared and kept the audience in roars of laughter. He is a good singer and a pleasing actor, and we may say, and keep within bounds, the best ventriloquist we ever had here. Mrs. B. has a rich, sweet voice, tenderly pathetic and touching at times full and clear always and her rendition of the auld Scotch songs is a style we never saw approached—peculiarly her own. It must be heard to be appreciated. Miss Maggie is a fine musician and bids fair to rival her mother in sweetness of tone when her voice shall have become perfected. Master Johnny is a "broth of a boy" with a style peculiarly his own and with a future before him that bids fair to rival his father with no mishap. Each was encored to the turn at every appearance and responded with great good nature, howbeit the size of the audience was not such as to inspire very great exertion. This was an entertainment well deserving a full house but got a very light one we regret to say. The company left for Winnipeg on Sunday where they play an engagement then they go to San Francisco, thence to Australia. It is possible that some day they will return and should they do so they will no doubt see a much larger audience than greeted their first appearance in Crookston.

There are on exhibition, in the show-window of the Berthiume Jewelry Co., two curios in shape of watches over 100 years old. One is a tiny bit of mechanism said to be 151 years old, and the other a huge turnip 115 years old. Both are said to keep excellent time.

FIGURES ON BARBED WIRE.

The barbs of the Baker wire are thickly set with seventy-eight barbs to the rod, and weigh from two to four ounces less than the same number of barbs of any other kind of wire, which makes from seventy-five cents to one dollar and a half per one hundred rods in favor of the Baker wire. We guarantee that the main stran is of equal weight and strength, and quality of any of the best makes of wire. Where we save you money is in the barb, using less material yet giving you a barb of equal strength and more serviceable than any other make of wire. Please examine and satisfy yourself of the correctness of the statement before you buy. To test the truthfulness of our saying, we ask that you take an even number of pounds of our wire and any other wire with main stran of No. 12, and stretch them up, and then make your calculation as to who is furnishing you the most rods of fence for the same money. Salmagundi Club Picnic.

(Communicated.)

Last Friday evening, the Salmagundi Club left for Maple Lake, for a picnic on Saturday, which had been for some time contemplated. The circumstances conspired to make this an exceptionally gay one, and the beautiful freshness of the scene, and the charming day produced a profound hilarity. It proved a fortunate combination when the very elements favored the general disposition for merriment. Arriving at the destination just after the sun had set, all were directly busied with the various camp duties, and soon a tent was built and a roaring camp fire in front of it. The hooting of the owl added a strange wierdness not soon forgotten by the average town lad. After being regaled by a substantial repast, and then a contest as to who could tell the most improbable story, all seek, by mutual consent, an early retirement; not to omit a serenade to the ladies (undertaken at a short distance from the window) but the fear of a sudden shower rendered the strains discordant, yet the inharmonious ripples went on without ceasing as long as the crowd remained until it produced a jargon of merry music and laughter. On the approach of the expected day, all arose with freshness and serenity that soon set the round of fun once more rolling—with the possible exception of the writer who had been unceremoniously thrust from his slumber by the villain of the party. The various sports seemed more attractive than usual and were undoubtedly made full use of, making the shortness of the stay painfully conspicuous. An elaborate dinner had been prepared by the ladies, but no more so than was the appetite eager to receive it and do full justice. The following toasts were then responded to: "The Salmagundi," "The Ladies," "Our Escorts," by one of the escortees, "The Dinner." Though extemporaneous, the idea prevailed that the subjects had been well browned.

Reluctance was the pass-word when shortly afterward all found themselves homeward bound, but the return proved a delightful portion of the excursion. This incident is told: On the way was passed a band of emigrants encamped by the roadside for the night, the tired oxen leisurely pasturing near at hand. A young lady from the city seemed surprised when informed that they were not the exact animals that filled the milkmaid's brimming pail.

Thanks are voted Mr. Wheeler, who during the darkness of the first evening so efficiently and kindly held the lantern while the camp progressed. We dare say if any one desires further light on the subject of the excursion it be had from the same source. Those present were: Mrs. Wheeler, Mrs. McKee, Misses Aaker, Ayers, M. L. Brown, Lauman, Jayne and Race; Messrs. Wheeler, McKee, C. O. Christianson, Crawford, Mix and Kelso.

Half Fare Excursion.

We take special pleasure in calling attention to the excursions to points in Minnesota & Dakota via the St. Paul Minneapolis and Manitoba R'y, from St. Paul or Minneapolis and points South and East which have been announced, leaving St. Paul May 9 and 23 and June 6 and 20, and points South one day earlier, when tickets are to be sold at the low rate of one fare for the round trip. These tickets will be limited to thirty days from date of issue, good ten days going and five for return with stop over within limits. This will enable friends or intending settlers to visit this country during the early spring and summer, at a very small cost. Further particulars can be obtained by addressing Euclidites.

Wheat No. 1 Hard 68 cents.

Oats 25 cents.

Crops have improved wonderfully within the last week.

Mrs. M. P. Losey is on the gain.

Dr. Chapin struck water with his drive well.

F. Tiedt is building a large cistern or tank, he says he wants pure water.

Mrs. Parker Shults has been quite sick but is now on the improve.

Mr. Currie has a few more of those oak posts for sale.

Messrs. Kramer and Wikinson, agent and general agent for the Minnesota Chief were in the city last week.

Frank Platte starts for his home in Nebraska this week.

Miss Dahl of Chicago, arrived last week on a visit to her parents.

Cast iron seems to be in demand at 20 cents per hundred.

Robert Teal has been appointed constable.

Wm. Shults and Mrs. Douglass, brother and sister, of Brainard are visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shults.

Capt. L. L. C. Brooks, of St. Paul, was in town Monday on one of his regular monthly trips to the Keystone farm.

E. Taylor & Co., are still in the market for oats in lots. If you have any for sale go and see them.

E. B. Ballou of Tabor a '79 er was calling on friends here Tuesday last. E. B. is one of the "boys" he only grows old in years.

Wm. Davidson so thoroughly enjoyed his trip to the National Park last week that he was not ready to take the return train and got left in Crookston.

Lewis Cottet has three stray head of stock in his herd, owners will please call and get them.

Judge C. E. Harrington is the proper way to address Charlie hereafter, he is Euclid's Justice of the Peace.

Robert Casmey and M. P. Losey are courting in Crookston now days.

Euclid has material for a base ball nine, boys why not organize and join the N. W. L.

George Rose is happy now days, he is through seeding and there is plenty of grass for stock.

One day last week a goodly number of farmers turned out with teams and merchants with supplies and gave Mr. Joseph Allen a lift. They plowed up about 40 acres for him which was a good turn that was fully appreciated by the old gentleman. The more of that kind of spirit in a community the better.

Farmers if you are looking for pointers, take THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and you will get them.

Charlie White and Vic Tiedt have gone into the fish business, anyone in need of fish will do well to call on them—before going elsewhere.

Wells Misner says he is going to keep his storm windows on until summer comes if it takes all summer for it to get here.

Euclid was written up in fine shape by the Fisher Bulletin last week.

Lewis Giese is putting up a large barn on his farm.

Quite a large number of our young folks met last evening at H. C. Misner's and gave Frank Platte a regular surprise, we wish that we could keep Frank in Euclid. Ice cream and cake was served and all seemed to have a good time.

Beltrami Telautographs.

BELTRAMI, June 4, 1888.

Assistant Supt. of Schools, W. F. Hitchcock, was in this vicinity the latter part of last week visiting the schools. All of the teachers speak very highly of him.

The next meeting of the Young Republican Club will be held at the school house, Saturday June 9th, at 8:30 p. m.

Rev. Warren, of Fertile, will preach here every Sunday evening during the summer.

During the absence of Mr. Ohl the post office will be in charge of Sam Kimberly.

Bill Day, who has a record in the police court of Minneapolis, has been in this town for about two weeks working on the Reis farm. Sunday evening, May 27th, he stole about $15 from some of the boys on the farm and Monday morning he skipped for parts unknown.

More wheat has been marketed here the past week than has been in any one week since last fall.

If any more young poplar trees are cut on Sec. 8, town of Reis, the parties who cut them will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Some of the farmer's boys around here talk of starting a menagerie. They have on hand already four young foxes and one badger.

K. O. Flakue was visiting friends in Crookston yesterday. EDNA.

Angus Items.

ANGUS, June 4, 1888.

Our cold weather has left us, we hope, for good, and all we want to make the crops boom, is rain.

Miss Helen Davis, who has been attending the Normal school at St. Cloud the past winter, returned home on Thursday last. Says she spent a very pleasant winter.

The young people of the Presbyterian Sunday school gave a strawberry festival last Friday evening, the proceeds going to help furnish the new church. Every one was invited and it looked as though they all came; at any rate, if there had been many more a "special" would have had to have been dispatched for more strawberries. Altogether, it was a very pleasant as well as profitable evening.

Peter Keely, of Euclid, has the position of telegraph operator and depot agent at this place at present.

Mr. Gomer Evans has begun work on his new barn.

W. T. Lemen has received a stock of Osborne binders and mowers. Call and took them over.

They say there was a buggy cyclone at Warren on the day of the Farmers' Institute at that place; at any rate Mr. Ballou, Mr. Crocker and Mr. Melloh, who went from Angus, all brought back new buggies. ANGUS.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS.

A Ticket Nominated, and a Platform Built, Including a Woman Suffrage Plank.

The prohibitionist countries at Indianapolis, after much wrangling, got through with its business by the nomination of Clinton B. Frisk of New Jersey, for president and John A. Brush, of Wisconsin for vice president. The following is the platform adopted, though a vigorous battle was fought before it was adopted.

The Prohibition party, in national convention assembled, acknowledging Almighty God as the source of all power in government, do hereby declare:

That the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation and sale of alcoholic beverages shall be made public crimes, and punished as such.

That such prohibition must be secured through amendments of national and state constitutions, enforced by adequate laws adequately supported by administrative authority; and to this end the organization of the Prohibition party is imperatively demanded in state and nation.

That any form of license taxation or regulation of the liquor traffic is contrary to good government; that any party which supports regulation license or tax enters into alliance with such traffic, and becomes the actual foe of the state's welfare, and that we arraign the Republican and Democratic parties for their persistent attitude in favor of the licensed iniquity, whereby they oppose the demand of the people for prohibition, and through open complicity with the liquor cause defeat the enforcement of law.

For the immediate abolition of the internal revenue system, whereby our national government is deriving support from our greatest national vice.

That an adequate public revenue being necessary, it may properly be raised by impost duties and by an equitable assessment upon the property and legitimate business of the country, but import duties should be so reduced that no surplus shall be accumulated in the treasury, that the burdens of taxation shall be removed from food, clothing and other comforts and necessaries of life.

That civil service appointments for all civil offices, chiefly clerical in their duties, should be based upon moral, intellectual and physical qualities, and not upon party service or party necessity.

That the right of suffrage rests on no mere circumstance of race, color, sex or nationality, and that where, from any cause, it has been held from citizens who are of suitable age and mentally and morally qualified for the exercise of an intelligent ballot it should be restored by the people, through the legislatures of the several states, on such educational basis as they may deem wise.

For the abolition of polygamy and the establishment of uniform laws governing marriage and divorce.

For prohibiting all combinations of capital to control and to increase the cost of products for popular consumption.

For the preservation and defense of the Sabbath as a civil institution without oppressing any who religiously observe the same or any other day than the first day of the week. That arbitration is the Christian, wise and economic method of settling national differences, and the same should, by judicious legislation be applied to the settlement of disputes between large bodies of employes and employers; that the abolition of the saloon would remove the burdens, moral, physical, pecuniary and social, which now oppress labor and rob it of its earnings, and would prove to be the wise and successful way of promoting labor reform, and we invite labor and capital to unite with us for the accomplishment thereof; that monopoly in land is a wrong to the people, and the public land should be reserved to actual settlers, and that men and women should receive equal wages for equal work.

That our immigration laws should be so enforced as to prevent the introduction into our country of all convicts, inmates of dependent institutions, and of others physically incapacitated for self-support, and that no person should have the ballot in any state who is not a citizen of the United States. Recognizing and declaring that prohibition of the liquor traffic has become the dominant issue in national politics, we invite to full party fellowship all those who, on this one dominant issue are with us agreed in the full belief that this party can and will remove sectional differences, promote national unity and insure the best welfare of our native land.

SLEPT WITH A CORPSE.

Murderer Kennett Tells How He Took Annie Daniels' Life.

Those in attendance at the Kennett murder trial at La Crosse were rewarded by hearing what purported to be Kennett's full confession to a fellow prisoner. The name of the party to whom the confession is said to have been made is George Daniels, and if he does not tell the truth he is the most inventive romancer people here ever heard of. His story is that Kennett sought him out and told how he had not only killed Annie Daniel with morphine and ether, but tried once before to do it with laudanum in coffee, resulting in making her very sick. It was first proven that Kennett bought eight ounces of ether and morphine in equal parts. This, as the alleged confession goes, he had concealed in the house, and on Sunday night, after a gentleman visitor had departed, she called Kennett into her room, saying she was nervous and could not sleep. He produced the bottle of ether and morphine and poured some on her handkerchief. She inhaled it and became sleepy. Then he gave her a fresh dose, which made her wild. He held her down in bed till she became composed, and threw the whole of the mixture on her handkerchief and held it to her nostrils. Soon she began to strangle. He tried her pulse and noted when it stopped beating, but her heart throbbed violently for a minute or two longer. When she was dead he got into the bed with his clothes on and slept until morning. That day he searched for money, but found none. At night he again slept with the corpse, keeping the handkerchief saturated with the anæsthetics near her nose, so that if suddenly surprised by such visitors as frequent sporting fancy houses it might appear that she had died of an overdose administered by herself. Tuesday he again searched for money and again that night slept in the house. Wednesday he found the money, and at once got candles fixed into torches for burning the house and left by the midnight train. At Petersburg, Ill., he told the story to Dr. Shipp, a woman physician. She helped him to hide part of the money in his shoe, and the next day after his arrest she called on him in the jail, when he gave her $55. This story has created a great stir in town. Some believe it and some think it a monstrous lie. But there are so many known facts interwoven therewith that it is unlikely, if not impossible, that Daniels should have known them in any way except by Kennett's confession. It is a consistent story from first to last and would explain some things so far not understood.

UNPROVOKED MURDER.

A Fort Benton Man Killed by a Cranky Pole Without Provocation.

One of the most cold-blooded and unprovoked murders ever known was perpetrated near Fort Conrad, Montana. The particulars were delayed by the murdered man's friends trying to sustain his life by slow moves until they could reach medical aid. About a week ago Augustus Brede and Johnny Adams started from Fort Benton to Fort McLeod, N. W. T., and were requested by an impecunious stranger to take him along. He claimed to have friends living in the vicinity of Fort McLeod. Mr. Brede, owner of the team an wagon, consented, and the three started north. Upon reaching Nine-mile coulee, nine miles north of Fort Conrad, they camped for the night. The next morning Brede started after the horses that had gone away during the night, leaving the other two at the wagon. Upon returning three hours later he found Adams under the wagon bleeding freely from the effects of several pistol shots, and the other man gone. Adams said the missing man did the shooting without any cause whatever. He said he was lying under the wagon when the murderer approached and said, "Throw up your hands. I am the father of toughs." Adams thinking it a joke, did as he was told, when the murderer commenced firing. Brede attempted to reach Fort Benton with Adams, but the latter died on the way. It is learned that the murderer's name was Max Hoppa, a Pole, about twenty-seven years of age, well known at McLeod and along the Canadian Pacific. He is a jeweler, has worked at Helena and Butte during the past year, and is evidently a crank, as he has several times said he had lost papers that would some day make him king of Poland. The murdered man's brother at Fort Benton and father at Painted Wood, Dak, have been telegraphed for. A party is in hot pursuit, and if Hoppa is caught it is not improbable that justice will be delayed by the legal course.

An accident occurred near Bordeaux, 84 miles from Cheyenne, Wyoming. A washout on the road six miles north of Bordeaux was being repaired by a work train when the north-bound passenger arrived at Bordeaux. Its crew received orders to rush to the scene of the wash out with an empty engine to learn whether the road could be used by the passenger train. While making this run the engine collided with the work train which had finished repairs sooner than was expected, and was returning to Bordeaux at full speed. Both engines were completely wrecked. The bodies of the three killed were brought to Cheyenne, and four of the injured were sent to the Union Pacific hospital at Denver.

The secretary of the interior holds that the first section of the act of June 15, 1880, does not authorize the purchase and entry of unoffered public lands by trespassers, and that the purchase of such lands does not condone trespass committed upon them. The secretary has requested the attorney general to begin suit for trespass, and to cancel patents for lands which Coe & Carter were wrongfully allowed to purchase and enter along the line of the Union Pacific railroad in Utah, Wyoming and Nebraska.

Advices from Shanghai state that Russian intrigue has been renewed in Corea to induce the king to sever his connection with China. The king resents the retention of the Chinese resident minister at Seoul as interfering with his administration.

Jay Gould, General Manager Clark and other officials of the Missouri Pacific arrived at Omaha on a special train, which was halted at a suburban station. After remaining a few hours they departed for the south. They are making a complete tour of the Missouri Pacific system.

The reduction of the public debt during the month of May amounts to $4,000,000. Twelve million dollars were paid for pensions.

An inquest on the body of William Thompson, woodsman, who died suddenly, was held at Chippewa Falls, Wis. The jury brought in the following verdict: "From testimony given we are unable to determine the cause of death." Considerable comment is made on account of the burial taking place without a post mortem examination.

Commissioner Black has been advised of the arrest of Alice Johnson, of Maine, Otter Tail county, Minnesota, on the charge of perjury committed in her claim for pension as the widow of Nels B. Johnson. It is understood at the pension office that this case excited suspicion more than a year ago, and the secret service officers have been trailing it at intervals ever since. Commissioner Black thinks no arrest would have been made without strong grounds for so doing, and sufficient evidence to insure an indictment.

An interesting transaction is announced in Chicago as completed. The parties are the American Cattle trust on one side and Nelson Morris, the Chicago live stock magnate, on the other. Instead of a gobbling-up process by the trust, the exact opposite is the case. Mr. Morris has bought back from the cattle trust the Fairbanks Canning company, and has satisfactorily dissolved all relations with the trust. The consideration paid in the purchase was $2,000,000.

The St. Paul Knitting Works, including buildings and machinery were burned. The loss was $100,000, but insurance will enable the company to rebuild at once.

About one quarter of the rank and file of the United States army will be on the move. April 13 the adjutant general issued orders for ten regiments to exchange stations, the movements to commence not later than June 1. Nearly all the regiments affected are in the departments of Dakota, Platte, Arizona, Missouri, California and Texas. The expenses of the migration will be about $200,000.

The anarchists at Chicago went through the farce of decorating the graves of their dead. The slab at the head of their graves which the little group surrounded bore the names of Spies, Parsons, Engle, Fischer, Lingg. Underneath these names was the line uttered by Spies just before his execution: "Our silence will yet be more powerful than our words." A photograph of Spies rested upon a basket of flowers, upon his grave, and his Sister Gretchen wept silently over the sod. Mrs. Fischer placed flowers upon the grave of her late husband, and each in turn deposited wreaths, of flowers wrought in other forms, upon the five graves.

The senate committee on the judiciary held two meetings and further considered the nomination of M. W. Fuller to be chief justice, but did not reach a conclusion. There seems to be no doubt that the committee will report favorable on the nomination. A Chicago man has been writing persistently, asking for delay to give him time to put certain things in shape for the presentation to the committee, and he has been accorded the time.

James Sheets, a well-known young farmer, living near Muncil, Ind., while looking through a cupboard drawer for some copper rivets to do some mending with, found a package of dynamite cartridges. Sheets, not knowing what they were, handed them to his hired man, James Adams, who was standing near by. Adams began picking them with a pin, when suddenly one exploded, shattering his hand. His index finger and thumb were completely torn off. His face was also badly burned and bruised. Mr. Sheets's five-year-old daughter was standing near by with a cartridge in her hand, but received no injury.

A young actress at Milwaukee, Wis., complained to Inspector Reimer that she was afraid of Frank Dewey, who had come from Minneapolis and threatened to kill her if she did not marry him, and said that she was afraid he would attempt to carry out his threat. Dewey was arrested and taken to the station, where a loaded revolver, a wicked dagger and a bottle of poison were found on his person. He is a good-looking man about thirty-five years old and claims to have been in business at Minneapolis with a man named Tuffs. He refuses to talk about the lady or say why he was equipped with so many instruments of death, and he will probably be prosecuted for carrying concealed weapons.

Edward Hussoney, one of the proprietors of the Nelsonian Nebraska Weekly newspaper, was fatally shot in the thigh by an unknown person while returnig from the G. A. R. camp fire. The motive is supposed to have been robbery.

The general synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church adopted a resolution, reaffirming the conviction that the constitution of the United States is a virtual agreement or compact to administer the government without reference to Christ or the Christian religion, and that incorporation with the government on the basis of this constitution is therefore an act of disloyalty to Christ.

The engineers, firemen and switchmen of the Union Pacific road held another meeting at Omaha in regard to the running of Burlington trains manned by non-brotherhood, over the Union Pacific bridge, and appointed a committee which waited upon General Superintendent Dickinson. The superintendent said that while the Union Pacific would adhere to its agreement allowing the Burlington to bring its trains over the bridge solid, they would be hauled by Union Pacific engineers. The men accepted this as satisfactory, and no further trouble is anticipated.

Frank Pierce, the noted constable who has brought so many liquor dealers to groan in Des Moines, Iowa, was sentenced to five months in the penetentiary on conviction of attempting to extort money from druggists by threats of prosecution. An appeal has been taken to the supreme court, and he is out on $1,500 bail.

REPUBLICAN COMMENT.

His Red Nose Passed Him In.

A temperance man with a native-born red nose is an object of widespread sympathy and charity, for he is always under the haunting suspicion that he is an old toper from 'way back.

A newspaper man with such a nose, whose carmine hue was a base libel on his temperate character, recently presented himself at a secret democratic meeting in a Connecticut town. He wanted to go in.

"Are you a delegate?" asked the Sergeant-at-Arms.

"No," was the reply.

"Have you any credentials?"

The reporter mutely and significantly tapped his red, red nose.

"All right," responded the doorkeeper, "that will pass you. Come in."—Judge.

Blaine's Letter.

Whitelaw Reid, to whom Mr. Blaine sent his final letter of declination says:

The keen disappointment of Republicans at the declination of Mr. Blaine is natural. So strong had been the desire that his nomination should give the nation opportunity to reverse the decision of 1884, that in spite of his declared wishes, at least half the delegates chosen to the national convention were inclined to vote for him at the outset and many more after a single ballot. But this natural disappointment must not, and will not, blind Republicans to the truth which his two letters so strongly enforced that the Republican party is greater than any man in its cause more potent than the personal popularity of any leader. The Tribune believes that Mr. Blaine is right—that the issue of protection and the Republican party is stronger than any man, however popular. Any candidate whose position is such that he can draw to himself the votes of those who agree on that broad and vital issue will be elected by a vote so decisive that its meaning will never be questioned.

George William Curtis said he had already declared that the two opposing elements in the Chicago convention were represented by Blaine and Gresham, but he was not prepared to say that the withdrawal of Blaine meant the nomination of Gresham. E. P. Wheeler admitted that if Gresham was nominated Mr. Cleveland, in case he became the Democratic nominee, would not get the mugwump support in its entirety.

"There will be a split in our ranks on this matter," he added, "as was plainly indicated at our meeting where a strong feeling against Mr. Cleveland was noticeable. Mr. Gresham will get a large independent vote. Of that I feel certain."

FROM NUMEROUS CITIES.

A Portland (Or.) dispatch says that with Blaine out of the way Gresham will likely get four out Oregon's six votes in the Chicago convention. A St. Louis letter created consternation in the ranks of the plumed knights followers. More than half the Missouri delegation who are for Blaine had given out that Gresham was their second choice. Therefore it can be safely said now that Missouri is for Gresham. He will have over twenty votes, and the delegation may possibly vote as a unit for him. A San Francisco special states that the letter was received with expressions of disappointment. With Mr. Blaine out of the way, if the California delegation votes as a unit, it will cast the vote of the state for Judge Gresham. With Blaine out of the way, says a New Orleans special, the sixteen votes of Louisiana may thus be placed: Morgan, 2; Gresham, 4; Sherman, 10. From Harrisburg, Pa., word comes that with Blaine out of the field, Senator Sherman is the first choice of a number of Pennsylvania Republicans and will get a good vote. Judge Gresham has also many friends. The anti-Gresham men have been claiming that he is not sound on the tariff. At Louisville Ky., they say Blaine's letter has somewhat changed the aspect of affairs there. Sherman now has the first call, but Gresham has gained more by Blaine's retirement than Sherman. Gresham has a large following in Louisville, but Sherman will probably have a majority. of the delegates.

A Scathing Indictment.

From the New York Independent (Ind).

It is now quite evident that the candidate of the Democratic party in the coming campaign is to be Grover Cleveland. We do not say that it is not a fit nomination to be made by that party. We are inclined to think that the man and the party are exactly suited to each other.

As to the man, he stands at present on a level with his party. When he was nominated and elected he was hailed as a great political reformer, who would lift his party to a high position and give the country an improved system of public service. What has he done to fulfill his own pledges and the expectations of his original Mugwump sponsors?

He gave a solemn pledge that the government should be conducted on sound business principles. Men were to be retained in office for competency, experience and faithfulness, regardless of partisan efficiency. This pledge has been constantly, conspicuously and recklessly violated.

He gave his solemn pledge that fitness and not partisan efficiency would be the condition of appointments to office. This pledge has been trampled upon in a countless number of cases.

He declared that "public office is a public trust." What meaning has this declaration in the light of his administration?

He laid down the rule that office-holders must not become perniciously active in politics. Within a few months thereafter he suspended and restored District Attorney Benton, of Missouri, for taking the stump, while District Attorney Stone, of Pennsylvania, was suspended and removed for doing precisely the same thing in a far less pronounced way. Benton was a Democrat, Stone a Republican. The rule as thus modified would seem to apply to Republicans only.

He said public employes have the right to insist that "merit and competency shall be recognized instead of party subserviency, or the surrender of honest political belief." Out of over 56,000 offices about 43,000 were filled with Democrats in the first two years of the Administration. Thousands of competent and faithful employees now know, to their sorrow, that "merit and competency are seldom, if ever, found outside the Democratic party. He has simply fallen back into the arms of his party, than which, before his election, he was said to be so much better.

His pledges were magnificent; his performances disgraceful.

His scheme of service was fine; its fulfillment a farce.

He sets out to lift the Democratic party; he ends by letting down the Government.

He began as a conspicuous reformer; he is ending as a conspicuous failure.

What are his claims on the suffrage of the country? Not reform, not good appointments, not patriotic unpartisanship. He has treated the country to a free trade message practically advocating a tariff "for revenue only" without proper regard to the principle of protection; he has made glad all England by giving the laurels to Canada on the fisheries treaty; he has lowered the tone of the Indian service and interfered unwarrantably with religious matters in the mission schools among the Indians—with which matters it is simply impertinent for him to meddle; he has allowed, and we believe now allows and firmly intends to allow, political circulars to issue from the government departments in Washington. Such are his passports to the confidence of the people. We do not believe the people now want a man for president who is not a great deal better than Grover Cleveland.

Still another thing, President Cleveland has practically and dishonorably eaten his own utterances given at his inauguration. What did he mean by these words? Did he really and honestly mean what he said? What Democrat can read his declaration and condemn James G. Blaine if he should finally allow his name—after twice or thrice declining—to be presented to the National Republican Convention? What could he say about these words in a second letter, if nominated? What will the country say about the sincerity of this utterance: if his name appears in another campaign? It will say: WE DO NOT WANT A SECOND TERM OF SUCH A MAN AS GROVER CLEVELAND.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Extensive preparations are already in progress for the assembly, which will be held in Maplewood park, on the banks of Clear Lake, near Waseca, in July. Eminent speakers, professors and clergymen have been secured and no expense has been spared by the Maplewood Park association to make this assembly the most interesting, instructive and successful yet held. It is understood that the eminent divine, Dr. Talmage, will be in attendance and speak several times during the assembly; also the great revivalist, Sam Jones.

The jury in the case of Frank Campbell, on trial at Mankato for horse theft, returned a verdict of not guilty.

Suit has been begun at Farmington by C. P. Carpenter against the Western Union Telegraph company for damages caused by failure to properly transmit and deliver a message while plaintiff was at Brown's Valley in June, 1887.

The annex of the St. Anthony & Dakota Elevator company at Alexandria, collapsed letting about 30,000 or 35,000 bushels of wheat on to the elevator track. The grain was shoveled into cars as rapidly as possible. The building is a total wreck. If rain holds off the loss on grain will not be so heavy.

The first accident that has occurred with electric lights took place at Sauk Center. As Eddie Simonton, a clerk in Wood's & Son's dry goods store, was handling a shutter which had some iron trimmings, he accidentally touched the electric wire with it. The current of electricty immediately followed the iron down the shutter and gave Simonton a severe shock, stunning him and knocked him nearly senseless. Several lights in the vicinity of the accident were extinguished, and a number of people were quite badly frightened. No damage was done, and no one was injured except Simonton.

The annual report of the Farmers' warehouse at Winnebago City shows a total of 515,014 bushels of grain bought of the crop of 1887. The cost of handling all expenses was 7.4 mills per bushels. A small profit was disclosed of about one-half cent a bushel. The farmers in this market have realized an average of two cents a bushel more for their grain by reason of this warehouse.

Charles Mattson, a farmer, died very suddenly in Richardson & Co.'s store at Rice Lake. He was on his way to Mora, and, in ascending a steep hill, his horses were stuck in the mud. In jumping off to extricate his horses he ruptured a blood vessel and was carried into the store, where he expired in a few minutes. Mattson was a well-to-do farmer in the town of Stanchfield, Isanti county, and was a commissioner of his county.

Frank Kininger, charged with forging Wendell Hodapp's name to a note as endorser, was tried at Mankato The jury found him guilty, but recommended him to the mercy of the court. The lighest sentence that can be imposed upon him is five years in the penitentiary.

Peter Schenck of Wendall, Stearns county, a seventeen-year-old boy, went out hunting. He dragged his gun after him in crawling through a fence. The weapon was discharged, and the charge lodged in his abdomen with fatal effect.

Bill Boyd, who has served a term in the penitentiary for being implicated in a shooting in a house of ill fame, was arrested at St. Cloud and bound over to await the February term of the Sherburne county court for keeping a house of ill fame.

An interesting suit has been going on in justice court at Austin, the amount involved being 75 cents. A lady is in dispute with her dressmaker in regard to the amount due for work and the latter has retained the dress until the amount charged is paid.

In the case of the shooting of W. Martinka the grand jury at New Ulm brought in a verdict of man-slaughter in the first degree against Marshal Wihkleman and Patrolman Leech. Bail was fixed at $2,500 in each case by Judge Webber, and they will have their trial at the fall term of court.

Frank Taylor fell into the Des Moines river from the bridge at Jackson. The water at this point is very deep, and the current is extremely swift. Cries for help attracted the attention of Messrs. Owens and Vandeworker, who immediately went to the rescue. Taylor was found at the edge of the stream fully an eighth of a mile below his place of immersion, and within a few rods of the mill dam over which the water was pouring in volumes. He was dragged out more dead than alive.

People living in the neighborhood of Lake Winona are a good deal exercised over the appearance of an enormous fish which spouts water fifteen or twenty feet in the air, and is declared by many to be a species of whale. The fish is said to be four or five feet long, very large and heavy, with smooth skin and without scales. His movements in the water were slow and sluggish and he seemed to be frequently burrowing with his head into the highway as if seeking an outlet from the lake. One man emptied a repeating rifle at the uncouth visitor, but the bullets seemed to glance from the fish's skin and to make no impression whatever.

Large numbers of cattle in Rice county are reported to be dying, the cause of death being unknown. One man has lost 30, another 19 head.

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held at Tracy for the purpose of discussing the question relative to voting bonds for a north and south railroad to run through Worthington, Fulda, Avoca and Currie, the county seat of Murray county, through Tracy. Much interest was manifested and a vote for bonds of $7,500 from Currie and $10,000 from Tracy was the issue of the meeting. Currie and other towns interested were well represented and a large number of Murray and Lyon county farmers were in attendance. The question is being agitated in an enthusiastic manner and the present outlook is good for a road.

JOE'S STORY.

I was enjoying a canoe trip down the Allegheny in the summer of 188—, and was paddling into the suburbs of Pittsburg, one evening, after several weeks spent upon the water, when a rough voice hailed me from the river bank, requesting that I should paddle over on that side of the river in order that the owner of the voice might examine my little craft. I found the man upon the bank to be the foreman in one of the immense founderies near by. He became so interested in the subject of my trip and craft that he insisted upon my spending the night at his house. It was a neat little white-painted cottage, cosy and comfortable. That evening while sitting before the blazing wood fire in the grate, which was rendered necessary on account of a slight chilliness in the out-door atmoshere, he related to me the following story, which I have transcribed from memory for the readers of the Telegraph:

We were boys together, Jim and I, and many a time we tried each other's strength in a friendly bout at wrestling. So evenly were we matched that it never was really settled as to which of us was champion of the school we attended. Jim's folks and mine were next door neighbors in the manufacturing town of S——, in England, and we two boys were always together, hunting birds' nests, going swimming or skating, and sometimes, I am sorry to say, committing depredations on the neighboring orchards. When Jim and I quit work we were both sent to the same iron mill. We were each given the task of tending a big trip hammer, our work bringing us side by side all day. Jim sprung up into manhood a little heavier and stronger than I, for I had a hard spell of the fever just after setting to work in the mill. He grew into a manly man whom it did a person good to see, and his heart was as big as his body. But he was that bashful and awkward when women folks were about, that he would often leave the house when a girl would happen to visit their home, and would hide away until she was gone.

And yet he was as tender-hearted as a baby, and big, hard-fisted strong-minded man that he was, I have seen him brush the tears from his eyes when some barefooted brat would come begging through the mill with a pitiful story of hunger and want upon his lips. And then he would reach into his pockets and give the little waif every cent he had kept over from his week's wages. And we would all give something to the little beggar, although we needed the money at home; for you may imagine that with our small pay none of us were any too forehanded in money matters.

If rich people only knew how much the poor help the poor out of their little earnings I think they would treat them differently and respect them a little more than they do. I shall never forget how faithfully Jim helped my folks nurse me through my fever, setting up with me of nights and caring for me as tenderly as a woman could have done. And after I had got well enough to work again he would always help me with my task, sometimes working after hours so that I might catch up what I lost by being weak-like from my sickness. We never had a secret from each other. Jim told me of all his longings and hopes of success in life, and I was always as open-minded with him.

The mill, with its dirt and noise and heavy work, always seemed kind of gloomy to both of us, and we had talked of going out to America and settling on government land and farming together, and becoming independent, and perhaps winning a home of our own sometime—for the mill didn't pay any too good wages then. We had a hard time to get along, for Jim's father and mine both died near the same time, about a year after we went into the mill, leaving us each a large family to support. Perhaps it was our hard struggle with poverty that made us dislike the old mill somewhat, but there were other things too. Jim always had a wish to make something out of himself and to become independent of bosses and the like; and the work we did, forever the same, and among such rough hands as were employed in the mill, made it worse. Our men generally hadn't any higher aim than to get money enough ahead to get drunk on Saturday night of each week. Jim's nature was finer than theirs, and he felt his superiority, modest as he was. The more we talked of going to America the more we wished to go; and as I thought of getting away from the terrible grind of the mill work and the grimy manufacturing town where we lived, out into the clear, bright atmosphere of the country, where we could work for ourselves, the old mill grew more and more hateful to me every day. The noise of its hammers and rolling wheels seemed ever to be grinding into my soul, and at night when I went to my work across the meadows—for we had to work extra hours in the busy season—the light shining out into the darkness from its great engines and forges and windows made it seem as though it was some horrible demon, such as I had read in goblin tales, until I grew to be well nigh afraid of it sometimes, in my imagination, and to wonder whether it might not come out of its way to swallow me up in one of its angry spells. Somehow Jim dreaded the mill, and had some sort of a superstitious feeling about it, same as I, and we used to wonder together whether we would ever get free from it.

We had managed to save nearly enough money to take us to America, when one day something came into our lives that soon changed our plans. I was walking across the meadows to work one morning, when I found a little glove lying in the path just before me. It was a dainty glove, such as would fit the hand of a fairy or an angel, I thought, as I picked it up and drew its soft slender fingers through mine. I know that it couldn't belong to any of the women folks in the town, for there were none about the neighborhood who could have put it on. I was looking at the delicate little thing, and wondering how it came to be there, when a soft, sweet voice startled me, it was so near by: "If you please, sir, that is my glove." I looked up, and there standing by me, was a beautiful stranger girl, her roguish blue eyes looking through me it seemed, and just such a smile on her rosebud mouth as would show that she was amused at my studying so deeply over her glove. "Mary" was her name, and she was the daughter of our new engineer, who had just moved into the place. In going to the mill with her father she had dropped the glove where I found it, and had returned to look for it. These facts she told me on our way to the mill, as she tripped along by my side, seeming scarcely to bend the blades of grass upon which she stepped.

I had felt a sort of shock when I first saw her standing in the path before me, and by the time we got to the mill I would have died for that girl. I didn't know what it was then, but I knew afterward. Love comes kind of sudden sometimes, and sometimes again it comes slow; but it comes to stay, just the same, if it is true love, which ever way it may come. I saw Mary often in the next few weeks, and I grew deeper in love with her every day. She brought dinner and supper to her father, and every time she passed the great hammer where I worked, her bright smile seemed to light up the grimy mill, just as though it were heaven, while she was there. Every one in the mill grew to like Mary, and even the roughest hand would take off his hat in her presence, as acknowledging that she was a superior being. I often wondered if Jim noticed how kindly she spoke to me, and how friendly the nod and how bright the smile which she gave me in passing the place where we were at work; for we had become quite well acquainted in the few weeks after her arrival, and I had taken her to church a time or two. But Jim scarcely seemed to look at her when she passed and never voluntarily spoke to her. When any one would happen to mention her name while he was about, he would always either change the subject at once or turn and walk away. I supposed that it was on account of his natural bashfulness or the aversion to women which he was said to have. I wondered how any one could help being interested in Mary. Somehow Jim and I got so that we seldom spoke of our plan of going to America, and when we did mention it, it was only half-heartedly. I would not have gone away now and left Mary's presence for a free gift to me of all the world's wealth: and I studied many an hour over the best manner in which to break the matter to Jim that I had given up going. And one day when I had mustered up courage enough to say to him that I thought we could do better in the old mill for a while yet, he quite took my breath away by turning suddenly and grasping my hand in his, while he said it was just his idea also. I was so surprised, for I knew that he had set his heart on going, and I could not fathom the reason for his sudden conversion. But I was to happy in the thought that neither of us were to go to wonder long over his change of mind.

Months rolled on and Mary and I were plighted lovers. I had never said anything to Jim about my great happiness; for the love I had for Mary seemed to sacred a thing to speak of even to Jim. I was in Mary's company nearly every evening. Jim and I had been accustomed to taking long walks together of evenings, but now he strayed off alone, quiet and melancholy it appeared to me. I was sorry for him; and thinking that maybe my neglect of him was the cause of his downheartedness I sometimes tried to rally him and joke with him about his reserved ways, but he seemed rather hurt by my words, and soon began to avoid me as much as possible and to wander away by himself into quiet places where he would be apt to meet with no one. As soon as my wedding day was fixed I determined to tell Jim about our engagement. When I revealed it to him he started back as though surprised, and then recovered himself he slowly reached out his hand and congratulated me in a husky, reserved tone of voice, so different from his usual cheery, good-natured manner of speaking that I noticed it even then. And then his eyes took on a far-away look, and he turned from me in a way I could not understand. It seemed so cold and unnatural, when I had expected such a different reception of the news. I sprang after him with the cry on my lips: "Jim, old boy, you don't bear me any ill will, do you?" He turned, and I saw that his face was as pale as though he were a ghost, but with an effort he laughed the matter off by saying he was taken with a sudden pain in his side. And then he spoke in such a hearty way, like his old self, and talked so rapidly about what a happy man I ought to be, that I soon forgot his strange words and stranger actions. After this he never would remain alone with me for a moment. He began to neglect his duties a great deal, in one instance even having high words with the superintendent of the mill over some work which he had carelessly done. It was so different from his former self that everybody noticed it. I wondered if his change toward me was from the fact that I had neglected his company for that of Mary, but I didn't like to say anything to him about it lest he might misunderstand me and feel hurt.

One night—and I shall never forget that night to my dying day, for I still dream of it, and shudder always at its remembrance. It was a Wednesday night, and Mary and I were to be married the following Monday. I was sitting by the fire at home about ready to retire to sleep, when some one knocked at the door. I was startled on opening it to find Jim there, for it had been a long time since he had been to see me. I invited him to walk in, but he excused himself and said that the Wales had come in and tied up at the dock, and that the superintendent had sent for us to go to the mill for night work. I was not surprised at this, for we were frequently called on to finish some work up at night for shipment by steamer arriving at the wharf earlier than expected, so I told Jim to wait a moment and I would be ready. Throwing on my working blouse and hat I joined him and we started for the mill.

It was a very dark night, for a storm was brewing and the sky was covered with clouds. Jim walked in front of me without uttering a word, and I having become accustomed to his late queerness of manner, followed as silently.

We soon reached the edge of the town, and then struck across the old familiar path through the meadows. In the distance the lights of the great mill shone out from its hundred windows like the eyes of a dragon, and the lower story, with its redly gleaming furnaces, seemed the maw of some great monster prepared to swallow those who came within its reach.

All my old dread of the mill came back to me with tenfold force. You may call it superstition, if you like, but I shuddered, hesitated, and was half inclined to turn back. Shaking off this strange feeling with an effort, I continued on. On entering the building, I noticed that none of the other "hands" were there, and when I spoke to Jim about it, he quietly remarked that the superintendent had sent for them and that they would be there presently. Passing to our usual places, Jim pointed out some bars that were to be hammered into shape, and as the steam was up and everything ready, I slipped the belt upon the pulley and stooped to lift one of the bars into place. Suddenly, and without warning, I received a heavy blow upon the head; I felt myself seized by a powerful grip from behind and was forced to the floor, face downward, my hands bound behind me, and before I could realize what was occurring I found myself lying upon my back, tied securely to the anvil beneath the great steam hammer. Stunned, for the moment, almost to the point of unconsciousness, I yet managed to turn my head sufficiently to see that Jim was standing at my feet. I shall never forget that awful sight. It was Jim, my old friend and schoolmate, but never before had there been such a change in a human being. He was bareheaded and his eyes were bloodshot, the veins in his forehead stood out like dark cords, his face was wildly demoniacal in his expression and his mouth was filled with a white foam, flecked with drops of blood, where he had bitten through and through his lip in his excitement. I pray God I may be spared such a sight again. His close-knit, perfect form was drawn to its full height. He had an arm raised, and the finger of his hand was touching the lever, which, pressed upon, would release the steam hammer for its descent. He leaned over me until I could feel his hot breath on my cheek and hist from between his set teeth:

"You won my Mary from me with your accursed ways but she shall never be your wife. You shall die here the death that you deserve, and I will bring her here to see what a handsome corpse you will make when you have been crushed under your own hammer," and a fiendish laugh rang through the rafters of the old mill. The truth flashed through my mind in an instant. Ah! now I knew why Jim had acted so strangely of late months. He loved Mary with that intense nature of his, and his unrequitted love had unbalanced his mind. His maddened brain had conceived the idea of crushing me with my own hammer, the one at which I had worked so long, and he had come to the mill, fired the engine, started the machinery in motion, and had then called for me with an invented tale of night work. I saw it all now. Fool that I had been not to have realized it before. Yes, I now lay at the mercy of a madman, the slight pressure of whose finger upon the lever would crush me into a jelly. I looked up to the mass of iron and steel suspended above me, awaiting only the maniac's pleasure to descend with dreadful force. I thought of my schoolboy days and the many happy hours Jim and I had spent together; of my first meeting with my loved Mary, and of our following courtship, and of the happy day that would have come so soon when I should have called her "wife."

It seemed hard to die thus without a struggle just when life had begun to open up its brightest prospects for me. Then my thoughts lifted as I lay there, to long since forgotten incidents of my life, occurrences many of which I repented of, and wished that I could enter the other world free from their results, and little sins which I had committed considering them trifling before but which loomed up in these last moments to graver dimensions. A dying man thinks rapidly, and although it seemed an age to me yet all these reflections must have passed through my mind in a few seconds of time. Was there no hope for me? That awful face, lately wreathed in smiles of friendship, now twisted into an expression of the deadliest hatred, answered "no." It seems strange to me now, but I do not think I uttered a word of pleading in those seconds when my life hung by so slender a thread. The utter hopelessness of appeal as shown by the determined face and set teeth of the madman may have deterred me.

Suddenly I remembered having heard that a madman could be appeased, sometimes by falling in with his humor, when he could not be coaxed or driven. It was a last desperate hope that moved me, but still a hope. I mustered all my self-possession for the effort, and speaking to Jim in as steady a voice as I could I acknowledged that I deserved death at his hand, but that before he took my life I should like to have the privilege of writing a line to my mother, telling her where to find the money I had saved up, that she might receive it and be comforted in her old age. I knew that Jim thought the world of my mother, who had always been so kind to him, and I judged that I could best reach his feelings in that way than any other. And I was right about it, for although he hesitated, yet when I had promised him I would not attempt to escape, but that if he would allow me to go over to the desk, which stood in one corner of the room, when I had finished the letter I would return to the hammer and allow him to rebind me as I was, he seemed satisfied. Stooping, he cut the rope which bound me and lifted me to my feet. But he still held me with a strong grip, and, brandishing a short iron bar about my head, threatened to end my life the moment I made an effort to escape. Leading me to the desk he placed pen and paper before me and with the iron bar still held in a threatening attitude commanded me to write quickly. The cords had been bound so tightly about my wrists that they had cut the flesh, and as I grasped the pen the blood from my wounds trickled down and stained the paper with its crimson drops.

I was still dazed from the effects of the blow upon my head and the suddenness of it all, and my brain whirled so that I scarcely knew what I was doing. I could not think of a word to write, but the dreaded voice of the madman at my side telling me, in nervous, impatient tones, to "hurry up," chilled me through with thoughts of my situation and what was to follow the completion of my letter. Weakened as I was, I was no match for the strong man beside me, now doubly strong with a madman's strength. But I had always been more agile than Jim, and I knew that behind me a short distance there was a horizontal fixed bar of wood, just below the ceiling, which had been used as a storage rack, but was now unoccupied. In our noontime athletics I had often sprang and grasped it with my hands, swinging there and "skinning the cat," as we called it, beneath it. But Jim, with his heavier body, never was able to spring high enough to reach it, although he had frequently tried to do so. Just above this bar there was an opening in the floor of the upper story, made years ago for the passage of a large belt, now unused. If I could elude the madman for a moment and reach that bar I might gain a respite, at least, but his grip upon my arm was as tight as ever and his tones were now so fierce that I knew I could keep him from violence but a little while longer.

A thought came to me. I stopped my pen on a downward stroke, and looking up into his face I said as coolly as I thought it was a matter of the least interest in the world to me, "Jim, who is that coming up the stairway?" The ruse succeeded. Thrown off his guard he released his hold on my arm, stepped a few paces toward the stairway and bent his head to listen. Like a flash I made a rush for the bar, dodging the piece of iron which the madman in his fury threw at me and which buried itself in the opposite wall. Quick, now! I just had time to grasp the bar and draw myself above it when Jim sprang at me, narrowly missing my feet with his fingers; then up through the hole, out of breath but at liberty. But it seemed as though my liberty must end in a very short time, for there was no sufficient hiding place in the room, and I could already hear the madman's feet upon the stairway which he was ascending three steps at a time. I must think rapidly. Where was I to look for help? What was I to do? The floor upon which I stood was the uppermost one in the mill. From it a ladder led to the roof by means of a trap-door. But this door was a heavy one, and long before I could lift its ponderous weight sufficiently to get upon the roof I would be overtaken by my pursuer.

Suddenly I remembred that a stout lightning rod ran to the ground, fastened to the wall near a window, opposite where I was standing. The window was open. I darted, rather than ran, to it, and stepping upon the sill I stretched my arm along the outside wall. Yes, thank God! I could reach it. I wrapped my fingers about the rod and swung my body from the window. I was not a moment too soon, however, for I could hear my pursuer spring to the upper floor and begin his search for me. I was swinging high above the ground and if my hold slipped I must be dashed to pieces by the fall. I must be quiet, too, for the rod rattled in its glass insulators at every movement I made. Slowly, and with superhuman efforts, I descended, but just as I reached within ten or twelve feet of the ground the rod broke with my weight, at a defective place, and I fell with a crash upon a pile of boards. The noise brought Jim to the window and at once he realized how I had given him the slip. With dreadful curses on his lips—more dreadful because they were the first I had ever heard him utter—I saw him reach out for the rod, and then I got upon my feet and ran toward the town whose houses looked so dark and dim and far away.

It was a wild race for life across those meadows, either imaginary or real, for I never knew whether he climbed down the rod and followed me or not. It seemed as though I never would get to town, but when my strength was well nigh exhausted I sank down upon the doorstep of the first house I came to and succeeded in arousing the family within. In as few words as possible I told them what had occurred, and in a short while all that portion of the town was notified and a large party formed for the purpose of searching for Jim. Weak as I was, I insisted upon accompanying them. Just as we turned the corner of the village church, which had shut out the view across the meadow, some one exclaimed: "My God! the mill is on fire!" And true enough there was the mill before us with a tall shaft of fire springing from its roof. The madman had fired the mill! Sending one man back to alarm the town, we hurried forward. By the time we reached the mill the whole upper story was on fire, while the flames were breaking out through a dozen places in the roof. Upon the tallest point of the roof, hedged about with fire stood Jim, his form appearing gigantic in size as it was outlined against the dark clouds of the sky. Seeing us he danced demoniacally in his rage uttering curses upon me for having stolen his bride and only pausing in his imprecations to send out the wild, ringing laugh of a maniac upon the night air. We did everything we could to reach and save him, but all in vain.

In a very few minutes after our arrival the flame-wrapped roof fell in, and the mill was a furnace of fire. Poor Jim—a fearful ending to the bright dreams of his life! As the result of that awful night, I was taken down with brain fever and lay for weeks hovering between this world and the next, and was only won back to earth through the tender care of my loving Mary. As soon as I was able to resume work we were quietly married. The mill was rebuilt; but the place was too full of saddening memories to us, and so we came to this country years ago. My wife here is the "Mary" of my story and the occupant of the cr[illegible] over there is our little Joe, 3 years old next week.—Germantown Telegraph.

Senator Hale and the other members of the United States senate committee have begun at New York the investigation of the operation of the civil service law in the custom house. It is probable that Surveyor Beatties department will be taken up first. Beattie glories in his utter disregard of the civil service law. Another official who will receive special attention is Deputy Collector Davis, who has half a dozen relatives in the various departments in violation of the civil service law.

Kansas City is shaken to the core over the question of allowing its children to play marbles "for keeps."

Some of the very poor people in Philadelphia get their small children taken care of in public institutions during the winter and draw them out in the spring.

Miss Nola Twigg, 17 years old, who has been employed as a servant in a private family at Portland, Ore., has fallen heir to $100,000 in England. By means of advertising she was discovered.

The length to which some men will go to avoid labor is almost beyond comprehension. Thomas Cosgrove, a prisoner in Santa Clara, Cal., rather than work, has lived on bread and water and in solitary confinement for two weeks. "No sweat of the brow racket for me," he says.

The Queen of England's grandson, George "Collars and Cuffs," is irreverent. He was dancing at a ball recently with a pretty but plebeian partner, when his sister called him to account. "You can go and hum God save grandmother," was his retort, "I'll dance with whom I please."

One of the most sensational events recently occurring in Washington was the purchase of a new straw hat by Attorney General Garland. The fact Mr. Garland has worn his discarded hat for twelve long years, as he himself testifies, makes his late purchase an event of considerable interest. But men do reckless things in a presidential year.

Angus Keith, a farmer, living eight miles from Louisville, Ga., says we had a fine rain the other night, and when he looked out in the morning he was surprised to see the ground literally covered with tiny frogs. He said they covered several acres, and were in thousands. He believes they came down with the rain.

A justice in Indiana who had endeavored vainly to recover $20 he had loaned an acquaintance had the latter before him as a witness recently, and managed quietly to stir him up to an outburst of ire that just fitted a fine of $20 for contempt of court. The justice, who remained cool and collected (the $20), may be said to have got in his fine work.

A New York Bachelor, over seventy years of age, recently visited Maine, fell in love with a damsel less than half his age, was accepted, and went home to prepare for the coming of his bride. When all things were in order, instead of going after his betrothed himself, he sent his younger brother. The younger man was pleased with his future sister-in-law, so pleased that he persuaded her to marry him before starting for New York.

In 1890 will end the term of 100 years during which the cities of Boston and Philadelphia have each enjoyed the revenue from a bequest of $5,000 made by Benjamin Franklin. The money was to be loaned out to young married artificers, and the trust has been executed, although the lapse of a century requires a new disposition of the funds. It is significant that while in Boston the $5,000 has grown to nearly 328,000; in Philadelphia the $5,000 has become only $70,000.

A company is now being formed in London to bridge the English Channel from Dover to Calais. The bridge is to be 20 miles long, 160 feet above the level of the sea and the span between the piers is to be 1,600 feet. It will carry four lines of railway track and the cost is estimated at £32,000,000. It is to be conctructed entirely of iron in open work, combining lightness and strength and offering the slightest surface to the sea. It will require 2,000,000 tons of iron and can be built in six years.

W. L. Wilder says in Science: "It is a fact not generally known that if one holds his breath, wasps, bees, and hornets can be handled with impunity. The skin becomes sting-proof, and, holding the insect by the feet and giving full liberty of action, you can see her drive her weapon against the impenetrable surface with a force that lifts her body with every stroke, but let the smallest quantity of air escape from the lungs and the sting will penetrate at once. I have never seen an exception to this in twenty-five years observation."

It is quite customary when any one desires to show how little man knows, after all, to ask "who can tell what makes a blade of grass grow, or why it grows?" But there are equally great mysteries closer to man than even of that of the grass. For instance, what man can tell why every man who pays heed to style is now putting his scarf pin in the upper left hand corner of his scarf? Who first wore his pin that way, or what man or body of men ordered the pins worn that way? When last scarf pins were worn they were put in the middle of the scarf. Then, very mysteriously, they were not worn at all. Now they reappear in this peculiar way.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Senate and House.

SENATE.

The senate in executive session adopted the following resolution without a division: That the injunction of secrecy be removed from all proceedings of the senate in reference to the treaty with Great Britain now under consideration.

Motions from the Democratic side to postpone the treaty until December and to lay on the table the motion to sit with open doors were ruled out of order. The motion made last week by Senator Sherman to proceed with the consideration of the treaty was carried by 21 to 19.

HOUSE.

The house considered the legislative bill. Mr. Kerr of Iowa commented on civil service reform as practiced by the Democratic party, and sent to the clerk's desk and had read a circular letter to federal officeholders in Iowa, written by the secretary of the Democratic state committee of Iowa, asking for voluntary contributions. A sharp interchange on the merits of the civil service law and the attitude of the two parties toward it then took place between Messrs. Weaver of Iowa, Steele of Indiana, Cannon of Illinois and others.

The army appropriation bill was reported to the house to-day. It appropriates $24,289,700, which is $564,981 more than the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

Chairman Hatch, of the house committee on agriculture, to-day announced the following subcommittee, which, as provided by a resolution some days ago, will begin the compilation of a general food adulteration act from the various measures on the subject now pending before the committee: Messrs. Burnett, of Massachusetts; Stahlnecker, of New York. Davidson, of Alabama; Conger, of Iowa, and Laird, of Nebraska. Mr. Hatch was added to the subcommittee by the subcommittee itself.

SENATE.

The fisheries treaty was debated in open session, Messrs. Forge and Beck making the principal speeches.

HOUSE.

In consideration of the legislative appropriation bill considerable debate was had over the clauses making an appropriation for the office of surveyors general.

The legislative bill as it stands contains no appropriation for the salary of the governor of Dakota. Unless the bill should be amended in the senate, Gov. Church will have to farm this year for a living, while bearing the honors of the governorship for glory alone.

SENATE.

The executive journal, covering everything connected with the fisheries treaty from the time it reached the senate, is to be printed in the Record. It shows that Senator Hoar made the motion which has been credited to Senator Sherman, and which was adopted, that the consideration of the treaty be with open doors. Mr. Sherman was, however, one of the three (Messrs. Dawes and Teller being the others) who voted in favor of the Riddleberger resolution after it had been adversely reported from the committee on foreign relations. The resolution was lost by a vote of 41 to 3.

The Pacific railroad telegraph bill was favorably reported to the senate. It is the house (Anderson) bill amended by striking out the word "construct." It requires the subsided roads to maintain and operate public telegraph lines, but the effect of the amendment is to permit their acquisition by purchase, or in any other way the companies see fit.

HOUSE.

The conference report on the bill to establish a department of labor was agreed to by the senate. The house also adopted the conference report and the bill passed in substantially the same shape as it came from the senate.

The house committee on the judiciary amended the senate bill relative to dispositions in the United States courts, so as to require the United States law to conform with the state law in taking those dispositions. A favorable report was ordered on the senate bill to make judges of circuit and district courts interchangable.

SENATE.

The senate committee on the judiciary failed again to reach a conclusion in regard to the nomination of Melville W. Fuller to be chief justice. It is understood that further information from Chicago is awaited. The most serious of the charges brought against Mr. Fuller are those from Mr. Dunlevy of Chicago. They allege that the clerk of the court and Mr. Fuller were jury commissioners in 1881, and that Mr. Fuller drew a jury before which a case in which he was himself heavily interested was tried.

HOUSE.

Mr. Mills of Texas moved that the house go into committee of the whole on the tariff bill, debate on the first paragraph to be limited to twenty minutes. Mr. Holman of Indiana spoke in favor of cheap lumber. Mr. McCormick of Pennsylvania maintained that there was no such thing as a lumber trust, and that the existing tariff on lumber was entirely reasonable.

SENATE.

The senate passed, among others, the following bills:

Senate bill to authorize the Paris, Choctaw & Little Rock Railroad company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory.

Senate bill creating an additional retired list of the army for eighty officers now on the active list, but incapacitated for active service.

House bill to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing, with amendments.

The senate bill authorizing the president to place on the retired list, with the grade of major, Maj. Gen. William W. Averill.

HOUSE.

In the house Mr. Mills moved that the rules be suspended and evening sessions ordered for the consideration of certain bills, but, as he would not consent to an amendment setting apart certain sessions for the considerations of pension bills, the Republicans refused to vote. As no quorum could be secured, Mr. Mills withdrew his resolution.

The house committee on public buildings decided unanimously to recommend that the house pass the Allentown (Pa.) public building bill over the president's veto. The committee's report will contain no reflection upon the president's course, but will hold that the committee has better facilities than the executive for ascertaining the needs of the town where it is proposed to erect a building.

Allen Sturgis, who was locked up in jail at Thompson, Ga., for robbery and incendiarism was taken out by a gang of masked men and lynched. Sturgis' body was found at daylight hanging from a tall oak tree. None of his family would touch the remains and they were turned over to a medical college.

Mrs. Willi, aged fifty-two years, committed suicide at Dubuque, Iowa. She left home at 6 o'clock in the morning and wandered about the city until 10 o'clock, when she went out and jumped from a bridge into the river. Assistance came too late to save her. She was addicted to the strong drink habit, and in a fit of delirium sought death. She leaves a husband and two sons.

Earthquake disturbances of a pronounced character have been experienced every night for the last week or two in certain sections of Charleston, S. C. The shocks have been of sufficient energy to awaken the inhabitants and rattle windows, chandeliers, and glassware in a lively manner. In the house of C. C. Habenicht, the wealthiest citizen of Columbia, the shocks have been so continuous that the inmates left their beds and deserted the building. Mr. Habenicht counted seventeen distinct shocks. Slight earthquake tremors have been recently experienced in Suter and Darlington Counties. In Summerville, the centre of the great shake of August, 1886, these disturbances continue to be of such frequent occurrence that no attention is paid to them.

ALL DOUBT DISPELLED.

Mr. Blaine Again Declines a Presidential Nomination in Terms as Plain as the English Language Affords.

The New York Tribune publishes the following letter addressed to its editor, White law Reid, dated Paris, May 17:

"Since my return to Paris from Southern Italy on the 8th inst., I have learned (what I did not before believe) that my name may yet be presented to the national convention as a candidate for the presidential nomination of the Republican party. A single phrase of my letter of Jan. 25 from Florence (which was decisive of everything I had the personal power to decide) has been treated by many of my most valued friends as not absolutely conclusive in ultimate and possible contingencies. On the other hand, friends equally devoted and disinterested have constructed my letter (as it should be constructed) to be an unconditional withholding of my name from the national convention. They have in consequence given their support to eminent gentlemen who are candidates for the Chicago nomination—some of whom would not, I am sure, have consented to assume that position, if I had desired to represent the party in the presidential contest of 1888. If I should now, by speech or by silence, by commission or ommission, permit my name, in any event, to come before the convention, I should incur the reproach of being uncandid with those who have always been candid with me. I speak, therefore, because I am not willing to remain in a doubtful attitude. I am not willing to be the cause of misleading a single man among the millions who have given me their suffrage and their confidence. I am not willing that even one of my faithful supporters in the past should think me capable of

PALTERING IN A DOUBLE SENSE

with my words. Assuming that the presidential nomination could by any possible chance be offered to me, I could not accept it without leaving in the minds of thousands of these men the impression that I had not been free from indirection, and therefore I could not accept it at all. The misrepresentations of malice have no weight, but the just displeasure of friends I could not patiently endure. Republican victory, the prospects of which grow brighter every day, can be imperiled only by lack of unity in council or by acrimonious contest over men. The issue of protection is incalculably stronger and greater than any man, for it concerns the prosperity of the present and of generations yet to come. Were it possible for every voter of the republic to see for himself the condition and recompense of labor in Europe, the party of free trade in the United States would not receive the support of one wage-worker between the two oceans. It may not be directly in our power as philanthropists to elevate the European labor, but it will be a lasting stigma upon our statesmanship if we permit the American laborer to be forced down to the European level, and in the end the rewards of labor everywhere will be advanced if we steadily refuse to allow the standard at home. Yours very sincerely, JAMES G. BLAINE."

PROTECT YOUR HEALTH.

Some Suggestions Put Forth at a Sanitary Conference in Minnesota.

A sanitary conference of Minnesota physicians have been in session at Rochester. Charts were conspicuously displayed behind the chairman's desk. They were the work of Dr. Hewitt, and were the result of long and well directed labor as secretary of the state board of health. The reports from more than 1,600 local health boards have been epitomized in these graphic charts, and the prevalence and fatality of diseases during 1887, the results of race characteristics on disease and numerous other facts are very plainly depicted, so as to be understood at a glance. It is a matter of state pride that these charts are the first that have ever been compelled by any state board of health in the United States, and to Dr. Hewitt belongs the credit of being the first state health officer who has gone through the necessary arduous correspondence. At the microscopical exhibition given to the members of the conference and a few invited guests, the new microscope owned by the state board was shown, together with a few of local ownership. Bacteria of several diseases were shown, the most interesting being the bacilli of leprosy, the specimens being furnished by Dr. G. Armauer Hanson, surgeon of the leper hospital at Bergen, Norway.

Dr. W. A. Hunt of Northfield presented a paper on the means of preventing the spread of infectious diseases. He claimed that three-fourths of all disease was preventable, and that non-prevention was due more to carelessness than anything else. He urged compulsory vaccination of children, and insisted that smallpox could become an unknown malady if the world would combine to prevent its spread.

To-day it is on the increase in the United States, and prompt measures will be needed to check its progress. It is every one's duty to at once report any suspected case, and to cheerfully comply with the directions of the local health authorities. The cause of most of the infectious diseases being germs that find lodgments in filthy surroundings is reason enough for the strict enforcement of sanitary laws. The local health officers are doing a quiet but effective work in bringing about the required state of things throughout Minnesota, and their efficient sanitary service is at the call of any one.

The paper by Dr. Mosse, Rochester's health officer, on "Woman and Hygiene," was a plea for perfect cleanliness in the home, and for woman, as the ruler in the home kingdom, to use all her authority and influence in favor of her surroundings that shall conduce to health of the family.

BEERMAKERS IN COUNCIL.

Some Facts From the Brewers Whose National Association has Been in Session at St. Paul.

Hundreds of wealthy brewers from every important point in the United States have held their annual meeting at St. Paul. Local option and prohibition were treated at length by reports concerning the existing laws in different states. The growth of the association has been enormous during the past year the production has been 22,460,335 barrels, of which 18,375,537 barrels were produced by members of the association, and 5,084,798 barrels were produced by brewers outside the association.

The report of the publication and vigilance committee was read by Gallus Thoman, manager of the literary bureau. The report shows how the sale of beer is not the cause of crime to such an extent as people believe. The following statistics are given:

Of 859 murders, which could be traced to their origin (the total number being 1,009), 266 were caused by love or lust and their offspring—jealousy and infidelity, or by domestic infelicity, with its multiform causes, to which latter incompatibility of temperament contributes the lion's share: 122 were caused by greed, the object of the murder being robbery; 196 by violent eruptions of rage and like passions, or by malice, revenge, etc. 34 by political or religious differences; 30 by insanity, including hallucinations of a religious nature, and 98 by liquor. The remainder (113) were traceable to complicated causes, with which intoxication had absolutely nothing to do.

Of 554 suicides (118 remaining unexplained as to causes) 53 were occasioned by love or lust; 47 by domestic infelicity; 81 by insanity; 56 by liquor, and 199 by other causes, principally destitution, despair, homesickness, and failures of all kinds. The greater portion of the unfortunates whom one must place in the latter categories are foreigners who emigrated from a land which afforded them no home, no earthly future worth living for, and who in the land of their hopes and longing find themselves face to face with starvation; even in the midst of superabundance.

Of 53 cases of Arson, but one being unexplained, 29 were attributed to greed of gain; 9 to malice; 3 to insanity; 1 each to domestic infelicity and political differences; 7 to other causes, and only two to liquor. Of 379 criminal assaults, 37 are traced to liquor.

The report concludes with a statement of the moneys required for the coming year.

Louis Schode, editor of the Washington Sentinel and attorney of the association, next presented his report. It related principally to the internal revenue and excise laws and the tariff measures now pending, but Mr. Schode was of the opinion that no tariff bill would be passed this season.

Prohibition National Convention.

At the prohibition National Convention in session at Indianapolis. Bishop Turner, of the African M. E. church, and now located in Georgia, was called to stand. He made an energetic address, eulogizing the past record of the Republican party, but declaring that, as it had stopped in its good work and was now bowing before king alcohol, it was time for all good men to come out of it. The prohibition party he said, was a creature of Providence, brought into existence to remove the only curse that stood in the way of a perfect civilization.

The woman's suffrage issue was decided by the committee on resolutions instructing its subcommittee to incorporate a plain uncompromising suffrage plank. The vote was 23 to 8. Any attempt to debate the matter in the convention will be cut off by the application of the previous question method.

St. John, the permanent chairman says. I would rather be elected president of this convention by the men and women before me than elected president of the United States by the rum power. We have everything to encourage us. Even to-day the old parties are beginning to give way. Recently the wires brought us news that one of the leaders of the oldest party in the nation, feeling that the republican Babylon was crumbling, had concluded not to be crushed in the fall. In fact, he had vacated the premises. Perhaps another message may flash over the wires from the White House, saying I surrender to the defenders of my country. I thank God that this is not a convention of Democrats or Republicans with air vile and vitiated with the fumes of rum, whisky and tobacco. It is a convention that knows no North nor South, but does know one country, one people, one flag, one destiny, a connection that is one in all things that shall tend to give greater protection our homes, greater fraternal relations to our people, a convention that will accomplish such a work that in future years our children will stand up and call us blessed.

A Murderer's Suicide.

At Republican City, Nebraska, Dan Ridge ended his life in a rather dramatic manner. On Friday the 25th inst., Daniel Willord, an old man, was the victim of a cold blooded murder at Ventor. All the evidence connected with the crime went to show that Willord had been murdered for his money. Ridge was known to have been in Ventor at the time and immediately after the murder disappeared. Sunday Ridge arrived at his home. He apparently knew Iowa officers were on his track for he immediately went to his house, taking with him a rifle, a brace of revolvers and plenty of ammunition. Scarcely had he closed the door of his home on himself than Iowa officers put in an appearance and a siege then commenced for no one was daring enough to go near the house. Early one forenoon a shot was heard coming from the house, followed by groans of a dying man. Some of the more daring then ventured to enter. The door was broken and Ridge was found lying on his face, a 32-calibre revolver grasped in his right hand. His body lay in a pool of blood. Upon turning him over a large bullet wound was found in his left breast just above the nipple. That part of his body was bare, so it was evident that the desperado, finding escape cut off, and preferring instant death to either hanging or starvation, had deliberately bared his left side, placed the weapon over his heart, and fired. He intended to sell his life dearly in case his capture was attempted by force, as he wore a belt around his body containing 50 rounds of ammunition. He had a bottle of strychnine in his pocket, intending to use it when his ammunition was expended.

The debate upon the fishery treaty in open session began in the senate. It is the announced purpose of the democrats to postpone the consideration of the treaty until next winter, but the republican policy is against this, and it is evident that all motions such as that proposed by Mr. Morgan as the representative of the democrats in the committee on foreign relations will fail. The republican policy is to discuss the fishery treaty until it shall be disposed of, and to permit no change or amendment to it whatever.

During the heavy wind storm in Western Pennsylvania, a passenger train on the Pittsburg & Western railroad, while running at a high rate of speed near Clarion was blown from the track into a ditch alongside. All of the passengers and trainmen were injured, some of them seriously. Miss Alda Rankin of Clarion was fatally injured.

Arrangements have been completed which have been under way quietly for several weeks for the erection and operating at Duluth, Minn., of what is believed will be the largest flour mill in the world, with a guranteed daily capacity of 6,000 barrels. The roller process is to be the style of manufacture.

About two hundred brewers of the United States are in session in National convention at St. Paul. The convention will be a love feast from beginning to end. The delegates, hailing, as they do, from all quarters of the country, together with a few representatives from the other side of the water, meet once a year for the purpose of promoting good fellowship, indulging in a mutual interchange of opinions on subjects of interest to the fraternity and taking a geneal and sweeping survey of the outlook both past and future, as well as keeping a sharp lookout upon the movements of their arch enemies, the Prohibitionists.

The Missouri river has began its ravages again, and has cut fifteen feet into the shore on the Nebraska side, directly opposite Sioux city. The cutting was so rapid that buildings could not be moved. If the cutting keeps up the same rate the entire town of Covington will be swept away in a few days. The bank there is ten and fifteen feet high and great masses become disengaged and fall into the rapid current every few minutes. Several years ago a good share of the original town site was engulfed and last summer a large tract was swallowed up.

Mollie Garfield has set the wedding day. It is June 14, at Mentor, Ohio, and her late father's private secretary, J. Stanley Brown, writes that he will commence life then. The ceremony will be a double one, as one of the Garfield boys will marry a Miss Maxon on the same date.

The Rome correspondence of the London News says: "The Irish clergy will shortly receive orders from the episcopacy to make every effort to remove the bad impression produced by the rescript. Its purely religious character will be emphasized and all political intention disclaimed.

At Murick's Ferry, near St. Charles, on the Missouri river, the Sheriff of St. Louis county and a posse of three deputies endeavoring to arrest a gang of river men and a battle ensued, in which Deputy Albert Ahlfeldt was fatally injured. Deputy John Monohan was seriously shot through the bowels and Deputy C. C. Carret was hit three times by bullets, but not dangerously wounded. Sheriff Allen became separated from the party and has not been heard of since. It is feared that he also has fallen a victim to the desperadoes. There appears to have been seven men who lay in ambush. The whole party is known and a posse is now in search of them.

A six-year-old son of B. Rogers of Lake City, Minn., got mad at Walter, son of John Montgomery, who is a year younger, and struck him several blows on the head with an iron rod, causing injuries that may result fatally. The victim is now in a critical condition.

MEMORIAL DAY.

The Soldiers of the Late War Remember Their Comrades Who Have Gone Before.

Once again the annual recurrence of Memorial day has called up to the minds of the people the memory of the brave men who gave their lives to preserve the nation.

The whole country, in the large cities in the towns, in the villages and even in the country church yard, honor was done to the brave soldiers over whose memory flowers were strewn. At St. Paul the demonstration was like that in other cities, and an extract from the oration of Col. C. D. Kerr will serve as a sample of the thousands that were delivered elsewhere. Col. Kerr said:

If indeed there be anything in past associations fit to affect the mind of man, we need not strive to subdue the emotions which press upon us here, for these men, whom you have met here to honor, purchased our present prosperity and paid for it with their blood, illustrating again and attesting the truth as old as the world, that only thus by sacrifice and fiery trial and sorrow, can either nations or individuals be purified and made fit to be prosperous and happy. Every noble crown is, on earth, and will forever be a crown of thorns. The man who has lived in this country for the last thirty years has attained an experience and reached a full stature of manhood compared with which the nine hundred years of Methusela's tame pastoral life were but as the fleeting existence of a child. For we live in thoughts, not years; in heartbeats, not in figures on a dial.

GAINED AN EMPTY PRIZE.

I can remember as though it were but yesterday where I was twenty-six years ago today. I think it was just about this time of the day on May 30, 1862, that I marched with my regiment over the abandoned works and into the deserted streets of Corinth. That was, indeed, a gloomy period in the history of the war. The campaign in the East had proved a total failure. Beauregard, through the imbecility of Halleck, had escaped from Corinth unmolested with his entire army, and with all his material and munitions of war. Gloom had settled like a pall upon the hearts of the people, and already the cry was reaching the army that the war against rebellion had proved a failure. Oh! weak of faith! Trembling in doubt and despair when indomitable will and fearless courage alone could save the nation. Where would you doubters have been to-day; on what a tempestuous sea of anarchy would you and all of us be, drifting now, if these and such as these, the living and the dead of the Grand Army, had shared in your doubts and partaken of your fears? Nothing that I can say or that this nation can do will ever express a tithe of the gratitude that should animate every patriotic heart for the men who fought and died to retrieve the fortunes that seemed then and for a year thereafter so near the lowest ebb of their receding tide.

THE REBELLION A LONG-CHERISHED SCHEME.

For years the rebel leaders had nursed the project of a separate nation, with slavery as its corner stone. They may have brought themselves to believe that their cause was just. But my friends, it makes all the difference whether we pursue a certain course because we believe it to be right, or judge it right because we pursue it. A pretext was the last thing such men were likely to want, and the election of Abraham Lincoln served their purpose. And now at lose the rebel leader stood upon his sunny Pisgah, looking back over savage deserts of doubt and disappointment and delay and forward to a Canaan of promised joy, which he had only the Jordan of secession to cross in order to possess. None but the hand that rules above could save the nation then. The government and all its resources were under the control of Southern sympathizers. Washington was full of rebels openly proclaiming their treason in the very halls of congress and the mansion of the chief executive. Washington was also full of Northern men, politicians mostly, who were crying God save the country, but the cry simply meant God save my place and my fortune. The prayer of the South in Washington was let me live upon the fruit of other men's industry, and the prayer of the Northern politician at the capital was let me fatten upon the plunder of the public. Fort Sumpter was attacked and civil war was upon us. Then uprose that mighty host in the North, not of politicians, not of seekers for place or plunder, but of the honest masses, the mainstay and support of every republic. To these masses belong the credit and the honor of that war's success.

THE WAR NOT A HOLIDAY EXCURSION.

It was no holiday excursion over summer seas as you well know. At last we thought the end drew near. But the South still has corn bread and roasting ears, there was still lead and gunpowder, and while these means of sustaining and destroying life remained it seemed as though the South was determined to prolong the struggle. The same unpartisan masses who had fought the battles of the Union, fought again at the polls, and in legislative halls the battle of reconstruction. The result is before you to-day.

THE LESSONS TAUGHT.

Now, what are the lessons all this teaches to us, to be taught in turn by us to our children on occasions such as this? Primarily, that this is a union, and not a confederacy merely. Second, that slavery, in whatsoever form it may rise its hydra head, has been banished from this land forevermore. Third, that liberty, our sacred heritage from the forefathers, is handed down again by us to our children, sanctified anew by our toil and treasure and blood; but, above all things, that the liberty thus transmitted is not lawlessness. It is not the liberty on the one hand to die by starvation, or on the other to run riot with unbridled license, but is founded on the rock of obedience to law and respect for government. That political liberty is a means, not an end, and a means valuable chiefly as the great safeguard of order, of property and morality. Fourth, it teaches the lesson that the safety of the country depends in the future, as in the past, not upon the professional politician or spoilsman, but upon the virtuous and intelligent mass of the people, and that the highest honor our children can attain, is to be classed with the latter as distinguished from the former. Teach your children, my comrades, to stand up openly for truth and all true men, and let this and this only be their creed and their party. In all human probability these, our comrades who died that such principles might live, are as much without successors as the martyrs of the church, but they are canonized in the hearts of all generations, and are yet living to all by the memory of what they did and were. Who dares say to-day that they died in vain? Why, then, do we meet here to strew flowers upon the graves of these dead heroes to-day? Not surely to shadow forth our grief and sorrow at their fate. Nay, not so. Flowers, from the day they were strewn in the triumphant pathway of our Savior to the day when they decorate these graves, have ever spoken the language of love and constancy and gratitude and joy. And they appropriately speak that language here.

SOON WILL BE THE LAST CAMP FIRE.

Why should we mourn these honored graves? Life at best is so short, so fleeting! The days and hours of it that we count so precious are flying over our heads like clouds on a windy day. See! While you are fastening to your breast that honored badge of the Grand Army it fades and grows dim. Every time we say good night at the camp fire, and every time we meet and part on Decoration day, are but preludes to that eternal separation we must shortly make. Shall I mourn then the fate of these, my comrades, who passed over only a little before, with the sweet assurance that they had died for their country and would be remembered with grateful hearts and with floral offerings of praise and love by generations yet unborn? Nay, verily! If the spirits of these patriotic men are looking down upon us to-day, as I believe they are, it is with no tinge of regret that they made the sacrifice they did to secure a nation's safety and enjoy these enduring tokens of a nation's gratitude. And so when you drop the forget-me-not and the rose and the violet on the honored graves of your comrades, you say, to the dead who lie there, Sleep on brave souls and not a murmur shall escape our lips that you rest so nobly in the dust you redeemed from rebellion. Certainly we should come here to-day with malice toward none and charity for all. Yet I will confess that when I recall the toils and trials of those four years of war, and see how they dotted this land all over with the graves of promising young men, and filled it with shattered constitutions and with maimed and crippled bodies, I cannot repress a feeling of bitterness toward the men who caused it all. So far as the civil leaders of the South at that time are concerned the feeling is there to stay. I cannot help it. It is my human nature—the clay as it came from the hands of the potter.

FOUR CONVENTIONS CALLED.

Farmers, Business Men, and Clergymen and Editors of Dakota to Meet at Huron, July 12.

The calls of the state board committee for representative conventions at Huron are all out, now, the last two, those for clergymen and farmers and business men, being given below.

FARMERS' AND BUSINESS MEN'S CONVENTION.

To the farmers and business men of Dakota:

The statehood committee have decided to hold a convention at Huron on Tuesday and Wednesday, July 10 and 11, and following this, have requested, on Thursday, July 12:

First, a farmers' and business men's convention; second, a clergymen's convention; third, a convention of lawyers; fourth, a convention of editors.

The undersigned farmers and business men of Dakota represent to their friends that there is little probability that the present congress will take favorable action on any measure for the division and admission of Dakota: and it is of the highest importance that the representatives of the producing and business interests of the territory should come together and consult as to what steps should be taken to protect themselves.

For grievances similar to those inflicted upon the long suffering people of Dakota, our fathers rebelled against the mother country.

What is the condition to-day in consequence of the denial of our rights?

We are practically denied the rights to trial by jury, guaranteed to us by the constitution, because the judical districts are so large that it is impossible for the judges to meet the requirements of justice.

Our laws are loose, unstable and conflicting in their provisions. Property is insecure, capital that would flow through the channels of trade and find investment within our borders is repelled, and the consequence is higher rates of interest.

We are denied the privilege of legislating for our own interests by the restrictive law of congress, prohibiting any but laws applicable to the entire territory. A city cannot even have its character amended, however faulty it may be, because that would be special legislation and is forbidden.

We have respectfully asked for admission, we have bowed the suppliant knee in humble petition that we might enjoy the rights of free men, and have been spurned and insulted.

We have endured for years "taxation without representation."

We are told that "unless we see the necessity of coming in as one state, and desist from the present policy of demanding division, we will be kept waiting another decade." Thus they ignore the will of the people as expressed at the polls.

These wrongs are seriously affecting all our business interests.

We therefore call upon every farmer, and every business man, having his own interests at heart, to lay aside all other duties, and attend this convention. "In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom." Let us consult together, as to the action proper to be taken in this crisis of Dakota's affairs.

It is opportune time, on the eve of a Presidential election.

By a proper plan of action we can make Dakota's cause a national issue, and then success is assured.

It is recommended that in each county, the business men and farmers should hold a convention, and elect as many delegates as will attend this convention at Huron.

It is further recommended: That the county convention shall pledge such sum as they are willing to contribute towards the expenses incurred by the statehood committee in furthering this cause, and that the delegation be instructed to pay such sum to the treasurer of said committee.

The usual reduction in fares on all railroads will be made to those attending this convention.

More than 300 signatures have been secured to this call.

CALL FOR A CONVENTION OF THE MINISTERS.

To the Ministers of the Churches of Dakota:

A general convention of the people of Dakota has been called to meet at Huron, July 10 and 11 next, to take into consideration the condition of Dakota, and recommend suitable and effective action thereon.

It is desired by those calling this convention, to consent with all the ministers of Dakota along with other bodies, and to lay before them such propositions as that convention may adopt, for their consideration and approval.

As we understand it, the matters to be brought before that convention concern vitality and immediately the highest interests of the people of Dakota.

Your counsel and judgment thereon is desired.

In critical times like this, when all that the people of Dakota have is at stake, it is natural and right that they should have whatever counsel and assistance we can rightfully give.

Therefore, as requested, we respectfully and earnestly invite all the ministers of churches in Dakota to meet in convention at Huron on Thursday, July 12, there to consider such matters pertaining to the public welfare as may be submitted to them by the people's convention.

We are informed that arrangements will be made for reduced fares and suitable accommodations.

Mrs. Rawson Shoots a Lawyer.

A tremendous sensation occurred in Judge Jamieson's court at Chicago. While the docket was being called, Mrs. Meckie L. Rawson was impatiently waiting for the divorce case of her husband, Banker Rawson, to be called. Col. H. C. Whitney, her husband's attorney, was sitting at a side table writing, when the court was suddenly startled to hear a pistol shot and Col. Whitney at once disappear under the table. The shot was followed by four more in rapid succession, and Mrs. Rawson was seen pursuing Whitney with a Smith & Wesson 38-calibre revolver. Mrs. Rawson succeeded in emptying her revolver at Whitney before she could be captured. Two of the bullets hit the lawyer, one taking effect below the groin and the other in the left leg. The wound near the right groin will probably be fatal. Judge Jamieson at once ordered Mrs. Rawson's arrest and was immediately taken to jail.

When the officers arrived at the jail with their prisoner, Mrs. Rawson had every appearance of being an insane woman, her eyes were red and bloodshot and she complained of being cold and faint. As soon as the search had been completed she became more composed. The jail officers refused to allow the reporters to see her.

It is understood that Mrs. Rawson has been in a desperate state of mind since the appellate court refused to grant her solicitors fees and said, in passing upon the merits of her pending divorce suit that the testimony was overwhelmingly against her. It is also understood that Mrs. Rawson claims that Lawyer Weitney trumped up all the testimony which went to show that she had been guilty of infidelity to her husband.

Sheridan Promoted.

The house passed the bill to promote Lieut. Gen. Sheridan to the rank of general. All the circumstances attending its passage in the house were most dramatic and interesting. And the conduct of the majority of the democratic members was so creditable that it almost forbids the suspicion that any question of making political capital entered into consideration. The excitement during the discussion was intense, scarcely two members remaining in their proper seats. McMillin, in the chair as speaker pro tem, rushed the bill through with only a feeble chorus of six or seven nays against it. Everything was in preparation for the speedy putting into effect of the bill. An enrolled copy was read for the signature of the speaker and president of the senate. At 1:45 a special messenger started for the White House with the bill which promptly received the president's approval, and before 2:30 the president had sent the Philip H. Sheridan's name for confirmation as general of the army. Senator Hawley, chairman of the committee on military affairs, telephoned to the White House to have a commission filled up. The senate, in a three-minute executive session, confirmed the nomination, and at 2:45 Philip H. Sheridan was commissioned general of the army of the United States. Senator Hawley in person carried the commission from the White House to Gen. Sheridan's residence and delivered it to Mrs. Sheridan. The bill enacts—That the grade of lieutenant general of the army is hereby discontinued and is merged in the grade of general of the army of the United States, which grade shall continue during the lifetime of the present lieutenant general, after which such grade shall cease, and the president of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the senate, a general of the army of the United States. That the pay allowances of the general be the same as heretofore allowed for that grade.

Consequently with Gen. Sheridan's death both grades will lapse. The whole incident was strongly suggestive of similar action when the dying Gen. Grant was pensioned on March 4, 1884.

As soon as the senate confirmed the nomination Senators Hawley and Manderson were rapidly driven to the White House. They were immediately received by the president, who handed Senator Hawley the parchment commission. A few minutes later they were in the drawing room of the Sheridan home. Senator Hawley handed Mrs. Sheridan the commission with a few appropriate words. Mrs. Sheridan told the senators that she thanked them and all others who had assisted in conferring this great honor on her husband.

"If anything can cure this will," she said. "In the morning he seemed greatly pleased when he learned of the efforts that were being made. I will show him the commission as soon as he wakes."

Gen. Sheridan woke a few minutes after 3. His wife told him the news, and the sick man seemed greatly pleased. "That's the best tonic I've had in a week," he said. Chief Clerk Tweedale, of the war department, was sent for and soon arrived. The members of the general's staff who were in the house were summoned to the sick room, and the formal oath was administered to the stricken soldier by Mr. Tweedale.

The Convention Hall.

All accounts agree that St. Louis is exerting herself as never before, and men of all parties are contributing liberally, the the intention being to make the occasion a great Mississippi valley festival rather than an exclusively Democratic gathering. The hall is the north nave of the great exposition building, cut off from the rest of the structure by temporary partitions; it stretches all the way from Thirteenth street to Fourteenth street, east and west, and is 300 feet long and 100 feet wide; but only 285x97 "in the clear," as the architect says. This vast space has been most skillfully utilized by the committee, and there will be seats for 10,000 persons.
